Achievement!

Forward—always forward—is the everyday working spirit of Warner Bros. Their successes of today are stepping stones to tomorrow. They recognize no stopping place. This is the spirit that has made them LEADERS.

Warner Bros. have purchased for their 1925-26 Pictures the screen rights to famous books and stories written by no less than FORTY of the foremost American and European authors —stories which have already proved their gripping human appeal by their wide popularity.

For the production of these pictures, Warner Bros. have secured the most impressive array of dramatic talent available.

Consider the tremendous appeal of the stars listed on the opposite page. They are players whose names guarantee perfect interpretation of any big role in any Warner Bros. picture. Their varied talents depict the whole range of human emotion and they stand today RECOGNIZED by the American public as the foremost entertainers of the generation.

In its production and technical talent the Warner genius for finding genius is again evident. It includes the internationally famous Ernst Lubitsch, Harry Beaumont, William Beaudine, Millard Webb, James Flood, Roy Del Ruth, Herman Raymaker, Alan Crosland, George Hill and Fred Newmeyer — all proven past masters at producing screen successes.

With this unsurpassed screen material and talent, there is no gamble about the coming FORTY WARNER PICTURES.

Wait for the FORTY new WARNER Classics. With these great productions, and those of other independents, you need be in no undue hurry to make your bookings. Be assured that the coming FORTY WARNER Pictures will be 40 box office winners. Wait for the winners!

FIGHTING THE FLAMES

Another Box office Winner from COLUMBIA

PREMIER OPENING at the CALIFORNIA.. THEATRE LOS ANGELES HERALDED AS GREAT PICTURE – BY CRITICS

CALIFORNIA

Those who are tired of the eternal triangle in moving pictures and satiated with sex problems on the screen will find an antidote in "Fighting the Flames" at the California this week.

It is a "thriller" of the standard "mellow-drama" variety with a wholesome hero who, of course, does all the things that a hero is required to do and adapts himself either to dress-suit or fireman's uniform with equal facility. Which fact, alone, proves that he is a hero. William Haines plays the role

Those of us who thrill responsively to the dash of the shrieking hose cart, engine truck, or ladder wagon down the street in answer to a three-alarm fire will get the same sort of an emotion at "Fighting the Flames" and, at the same time be assured of the required happy ending. It's a Columbia production including Dorothy Devore, David Torrance and Charlie Murray in the cast. Frankie Darrow does table bit of juvenile acting to reciprocate—if ever the d Columbia pictures should on fire, every fireman of comp ny would break all s records for courage, endur- d speed in recognition of the ibute which "Fighting the has paid to the bravery ger which is the fireman's ion.

L.A. TIMES

THRILL MELODRAMA WELL DONE

To the majority, there is a thrill in the clang of fire bells, an instinctive response which is rarely altogether outgrown. Cleverly playing on this human frailty, "Fighting the Flames" now showing at the California Theater, escapes being just "another picture" and achieves thrilling, though rather obviously arranged, melodrama.

Two boys do really excellent work in "Fighting the Flames." They are William Haines, prepossessing gilded youth, who eventually develops into a "real man" by becoming a fireman; and little Frankie Darrow, as appealing a tiny tough as one ever met on the street corner. If only someone would see that Frankie applied less make-up, for he is a talented child and should be unhampered by such artificiality.

Dorothy Devore as the girl makes all that is humanly possible of a small part, for she is a natural comedienne and her scenes with Frankie are particularly spontaneous. The cast includes David Torrence, William Welsh, Charles Murray and Sheldon Lewis, a convincingly brutal father.

But father is tired of "mornings after" so dooms the hapless youth to the cold, cold world. Frankie, as the dirty little gamin, volunteers to look out for him and eventually experiences the exquisite pleasure of viewing his idol in a fireman's uniform. And there is Dorothy, the little dressmaker on the top floor, a villainous father to complicate matters, and a near-tragic tenement fire, with a reassuring and blissfully domestic final fade-out.

The fire scenes are well done, from the thrill standpoint, and matters progress at a pleasingly rapid tempo.

"Haunted Honeymoon," a Hal Roach comedy with some new ideas on an old theme, news reels and a Judge's Crossword Puzzle

L.A. EXAMINER

FIRE PICTURE IS THRILLING

'Fighting the Flames,' at California, Is Deftly Assembled Collection of Stirring Scenes

No man, woman or child is ever immune to the fire wagon germ. There is something about the clang of the alarm, the rush of the heavy vehicles through busy streets, the thought of impending disaster that makes all persons want to follow along and see the show through.

Perhaps that's the reason why there are so many fire scenes in pictures. We can get all the thrills, have a comfortable seat with an unobstructed view, yet partake of none of the major and minor disasters attendant.

"Fighting the Flames" at the California is that sort of picture, purely and simply.

DOROTHY DEVORE

Obviously, in a film of this nature, repetitions would creep in, but they have been held to a minimum. There is, too, the expected similarity of scenes.

Little Frankie Darrow, a precocious youngster, who frequently steals a picture from his elders, is up to his old tricks in this one.

COLUMBIA PICTURES 1600 BROADWAY

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

"Said and Unsaid"

SOME two hundred film men gather in a room of the Hotel Astor, New York, to hear Sam Katz, essentially a Middle Western theater owner, talk to members of the Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce, primarily concerned with problems local to the New York exchange zone.

The things said may be summed up briefly, but nevertheless completely.

From Sam Katz: "There is no successful theater policy—whether it be the operation of a single theater or the expansion of a group—that is not based on efficiency in management and quality in offerings to the public. Quality product cannot be maintained if the creators of quality are not given their full reward."

From Nathan Burkan: "The theater owners of New York are suffering under unjust and intolerable conditions. If the 'master minds' of the industry do not remedy this situation then three thousand independent exhibitors of the country will do so. Milwaukee will see the gathering of the minute men."

From Sydney Cohen: "The convention at Milwaukee will go down in picture history as an event comparable with the signing of the Declaration of Independence."

That about sums it up. There was the incidental suggestion that Mr. Katz could present Mr. Watts, of Springfield, Ill., with the theater he is now building there. But, as we understand it, Mr. Katz later made it clear that the theater is not his to give. So, pending further details, that can be temporarily omitted from the record.

NOW we attempt the more difficult task: The listing of things UNSAID. We make no claim to omniscience, but suppose we give rein to imagination.

First of all, the condition that is worrying the principal members of the T. O. C. C. is not one that Sam Katz, as an exhibitor, can in any way remedy. And it was very plainly stated that Sam Katz was present as an exhibitor. Or, put it this way:

"What we members of the T. O. C. C. want to know, Mr. Katz, is how the devil can we meet the overmastering buying power and financial strength of the Keith and Loew circuits?"

That was left unsaid. Very likely, had it been spoken, it would also have been left unanswered.

Then, from the standpoint of the meeting as an opportunity to grill Sam Katz, someone might have said that in his home stamping ground independent distributors and exchange men are doing a lot more worrying than independent exhibitors.

But had that been said, Mr. Katz might have gone on to remark that he had heard it rumored that in the T. O. C. C. bailiwick there were zone circuit conditions causing independent distributors and exchanges just as much worry. With the parties to blame very likely listing themselves "independent exhibitors."

So there you have them, the things said, and things unsaid. For what purpose have we listed them? Merely because it is about time that someone emphatically placed this thought on the record:

"None of this industry's problems are going to be solved in open meeting, around-the-table sessions until we learn that it is necessary to leave more words unspoken, and give more thoughts expression.

"If our carcasses can't stand that treatment, let's cut out the open meetings. And a good many of the closed ones."

Which brings us to the subject of conventions.

Neither Milwaukee nor any other convention city is going to see the signing of an industrial Magna Charta so long as we find it so simple to eat up time with words and so difficult to talk in the open and follow talk with ACTION.

We don't like to say that. There is the certainty that someone, somewhere, will think that we are trying to steal the copy for the Declaration of Independence before it can reach the linotyper. We haven't the slightest objection to eating our words if Milwaukee proves them unnecessary.

Coming and Going

Major H. C. S. Thomson, head of F. B. O., left for Hollywood on April 15. He will be away for several weeks.

C. Lang Cobb, general sales manager for Sering D. Wilson and Company, Inc., is in Boston completing arrangements for the opening of the New England offices for that organization.

Oscar S. Oldknow, president of the Southern States Film Co., of Atlanta, Ga., William D. Shapiro, of the Franklin Film Co., of Boston, and U. G. Underwood, of the Specialty Film Co., of Dallas, Texas, were visitors in New York recently during a conference at the office of Warner Bros.

Sering D. Wilson, President of the organization bearing his name, is sailing for England and the Continent the latter part of the month in connection with matters having to do with the distribution of product abroad.

Sam Katz of Chicago has been spending the past few weeks in New York.

Colleen Moore sails on May 2 for a vacation of three months in Europe.

William Fox returned to New York from the Coast this week.

Louis B. Mayer and Jackie Coogan were arrivals in Manhattan a few days ago.

A number of Paramount executives left New York this week for the Coast to attend the organization's convention being held there.

Hiram Abrams is in New York from the West.

Samuel Goldwyn, producer, expects to leave for California immediately after his marriage to Frances Howard, Paramount actress, scheduled to take place in the near future.

Pat Dowling is returning to New York from France.

M. L. Finkelstein of Minneapolis was in New York this week.

Carl Laemmle is back in New York from the West.

Exhibitor Must Make Good on Film Theft

The Albany Film Board of Trade rendered a decision last week to the effect that exhibitors will be held responsible and called upon to reimburse exchanges for film stolen while in their possession. The decision came as the result of a considerable number of film thefts in Albany, Schenectady, Cohoes and other nearby places during the past three or four months, and which reached rather alarming proportions.

Several films were stolen from the Colonial Theatre in Albany, N. Y., of which George Roberts is manager. The Pathe exchange, owning these films, called upon Mr. Roberts to pay for the same. He demurred and the case was carried before the Film Board of Trade which, after due consideration, declared that Mr. Roberts and the theatre was responsible for the film and must pay for the same.

New Fox Lineup Creates Hubbub

West Baden, Ind.—The indefatigable Jimmie Grainger could do his spell-binding in silence at the annual First National gathering here today, for he carried under his arm a loudly talking package in the shape of an advance proof of the big Fox announcement of product for the coming season. To say that the announcement created a hubbub of talk is putting it mildly. It is a whale in size, a riot of color and a corking bit of advertising display.

But most important of all to the groups of exhibitors that gathered to look over Jimmie Grainger's shoulder was the revelation of the amazing number of big specials that Fox will sponsor next year, and the surprising proportion of these already completed and ready for the market. When the bell rings, the evidence of the untiring work that William Fox and his associates have been putting in for months past and of the determination he has to be out in front next year, is there on every page of the announcement. Wait until you see it.

Finkelstein & Ruben Get Graham's 3 St. Paul Theatres

Three more houses were added to the rapidly growing chain of Finkelstein & Ruben theatres here this week when the Twin City theatrical concern acquired the three Graham theatres in St. Paul.

Through the deal "F-R" takes over the Garden, St. Claire and Venus Theatres, three of the best suburban theatres in St. Paul. They are also negotiating for the Radio and Palace, two other St. Paul theatres.

Sale of the three houses marks the retirement of C. L. Graham from the exhibitors' circles in St. Paul. With E. U. Carter, Graham was interested in the St. Claire Theatre. It is said that "F and R" also seeks to buy the Forest and De uxe, two St. Paul theatres operated by Carter.

Another report of a theatre deal involving the Finkelstein & Ruben interests came from Grand Forks, N. D., where the firm is negotiating for the purchase of the Grand Theatre from A. J. and M. J. Kavanaugh.

Seventy F. P. L. Heads Leave for Coast

Nearly seventy executive members of Paramount's international convention of the department of distribution left early this week for Los Angeles where the final sessions of the convention will be held at the Hotel Ambassador under the general direction of Sidney R. Kent.

The special train which will carry the convention members from Chicago to Los Angeles will pick up the Paramount middle west sales forces at Kansas City, bringing them to Los Angeles, where they will convene together with the western sales forces.

Fox Sales Convention Opens in N. Y. Soon

The twelfth annual sales convention of the Fox Film Corporation will be held at the New York Studio during the week starting Monday, April 27, when the program for 1925-26 will be announced. This gathering will afford James R. Grainger, general sales manager, his first opportunity to meet the large sales force.

About twenty-five foreign representatives are now en route for New York.

GRAHAM ON DIRECTORS' BOARD

At the organization meeting of the Board of Directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation held on April 13, 1925, all officers were re-elected.

John Cecil Graham, the company's general foreign representative at London, has been elected a director to fill a vacany on the Board.

Incorporations

While the capitalization of companies incorporating in the motion picture business in New York during the past week did not show as high an average as in weeks past, there was plenty of activity in the industry, with nine companies entering various branches of the business and receiving charters from the secretary of state. These companies were International Playhouse, Inc., capitalized at $50,000, with B. S. Herkimer, I. Kraft, New York; A. V. Nyholm, Brooklyn. Parnas Court Amusement Corporation, $5,000, S. F. Scotto, Joseph and A. N. Parascandalo, Brooklyn. Weinsoff Amusement Corporation, $5,000, Borach Kessler, Jacob Weinsoff, B. Ettinger, Brooklyn. The First Nights, Inc., $10,000, Rosen Rosenblum, C. F. Collins, S. R. Golding, New York City. Ferri Movie Company, Inc., $5,000, Attilio and Romio Taliaferri, Mac Ecker, New York. The Grand Chrystie Corporation, $5,000, Nathan Schulman, J. Rovenger, Samuel Goldstein, New York. The Congress Film Corporation, Alex Smith, Jr., Edward White, Joseph Clifford, New York; and the Trendwell Productions, Inc., with S. Trendwell, W. O. McGeehan and J. Murry, of New York, these two companies not specifying the amount of capitalization. A magazine publishing company under the name of The Motion Picture Today was also incorporated, capitalized at $50,000, with Merritt Crawford, H. G. Kosch and A. E. James of New York.

Claude Cady Surrenders Lansing Interests to W. S. Butterfield

ONE of the most important deals of the theatrical season in Michigan was effected last week when the W. S. Butterfield Theatrical Enterprises, operating a string of motion picture theatres in state cities, took over several ventures from the original owners.

The biggest deal occurred in Lansing where Claude Cady, former president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, retired from the exhibiting field through the sale of his two Lansing houses, the Gladmer and the Capitol, to Butterfield. The Butterfield interests will take possession of the two houses on April 25, adding them to their present Lansing theatres, the Strand and the Colonial.

Woman Exhibitor Quits

Another deal of unusual interest was consummated at Ypsilanti, where Mrs. Florence Signor, the only remaining woman theatre manager in Michigan, relinquished her hold on the Martha Washington to the Butterfield interests. The Martha Washington has been operated in Ypsilanti, a college city, by Mrs. Signor for the past 10 years. Mrs. Signor intends to enter the real estate business.

The Butterfield interests announce that no radical changes are contemplated in the policies of any of the theatres taken over. The Cady theatres in Lansing have been playing a combination policy of motion pictures and vaudeville and this will continue in the future, the statement reads.

Coincident with these deals, it is announced that the Butterfield interests have obtained a site at Owosso, and intend to erect a new theatre there within the next few months.

Go-to-Theatre-Week Celebrated by All Buffalo Theatres

The value of the screen and stage as instruments of uplift and education in the modern scheme of life, as well as their worth as agencies of amusement and diversion, was stressed during "Go-to-Theatre-Week," celebrated by the theatres of Buffalo, April 19 to 25. Special programs were put on by every house in an effort to obtain record attendance.

"Just as the Lenten season is one of deep devotion and abstinence from wordly things, so it is our purpose to make the after Easter period one of general rejoicing," said Al Beckerich, manager of Loew's State and president of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' association in announcing the idea to the Buffalo public. "We believe we can find no more fitting way to promote merriment and joy than to ask everyone to help by participation in 'Go-to-Theatre-Week."

In announcing "Go-to-Theatre-Week," some 40 theatres of the city joined in placing a solid page ad in each of the Buffalo newspapers, one paper getting it Friday, another, Saturday, another, Sunday and so on until Tuesday when every paper had published the ad. The papers also carried special stories and Mayor Frank X. Schwab was prevailed upon to issue a suitable proclamation.

A. VICTOR SMITH RECOVERING

A. Victor Smith, of Vitagraph, has almost entirely recovered from a serious illness. Two weeks ago he was stricken with appendicitis and the next day underwent an operation at the Flatbush Sanitarium, on Cortelyou Road, Brooklyn. The operation was performed by Dr. H. Kalvin and the improvement in his condition has been constant.

Plan Free Shows In Montreal, Can.

"Free Moving Pictures" is the latest ambition of the authorities in the City of Montreal, Canada. The free shows are to be staged in various local moving picture theatres in Montreal every Saturday morning during the warm weather, it is proposed, and partial arrangements have already been made for the feature.

On April 15, the police officials of Montreal and suburban corporations gathered for a private screening of several pictures that are to be presented under the direct auspices of the civic executives, one of these being a recent release, "Broken Laws," starring Mrs. Wallace Reid. It is announced that pictures of this type are to be screened publicly and without cost to patrons in the cause of public safety, carefulness with fire, property conservation and other factors. One organization behind the new venture is the Province of Quebec Safety League, which was represented at the recent private showing of A. Gaboury, secretary.

Fitzpatrick-McElroy Acquires Big Sites; Schoenstadt Ready

WORK is to start within six week on the much talked of $3,500,000 hotel and theatre at the southeast corner of Hdye Park boulevard and Blackstone avenue, Chicago, by H. Schoenstadt & Sons. It was stated by the owners that the zoning difficulties have been ironed out and that the project will be completed by September, 1926. The theatre will be called "The Piccadilly," and will have its main entrance on the boulevard and seat 3,500. The hotel will be twelve stories and front on Blackstone.

The Fitzpatrick-McElroy Company theatre circuit, which was recently reincorporated, has bought several of the best corners in West Englewood district, Chicago, at an estimated value of $2,000,000. The transfer of the properties has been recorded at the county recorder's office. The properties taken over were as follows:

The northwest corner 63rd and Western avenue, valued at $375,000; the southwest corner of 62nd place and Kedzie avenue, valued at $240,000; the northwest corner of 63rd and Kedzie avenue, valued at $400,000, on which is located the Fisher building; the southwest corner of 63rd and Western avenue, valued at $450,000, on which is the Bain building; the southeast corner of 59th and Kedzie avenue, known as the Gage building, valued at $300,000.

McElroy when asked about the purchases said that a statement would be issued next week of interest to the public.

BOBBY VERNON LUNCHEON

Bobby Vernon, Educational-Christie comedy star, was the guest at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on April 15 which was largely attended by motion picture folk. He is in New York with Al Christie, Mrs. Vernon and Vera Steadman, one of the Christie female stars.

Bobby's after-lunch talk, inspired by Gordon S. White, publicity and advertising director of Educational, had to do with the star's impressions of the metropolis, this being his first visit. The luncheon had none of the marks of formality—Al Christie's good-humored joking obviating that—and was more in the nature of a pleasant get-together with two of Educational's best comedy bets. Christie, obliged to make a speech, told of his early days in the industry, how a flip of the coin decided his brother and himself in favor of California instead of Florida and how he used to make wild west pictures with Staten Island scenery.

Laud Movie Season

The announcement by Will Hays that the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., would sponsor a nation-wide celebration of the opening of Greater Movie Season in August, has met with much response already from exhibitors throughout the country. The Hays office announces that it is in receipt of many telegrams and letters lauding the plan, among them being messages from Walter Hays, chairman of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y.; P. R. Biechele, head of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas and Missouri; M E. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; David Cohen, Binghampton, N. Y.

CANADA READY TO LIGHTEN TAX

Premier John Bracken of the Manitoba Provincial Legislature announced officially a few days ago that he was not prepared to abolish the Provincial Amusement Tax but that he was prepared to make some concessions. The exhibitors of Manitoba, represented by the Manitoba Moving Picture Exhibitors Association, made the plea.

State Rights Sales

The Celebrated Players Film Co. of Milwaukee, Wis., has bought the entire production program of Columbia Pictures Corporation for 1925-26 for the state of Wisconsin.

C. B. C. announces that it has sold the rights to its special short subject, Screen Snapshots to Henri Ellman of the newly organized Capitol Film Exchange Inc., of Chicago, Ill.

Milton Simon, special representative of the Rayart Sales organization closed last week for the Rayart serials "Battling Brewster" and "Secret Service Sanders" for Washington, D. C. territory with the Liberty Film Exchanges (Flax Bros.) of Washington. The Rayart offices also announce the sale of the "Secret Service Sanders" serial for the Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas territory to Independent Film Service Company of Dallas, Texas.

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, announces that his company has closed with the Standard Film Service Co. of Cleveland for the entire production program for 1925-26. This contract covers eighteen pictures of which there are six Columbias, six Perfections and six Waldorfs. The territory covered is included in the states of Ohio, Kentucky, West Virginia, Michigan and Western Pennsylvania.

C. B. C. Film Sales Corp. has sold the rights to "Justice of the Far North" for Great Britain and Continental Europe to Unity Film Co. of Wardour Street, London, England. Screen Snapshots is a one reel special which takes the public to call on the many famous film stars at their homes, at play and in the studio.

C. B. C. Film Sales Corp. also announces that it has sold the rights to its single reel short subject "Screen Snapshots" to the Independent Films Inc. of Boston and New Haven. The territory covered in this deal comprises all of the New England States. It has also sold the same subject to De Luxe Films Inc. of Philadelphia, Pa., for the territory included in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

Ivan Players, Inc., releasing the first of the four Ivan Emerald Productions, "Lying Wives," has sold it for the New England States to the Golden Distributing Corporation, Boston, Mass. Exhibitors Alliance of New Zealand closed for New Zealand, Max Gluckman closed for Argentina, Paraguay, Uruguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Brazil. The Australasian Film Company bought the rights for Australia and the Straits Settlements.

T. O. C. C. Nearing Bunker Hill in Fight for First Run Product

By TOM WALLER

INSTEAD of appealing to the Federal Trade Commission, or even Congress, as Attorney Nathan Burkan at a recent rally said it would be within their province to do, the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, according to latest indications, seems to be paving the way to meet the much agitated first run situation in New York by pitting product against product. In other words, drop that for which they have been pleading—first run product of the so-called "Big Three"—and solidify themselves under guarantees for first run film with as many of the independent national producers and distributors who will vouch these guarantees.

At the present writing no one will talk for publication on such a movement. But it is a known fact that officials from Warner Brothers, Fox and Universal were in the T. O. C. C. gathering which honored Sam Katz last week in Manhattan when the New York independent exhibitor status was precisely presented. It is also local knowledge that especially during the past few weeks various independent national producers and distributors have been made "tentative overtures," to use an expression coming from the Warner office when information on this subject was being sought by Moving Picture World.

That Warners, Fox and Universal are generally interested and may be carefully considering such a plan, as now might be credited to the T. O. C. C., is apparent, even though statements to that effect are not immediately forthcoming from their publicity departments. Whether they would agree to specify the delivery of any amount of season's product for such purpose remains to be seen. Some sources say that deals with these three are about to be closed under which agreement the petitioners would receive about forty pictures each from Fox and Warners and thirty-six Jewels from Universal.

With these pictures and subsequent tie-ups the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, representing the bulk of New York City's independent exhibitors, would hope to supplant the powers which they have been beseeching and combating for years.

That this franchise movement may eventually involve independent showmen throughout the entire nation, might be interpreted from a statement released this week from M. P. T. O. A. headquarters. The organization's special committee, according to this report "has been meeting with all of the independent national producers, distributors and state right organizations." One particularly analogous paragraph reads:

"It is purposed to develop a Trade and Commerce Bureau in order that the mutuality of interests of all independents in the industry—producers, distributors and theatre owners, may be furthered and advanced and enabled to function along lines that will bring the greatest protection to all."

Chairman Charles O'Reilly when seen by Moving Picture World flatly refused to be interviewed. He refused to affirm or deny certain reports concerning the movement, except to say that they did not come from T. O. C. C. headquarters. That organization, he said, looked upon its attorney, Burkan, as the mouthpiece on such political matters. O'Reilly did concede that certain of the reports did have "some meat in them" and that others did not. He was just as emphatic in his refusal to indicate officially where the "meat" was as he was to be interviewed.

He stated that any information officially disclosed by his organization at this time might only lead to the unraveling of the spool which Burkan and others are now so carefully winding.

Reminded of his address recently delivered in New York at a session of the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers, O'Reilly stated to this publication that whatever he said then was true now. This brought the conversation back to the present issue of which he conceded that members of his organization were ready to build theatres in New York upon the assurance that they would obtain first run product.

Several efforts were made just before this issue went to press to reach Attorney Burkan. These were as futile as some attempts in the past when that lawyer was said by his office to have been in court.

Worcester Labor Union Seeks Film Representation

The Central Labor Union of Worcester, Mass., through its secretary, Thomas F. Conroy, will apply for representation on the Worcester Board of Motion Picture Review, local censoring body. The opinion has been expressed for the union that wrong impressions of organized labor are gained by the general public from pictures of riots and strikes and it is the intention to endeavor to counteract such influence.

Representing nearly 8,000 residents of Worcester, the union members feel that their organization is entitled to have an opportunity to pass judgment on what is and what is not fitting for the screen.

Optimism Characterizes Annual Sales Meeting of Metro-Goldwyn

WITH executives in attendance from every part of the United States and Canada, Metro-Goldwyn held its annual Sales Convention at the Hotel McAlpin in New York this week.

The convention, that was opened Monday morning by Marcus Loew, president of Metro-Goldwyn, lasted four days, concluding with a dinner Thursday evening at Janssen's Hofbrau. Louis B. Mayer, vice-president, in charge of production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, came East to represent the producing organization, accompanied by Pete Smith, newly appointed director of publicity at the studios.

Extreme optimism and enthusiasm, based on the records broken by Metro-Goldwyn pictures in theatres throughout the country during the past season, characterized this year's conference, the first since the merger of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer interests one year ago.

Plans for the 1925-26 season formed the chief subject of discussion, together with means of serving exhibitors to the greatest extent possible through increased co-operation. The reports of district managers and branch managers were to the effect that in the past year Metro-Goldwyn has built up the good will of exhibitors, through a consistent output of box-office successes, that indicates the coming season will find Metro-Goldwyn at the top of the field.

Louis B. Mayer discussed the "Quality 52" that he will produce, stressing the relationship between the studio and the man in the field. He stated that the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios the coming season will be guided by the showings made by the company's pictures the past year.

Mr. Mayer told of the present production activity at the studios, which is the greatest in the history of the organization, and spoke in particular of "Ben Hur."

B. S. Moss' Colony, New York, Has Unique Air-Cooling Unit

NOW that the summer is near, B. S. Moss is to have an opportunity of demonstrating the newly devised cooling and fresh air plant that he has had placed in his new Colony Theatre, on Broadway and 53rd Street, New York City. This system will, it is promised, accomplish several important objects. Primarily it will keep cool the air of the Colony, but above all it will provide air from the outside that is clean and pure, and furthermore change this air every few minutes.

To achieve this object there is what might be called an air-washing room. Fresh air is drawn from the outside, and passes through the washing room, in which there is a mist-like spray of iced water, emanating from thousands of discharge orifies, with each spray nozzle atomizing about two gallons of water a minute. Once the outside air has passed through this spray in the air-washing chamber, it is thoroughly cleansed of all dust and impurities.

This moist air is now forced into another chamber where, by a scientific device, all the entrained water or moisture is removed, as well as the impurities in the air which might have been taken in from the outside. This air, now ready to be passed into the theatre proper, should be as refreshing and invigorating as mountain ozone. Under the Colony's auditorium there is a thoroughly clean air chamber; and into this larger space, the clean, cool air is now forced. The air gains entrance to the theatre through aisle hoods, which are so placed as to eliminate all possibilities of blasts or drafts. While the auditorium is filled with clean and cool air, it is not allowed to stay there to become in any sense contaminated. As fast as this clean air is driven into the theatre from below, it is being drawn off by two huge typhoon exhaust fans, located in the ceiling.

These fans are capable of exhausting 124,000 cubic feet of air per minute, and when used in connection with the enormous fresh air intake blower, are capable of making sixteen complete changes of air, in the auditorium, within an hour.

Carr Dies In Buffalo

Buffalo and western New York theatre men were shocked to learn of the sudden death in Buffalo on Saturday, April 18 of Henry J. Carr, manager of Shea's Court street theatre in that city. Mr. Carr was widely known in theatre circles. Born in Lewiston, N. Y., 50 years ago, Mr. Carr came to Buffalo during his youth and obtained an appointment to the Postal Service and for several years was in charge of the old Cold Spring post office. In 1905 he was tendered the management of the Shea Court Street Theatre by his brother-in-law Michael Shea. He accepted the position and upon the incorporation of Mr. Shea's Buffalo amusement interests some years ago, he was elected to the vice presidency.

Mr. Carr is survived by his widow, formerly Miss Millicent Martin of Buffalo, three sisters, Mrs. Michael Shea, Mrs. Edward Carney and Miss Elizabeth Carr, and two brothers, John, manager of Shea's North Park Theatre, and Edward. The funeral was held Tuesday morning, April 21. Elaborate floral pieces were sent by the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association, Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of N. Y., and exhibitors and theatre men from nearby towns.

GEORGE W. WEEKS

Kent Names Weeks General Manager of Distribution

Coming as a climax at the end of the first day's session of the Paramount international sales convention at the Hotel Roosevelt, New York, on April 16 was the announcement by Sidney R. Kent that George W. Weeks has been appointed general manager of the distribution department.

Mr. Weeks began his career handling advertising campaigns, and at one time was associated with the tunnel project under the Detroit River, connecting Detroit and Windsor. About seventeen years ago he entered the picture business as supervisor of five Kunsky theatres. He was salesman for the old General Film Company, and later held the Universal franchise for Michigan. Then he held the Metro franchise for the state and was a member of its board of directors.

He joined Famous Players as a salesman in Detroit, was promoted to manager of the St. Louis branch and was then made general manager of the Famous Players Canadian interests. He opened all the Famous Players exchanges in Canada. He left four years ago to come to the home office as divisional sales manager.

First National's Convention Returns

Addition of Sol Lesser to the executive committee and the election of R. A. Rowland to succeed Harry Schwalbe on the same committee, practically constituted the definite actions of the First National Convention. Sam Spring has been confirmed in the post succeeding Harry Schwalbe and J. L. Perkins named legal advisor.

The rumor that was first heard in New York that the Gordon New England theatres have come under the control of Famous-Players is again alive together with whispers that a hot session Thursday evening will bring the rumors out into the air.—R. E. W.

M. P. T. O. K. M. Program Complete for Kansas City Meet

All advance arrangements to the last minute detail for the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri convention, April 27-28, Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, have been completed. The program has been outlined and invitations issued. From all indications the meeting will overshadow any previous convention ever held in the Missouri-Kansas territory.

Invitations have been sent to Will Hays, who was requested to send a representative in case he was unable to come; Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, pastor of the First Christian Church, Kansas City; Governor Ben S. Paulen of Kansas, Governor Sam A. Baker of Missouri, and Mrs. Henry N. Ess of a Kansas City, president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs. Several surprise parties have been arranged in conjunction with the banquet. Elaborate programs also are to be printed.

Such lines as, "There isn't much to you if it takes dynamite to wake you up," "No man in this world ever rightfully gets more than he gives," and "No one can cheat you out of ultimate success but yourself," are used at the top of bulletins mailed to exhibitors, urging their attendance at the convention.

These are the subjects which will be discussed: Report on revised uniform contract. Concrete facts and figures on the music tax. Review of recent legislative activities. Report on joint board of arbitration. The carnival and tent show situation. School, church, park and non-theatrical opposition. Producer owned and controlled theatre situation. Road showing of feature productions.

A Kansas City Club Woman Pens Against Censorship

The Citizens' League Bulletin, publication of the Citizens' League of Kansas City, an organization sponsoring better civic conditions, devotes all of its front page and three-fourths of the second page to an article titled, "Official Censorship of Motion Pictures Opposed," which was written by Mrs. E. C. Walton, chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the Women's City Club of Kansas City. Excerpts from the article:

"We have never believed in political censorship, because the main qualifications for this post, at best, seem to be some useful preelection service, which really has little to do with judging pictures. Besides, how can three, or even five people select with accuracy and intelligence what is best for the entire population of a great state?

"....We have received splendid co-operation from the motion picture men of Kansas City in our work for better pictures. I am sure they will forgive me if I mention particularly A. H. Cole of Paramount, whose assistance has been invaluable."

UNITED'S NEW TREASURER

At a meeting of the board of directors of the United Artists Corporation held this week Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president, was elected treasurer, to assume the duties of Maurice G. Cleary, who recently resigned.

Constructive Address by Hays to 1,000 Philadelphia Women

ABOUT one thousand women, at the Womens City Club of Philadelphia on April 20 listened to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers' and Distributors of America, talk on "What's Right With the Movies?"

"Everything will be entirely right," he said, "if you and others like you will give us your understanding, your appreciation for what has been done, your sympathy with our problems and your broadminded and constructive advice and co-operation."

Of especial interest to exhibitors was a declaration made by Hays as to motion pictures in schools and in churches. He told the women of efforts which are being made to bring about a supply of strictly pedagogical pictures for use in the class rooms of schools; and he told also of a survey which is being made by an educational foundation of religious films for possible use in churches. Then he said:

"It must be remembered, however, that the pedagogic picture and only the pedagogic picture belongs in the schools. The strictly religious picture and only the strictly religious picture belongs in the churches. What we call the entertainment picture does not belong and in my opinion should not be shown in either church or school.

"To show entertainment pictures—the sort we see in the motion picture theatre—either free or at a low price or at whatever price, in school or church, is to set up an altogether unfair, unjust and uneconomic competition to the theatre owner whose livelihood comes from the showing of pictures, who has a large investment in his property, his building, his music and his film rentals, and who pays extra-high taxes, insurance rates and the like from all of which the churches and schools are free. Remember he is engaged in an essential business."

Speaking of the present state of the industry Hays said: "Never have the standards of artistry and wholesomeness in motion pictures been so high as they are right now. Never has the business of making, circulating and exhibiting motion pictures been on so firm and substantial a basis as it is at this moment. Never have the spoken and written comments about motion pictures been so favorable or so helpful as they are at present.

"The producers and exhibitors are only too eager to provide the best quality of pictures, if they will be properly patronized. It is a sad fact that some of the most splendid and artistic motion pictures ever made have failed of commercial success because of the lack of patronage of the very type of men and women that constantly complain about 'bad pictures.'"

Hays told his audience of the many constructive things done for the industry and the public by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America since its organization in 1922. One thing he dwelt upon was the establishment of a Department of Public Relations and the policy of the Open Door, through which the public might enter and bring its constructive advice and suggestions.

In relation to the so-called problem of the child and the movies Mr. Hays declared that pictures are not now and never will be intended especially for twelve-year-olds. Then he told his hearers of the "Saturday Morning Movies" which his Department of Public Relations has arranged in co-operation with exhibitors for showing in all the key cities and many other places this summer.

Some of the other things Mr. Hays touched upon were the establishment of schools for child actors in the studios at Hollywood; and the raising of a fund of $150,000 for a new building for the Hollywood Studio Club for girls.

F. P.-L. Establishes Savings Banks for All Its Employees

At the closing session of the international convention of the Paramount distribution department, held last week at the Hotel Roosevelt, Sidney R. Kent, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, surprised the entire gathering by announcing an employees' savings and bonus plan which the corporation has had in mind for some time. Briefly, the plan provided that any employee may deposit with the company a weekly amount not to exceed 20 per cent of his or her salary, the company will add 25 per cent of the amount so deposited and will pay six per cent interest, compounded semi-annually. The money will be left in trust for a five-year term.

Speaking of the plan, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, said: "The directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in recognition of the faithful and efficient service of its employees, announce this plan to enable employees of the corporation and its subsidiary corporations to participate in the profits of the corporation."

The trustees appointed by the Board of Directors are: Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Elek John Ludvigh, Sidney R. Kent, Eugene J. Zukor and Robert C. Montgomery.

HARRY LEVY DIES IN PITTSBURGH

Harry Levy, for the past year manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the Universal exchanges and in his twenty-ninth year, died at the Montefiore Hospital, in that city, on April 16, after a week's illness of septic-pneumonia. The remains were taken to New York, and burial took place in that city on April 19. The parents, wife and two sons survive.

Close Call

The safe, containing nearly $1,000, had just been filled with a charge of high explosives. The burglars had beat a hasty retreat to await the outcome of the blast. And just then Dawn N. Thompson, manager of the Harper Theatre, an outskirt house in Detroit, entered the room, according to our Detroit correspondent. Thompson's arrival was timely, since he averted the explosion, disappointed the bandits and saved the thousand.

F.B.O.'s Division Managers Convene in N.Y.C. Soon

Harry M. Berman, general sales manager of Film Booking Offices, announces that a meeting of the division managers of the company will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York, on April 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30, for the discussion of sales and advertising policies covering F. B. O.'s 1925-26 fall and winter program.

Berman will preside at the five-day meeting. Among the F. B. O. executives and officials who will attend the meeting are: Colvin W. Brown, of the executive committee: Nat G. Rothstein, director of advertising, publicity and exploitation; John Brownell, east coast scenario editor; Lee Marcus, assistant to Berman; Al Boasberg and Carl Goe of the sales promotion department, and Harry Osborne, assistant advertising manager. This meeting will act as a forerunner of the sales meeting to be held in Chicago about May 1.

EARL HUDSON ADDRESSES A. M. P. A.

"Today's wideawake reporter is tomorrow's successful producer," Earl Hudson, eastern production manager for First National Pictures, told members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their regular weekly luncheon in the Cafe Boulevard Thursday, April 16. The luncheon was tendered by the A. M. P. A. as a tribute to Mr. Hudson, a former member and an ex-newspaper and publicity man.

"I don't know any publicity man with real creative ability and a background of newspaper experience who could not do equally good work in the studio," Hudson also remarked.

WANT NON-TAXABLE MUSIC

Twenty-two out of the twenty-six theatre owners at Akron, Ohio, who compose the M. P. T. O. Association of Akron, have placed themselves definitely on record as to their position on the non-taxable music question. In a resolution recently adopted they have pledged themselves to lend every possible effort to employ only non-taxable music in their programs. Moreover, they have petitioned producers asking that their pictures be cued with the greatest amount of non-taxable music possible. Another resolution was also passed lauding the action of Williamson, Berlin and Snyder in supplying tax-free music to motion picture theatres.

SPECIAL EASTER APPEAL

A double-header stunt of special interest was carried out successfully during Easter Week by Manager D. E. L. Fisher of the Garrick Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, one of the better picture houses of that city, when he presented one feature at matinees only and then screened an entirely different feature production at the evening shows. The main reason for this arrangement, as explained by Manager Fisher, was that, for the Easter school vacation, he wanted an afternoon program having a special appeal to juveniles with an evening program that would have strong attraction for adult patrons.

WARNER-SIEGEL

Mrs. Bessie Siegel, daughter of Moe Levy, prominent New York City merchant, of No. 590 West End Avenue, was married to Albert Warner, president of Vitagraph, Inc., and a member of Warner Bros., motion picture producers, at the West 88th Street Synagogue, New York, at 11.30 A. M., April 23. Rabbi Goldstein officiated. Harry W. Warner, President of Warner Bros., delayed starting his trip to Los Angeles, in order to attend the marriage service. He left for the West Coast on Thursday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Warner motored to Atlantic City on their honeymoon.

CALLS DAYLIGHT SAVING CANADA'S "GREATEST CURSE"

"Daylight Saving is the greatest curse that this country has ever seen," declared W. Black, Progressive member for South Huron, Ontario, in the House of Commons at Ottawa, during a speech which he delivered before the Canadian Parliament on April 16. This was the second attack within a few days on the Daylight Saving feature which is legal in Canada for those municipalities which adopt it by referendum or majority vote of civic councils.

Black was dealing with causes for the financial condition of the country. He declared that the Daylight Saving resolution which had passed the Canadian House of Commons some years ago had "done more harm and made more lazy men than anything on the statute books of the country."

SEVEN STORY BUILDING FOR ALBANY

Following an announcement three or four weeks ago that a fireproof building would be erected in Albany to house film exchanges, came another announcement last week to the effct that W. W. Farley, a wealthy resident of the city and head of companies operating theatres in Schenectady and likewise in Yonkers, was one of a company which would immediately construct a seven-story fireproof building near the business center of the city and for the express purpose of providing quarters for the film exchanges. The new building will have a seventy-five foot frontage and a depth of 140 feet. Whether or not the other building will now be erected is a question.

REMBUSCH BUYS IN TERRE HAUTE

The Grand Opera House in Terre Haute, Ind., has passed into the hands of Frank J. Rembusch, president of the Rembusch Enterprises, of Indianapolis, which controls a number of theatres in several Indiana cities. The Grand is owned by the heirs of Crawford Fairbanks, former Terre Haute brewer, and has been operated since September, 1922, by George Jacob. It is the oldest downtown theatre in Terre Haute now in operation. Ground was broken for its erection in May, 1897 and it was completed in November of that year at a cost of approximately $150,000.

WOMAN BUYS EXCHANGE IN DALLAS

Mrs. J. W. Bilsborough has purchased the Midwest Film Exchange at Dallas, Texas, from P. R. Isley. C. M Jagers is the manager.

Nails Denny Rumor

In answer to the story which appeared recently in certain newspapers to the effect that Reginald Denny's contract was to be bought for $500,000 from Universal by another big film company, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, issued the following statement from California via a telegram just received at the Universal home office:

"Notice is hereby given to all moving picture producers and distributors that Reginald Denny is under contract with the Universal Pictures Corporation for the rendering of his exclusive services to the Universal Pictures Corporation, and that the undersigned will enforce all of its rights against any person, firm or corporation contracting with said Reginald Denny for any services during the period covered by the aforesaid contract or inducing, or attempting to induce, any breach of the same contract."

Reginald Denny has a five-year contract with Universal, of which four years remain.

Brilliant Gathering at Dinner Given Gloria Swanson

A "Welcome Home" dinner to Gloria Swanson was given on the evening of April 14 at the Park Lane by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The dinner was tendered both as a personal tribute to Miss Swanson and in honor of "Madame Sans-Gene," her latest picture.

A brilliant gathering of about 800 notables of the dramatic, motion picture, social and literary worlds was present. Miss Swanson's husband, the Marquis de la Falaise de la Coudraye, sat at the dais table with her, and a score of screen stars, directors and Famous Players executives.

Amidst the gaiety that manifested itself early in the evening there seemed to be prevalent an underlying desire among the guests to honor Miss Swanson for her triumphant rise in ten years from an obscure little extra girl to motion picture stardom, a Marquise, and a member of the famed French Academy. This latter distinction was bestowed upon Miss Swanson by the French Government for her remarkable impersonation of "Madame Sans-Gene."

Brief addresses of welcome and congratulation were made by Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Miss Swanson replied briefly.

Following the dinner, at which 400 guests were seated, there was a supper dance attended by 450 others.

McGILL HAS ANOTHER THEATRE

John A. McGill, who has successfully managed the Liberty Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington, added to his duties the management of the new Community Theatre in that city, with the opening of the new theatre, Saturday, April 18th.

Integral with the new building of the Knights of Pythias, costing over $25,000.00, the new theatre was dedicated auspiciously with ceremonies including the dedication speech of Port Orchard's Mayor, C. A. Hanks, music by the Knights of Pythias band and the showing of a program including Mix's special, "Dick Turpin," a Van Bibber comedy and a Crossword Puzzle film.

CANADA'S CLOCK ARGUMENT

Strong opposition to Daylight Saving has developed in the Canadian House of Commons at Ottawa, Ontario, and there is a real prospect that legislation will be enacted to prohibit any city or Province of the Dominion from adopting the summer time plan for civic localities or Provincial jurisdictions. Canadian exhibitors are jubilant over the possibility of a Federal ban being placed on daylight saving in their respective cities, although it is not considered likely that arrangements made for the present season will be interfered with.

CORNING, N. Y. RULES ON SUNDAY

"The title of a book or picture cannot tell the story and we deny emphatically that the stories told in the photoplays mentioned were as stated," say Corning, N. Y. exhibitors in reply to a local political power's fight to oppose Sunday showings.

This representative mentioned the titles of several pictures which had been shown in the town to substantiate, he said, his argument. The Corning Common Council then went on record as opposing Sunday shows, ordering the city attorney to draft an ordinance prohibiting the same.

SUNDAY CLOSED IN OKLA. TOWN

No more Sunday shows, was the verdict of the vote taken at Miama, Okla., April 7. The no Sunday shows was fostered by Ministerial Alliance.

DISCUSS ILLINOIS LAWS

More than 200 exhibitors gathered at Ridge Hall, Chicago, late last week to discuss the various legislative bills that have been brought before the Illinois Legislature at the present session. A good representation from the members of the Chicago Exhibitors Association were on hand headed by Jack Miller, business manager of the organization, and a committee was appointed to look after matters at Springfield during the meeting of the legislature.

ORPHEUM CIRCUIT EARNINGS

According to the report of the Orpheum Circuit, Chicago, for February, the profits of the organization before taxes were $334,383 against $259,272 for the same month last year. For the first two months this year, the Circuit made $732,344 against $488,690 for the same period last year. This shows the increase in theatre profits and the appreciation of the public for the popular priced picture and vaudeville shows now being put over by the circuit in the western territory.

ROYAL, ONTARIO, BURNS

The New Royal Theatre, North Bay, Ontario, was visited by serious fire early on the morning of April 5. When the flames were discovered, John Blanchet, the manager, was at his summer residence at Trout Lake and he quickly returned to the city. The balcony was wrecked and a portion of the roof fell in, the total loss being estimated at $30,000. The theatre, which seats 1,100 people, is now being reconstructed and it will likely re-open in June.

FOX AGAIN A GRANDFATHER

For the second time within a month William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, is a grandfather. On April 8, it has just been revealed by the proud parents, a son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Milton J. Schwartz. Mrs. Schwartz was Miss Belle Fox. The latest acquisition to the Fox household will be named William Fox Jerome Schwartz.

Mr. Fox' first grandson was born to Mr. and Mrs. Douglas M. Tauszig and was named William Fox Tauszig. Mrs. Tauszig was Miss Nona Fox.

FORUM, LOS ANGELES, CHANGES

Forum Theatre, Los Angeles, patterned after the old Roman Forum of ancient days, has been taken over by a group of moving picture men, including Cecil B. DeMille, Charles Christie and the Producers Distributing Corporation. The Forum, under its new policy, will be the only first-run theatre in Los Angeles open for independent releases. John P. Goring has assumed management of the theatre, succeeding Julius M. Johnson, who resigned.

ARBITRATES 39 DISPUTES

Thirty-nine disputes between film exchanges and exhibitors, involving about $12,000, were settled by arbitration by the Indianapolis joint arbitration board of exchange men and exhibitors in 1924, according to a report by Harry J. Bailey and Floyd Brown, president and vice-president of the Indianapolis Film Board of Trade. Thus far it has not been necessary to call in a seventh person in Indianapolis.

O'TOOLE DECLINES INVITATION

In a letter to Congressman Sol Bloom, President M. J. O'Toole of the M. P. T. O. A. regrets inability to attend a meeting of the sub-committee of the Committee on Patents to discuss a new copyright law because of his promised attendance at the convention of Western Pennsylvania exhibitors on April 22. He expects to attend subsequent sessions.

PAUL MOONEY AT FRENCH LICK

Paul C. Mooney vice president of Producers Distributing Corporation in charge of distribution, left for French Lick Springs this week for a brief rest and recuperation after his recent illness.

DE LORENZO HEADS OMAHA BRANCH

The engagement of Frank De Lorenzo as branch manager for Producers Distributing Corporation at Omaha is announced this week by Paul C. Mooney vice president in charge of distribution.

Organist Thwarted Only by Smoke

Remaining at his post until he was overcome by smoke, Percy Le Fleur, organist at the Columbia Theatre, the largest Erie, Pa., picture house, played the organ and staved off a stampede which was started when the stage burst into flames at a recent matinee. Le Fleur continued to play while police and others obtained better control of the crowd. Just before the last person left the theatre Le Fleur toppled from his seat, overcome with smoke. The firemen, after a hard battle of 45 minutes, checked the flames. The same theatre sustained a heavy loss by fire in 1919. The damage caused by the recent blaze is estimated at $150,000. The organ, valued at $20,000, is a complete loss.

Movement Under Foot In Ontario to Lift German Film Ban

Although various other Provinces of Canada have lowered the bar against German pictures, Ontario has maintained its wartime standard. There is a concerted move on the part of moving picture organizations, however, to secure some amelioration toward German pictures, particularly of the type of "The Last Laugh." Those who are negotiating with the Ontario Government for a changed attitude in the matter include the Canadian Division of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, this being popularly known otherwise as the "Hays" organization." The Toronto Film Board of Trade is also interested, this body, recently formed, representing all but one or two of the leading exchanges operating in the Ontario territory. The president of the Toronto Board is W. A. Bach, Ontario manager of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd.; J. O'Loughlin of the Fox Film Corporation, as vice-president; A. Berman of United Artists, treasurer, and H. Law, Universal, Toronto, as secretary.

The Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors, headed by Major A. S. Hamilton as chairman, has maintained strict official enmity toward German pictures. Some few years ago one German picture did slip through, via New York, for Ontario presentation. Organizations of war veterans at Toronto and one or two local newspapers got busy, however, when the origin of the feature was discovered and there was a merry outcry with the result that official approval was immediately withdrawn.

German features have been presented generally throughout Canada, except in Ontario, for some years with certain restrictions. Even the French-Canadian Province of Quebec has permitted the presentation of a number of German releases but it was only a short time ago that the European release, "Chu Chin Chow," was rejected by the Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors.

LOEW'S TORONTO FINANCES

Theatrical conditions in Toronto, Ontario, are excellent, judging by the reports of the annual meeting of Marcus Loew's Theatres, Limited, Toronto, which was held April 2 with President O. B. Sheppard as chairman. Announcement was made that profits on 1924 operations amounted to $73,000 after retiring $43,000 of the first mortgage bonds and also redeeming $38,000 of the second mortgage securities. The company is concentrating on the retirement of the whole issue of second mortgage bonds, the intention being to redeem a total of $100,000 bonds during 1925.

AMBROSE SUCCEEDS McCARTHY

First National's Omaha office has a new branch manager in the person of J. S. Abrose, succeeding L. J. McCarthy, resigned.

As in the case of all new branch managers appointed by E. A. Eschmann since heading the company's sales organization, Mr. Abrose was selected from the company's field force for promotion. He was a salesman in the Omaha territory until selected by Mr. Eschmann to head the branch.

BRAZIL, IND., FIRE SCARE

Fire recently in the A. B. Levin clothing store at Brazil, Ind., created a small panic among patrons of the Sourwine Theatre, situated across the alley from the store, but through the timely action of cool heads in the audience no one was injured. Several persons were thrown down and trampled on in the mad rush from the building. All the moving picture theatres in the city were temporarily put out of business as wires from the electric light plant to the theatres were burned in two.

HAROLD LLOYD FIRST

Harold Lloyd is the favorite film actor of the movie fans of Fairmont, W. Va.,, and vicinity, leading Milton Sills more than fifty votes, according to finals in a voting contest which has been carried on over a course of several months by the Movie News, a local publication. Colleen Moore is third favorite and leads the female stars with Gloria Swanson standing second. Nearly 1,100 votes were cast.

BINGHAMTON SUNDAY UP TO VOTERS

The moving picture minority in the common council in Binghamton, N. Y., has outmaneuvered the majority and succeeded in withdrawing the Delaney ordinance from council consideration and passing a resolution for a referendum on Sunday pictures to be held in connection with the general election next November.

ONE DAY SESSION IN CHICAGO

The next convention of the Illinois Association of Motion Picture Theatre Owners will be held at the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, on May 18th. As one day only will be given over to the convention this year, it will be a business meeting entirely. This was decided upon at a recent meeting of the executive committee.

TULLY MARSHALL'S BIRTHDAY

Earl Hudson, head of First National's own eastern production units, entertained about twenty members of his staff, and their wives, with a shore dinner at the country clubhouse of the New York Athletic Club, Travers Island, the evening of April 13. It was Tully Marshall's birthday and the affair was in the nature of a birthday dinner to him.

GETS FIRST OF NEW CHAPLINS

Hiram Abrams, of United Artists, paid San Francisco a visit in April, with the result that West Coast Theatres, Inc. of Northern California, secured the first bookings in the United States on "The Gold Rush," with Charles Chaplin; "Little Annie Rooney," with Mary Pickford, and "Don Q" featuring Douglas Fairbanks.

PNEUMONIA KILLS DAVID POWELL

David Powell, Mae Murray's leading man in recent pictures, succumbed last week in New York to an attack of pneumonia. He is survived by a wife and child who are in England.

Give Your Imagination a Chance

By

Colby Harriman

THE modern trend of artists who specialize in stage settings is to break away from the details of realism, and merely give enough background to suggest the scene.

The American producer, in general, is charged to the degree that his imagination is withering from lack of exercise; that he has almost lost the power of visualizing anything for himself, and the American stage, instead of stimulating the imagination, has done its best to stultify it with realistic detail.

To the critic who judges American stage productions without considering the high plane attained in the art and found in the motion picture theatre, these caustic bits might be noted. The rapid advance achieved in the more artistic expressions embracing the new scenic designs, better lighting treatments, proper color combinations, is due to that ever-increasing group of producers, particularly those in the motion picture theatres, who, by studious preparation attain genuine accomplishment.

We are always grateful to those producers of the other days who laid the foundation stones of this present art. It was only by following in the path of an exact realism that the finer conception of stage design, as we know it today, was achieved. The realistic production has been one important step in the evolutionary scheme of the theatre. This knowledge of realism was necessary, as it equipped the producer with sufficient understanding whereby he could select the elemental factors essential to the framework of his design, and embody such suggestive or impressionistic factors as demanded by the modern code.

This advancement in the production art may be attributed to the influence of European stagecraftsmen. In America, a few years ago, realism amounted almost to an obsession. In Europe the same might have been said of the impressionistic. Fortunately, a happy medium has been arrived at, and the motion picture theatre has offered the best artistic laboratory and workshop in which the proper welding of these two can be effected.

The presentation producer is not limited in his artistic operations. He has a greater opportunity than any other class of producers. He deals in the miniature, a single episode, a situation, reflecting a single mood. He deals individually with emotions and not collectively as the legitimate stagecraftsman is compelled to do. For this reason the presentation producer has the advantage over other producers as he need not take into consideration any other factor except the single idea he wishes to portray. Not being hampered by an exacting play, the demands of authors, directors, etc., he has a wider range in which to express himself, and cultivate his art according to the modern interpretation.

It has been prophesied recently, by an artist of repute who is devoting the greater portion of his time to the designing of sets for presentations, that in the near future the suggestive scenic art will mark the introduction of moving scenery. By this term "moving scenery" it does not mean the old mechanical trick type, but genuine art backgrounds that will blend imperceptibly from one scene to another, never obtrusively but with a smoothness and grace that will resemble transformation.

With the departure of producers from the picture book type of realism they are losing the unimaginative rigidity, and taking on a certain expansiveness that is nearer to life. The producer today can "hold the mirror up to Nature," reflecting it, not duplicating it.

As a matter of fact, in actual life the backgrounds of countryside and city are moving, rather than stationary. It is impossible for the individual to take in their entire beauty at one glance; he sees them one way one moment and as he shifts his glance or takes a step he immediately gets a new impression. Even though he wishes to compel the stationary impression, Nature will not permit it, for a passing cloud or an incipient breeze will change the outline of the trees and bring shadows where there were no shadows the moment before.

The problem of the modern producer and scenic designer is to duplicate this movement in stage scenery so that the audience secures a continuously new impression of the settings, and not an obtrusive impression, one that becomes hackneyed and ultimately monotonous, but one that varies with the constantly changing moods expressed in song, the dance or the personalities of the players.

The moving scenery furnishes a solution to many production problems. For instance, place a bit of a tree at one end of the stage, a glimpse of a cottage in the background, and encompass this with the proper black hangings and you have a complete illusion that can swiftly be changed by the removal of one bit of scenery and the speedy substitution of another. This is the principle of the scheme which, completed, will enable the entire background to change as the singer sings his songs, or as the dance progresses. This may even be a necessity of the future.

Don't be afraid to use your imagination. Don't be afraid to dream. Progression is the result of experimentation. The presentation producer has the opportunity of becoming a worthy contributor towards the establishment of the best in American stagecraft.

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Complete working plans of the presentation suggested herewith, including blueprints, color charts, costume plates, music cue sheets, and other necessary information, are prepared for each subject. The folios are available for IMMEDIATE DELIVERY without charge to any producer or exhibitor engaged in actual production work, and desiring to avail himself of the Colby Harriman suggestions.

"STUDIES IN SILHOUETTE"

a—"Overture Feature"

b—"Dance of the Puppets"

A "Moving Picture World" Presentation devised by Colby Harriman

Silhouette numbers are always attractive and are very simple to stage. It is always best to illuminate the surfaces from the back but where the stage area is limited it is possible to achieve a successful illumination and silhouette illusion from the front.

The first number suggested has been devised as a setting for the introduction of a motion picture subject. There are several scenic and musical subjects films on the market which can be used with such a setting, for instance, the Fitzpatrick Famous Music Master Series.

The scene opens with a pianist made up in the character of some well-known musician. He may be seated at the piano, being highlighted from the sides. The lighting treatment can give a changing color design on the draperies hung in two sections. As the music progresses, a large school, resembling a parchment roll, gradually unfolds, revealing a musical score. As the scroll unrolls, the flood on the back of this transparency is brought in with the sections. The notes are on the back of the sheet, being opaque, permitting them to be visible from the front. When the scroll reaches the floor, the lights back of the scroll gradually dim revealing a white sheet upon which the picture can be shown. The lighting about the scroll can be in deep tones, concentrating at the piano where the artist is high-lighted.

The second number is a novelty, the effects being attained with cut masks made of glass or gelatine tinted in the colours desired.

A white drop of lightweight muslin is hung down in one; the bottom of this drop should be battened and screwed to the floor so that the drop is taut.

The flood lighting consists of four units, two master units, one on either side which are open flood lights or spots shooting on to reflectors. The other units consist of a concealed strip light in a trough and a masked border light used back in three. These lights are toned with varigated colors using a double length frame and dissolving color wheel. The scalloped drapery effect on the sides may be achieved with masks cut in the design and silhouetted against the drop. This applies to the two hands which appear at the top of the drop, although these can be more effective if the hands of a person are placed in front of the lamp which casts the shadow of the hands in movement at the top of the drop.

The dancers have ribbons attached to their hands and feet which are held by the large hands at the top of the drop. This is accomplished by a distortion of the shadows giving the illusion that the hands are controlling the movements of the dancers. For the finale a spiral color scheme with a lobster scope finish complete the action.

Music Programmes Requested

WE HAVE been requested by the National Music Week Committee to secure the co-operation of the exhibitors and musical directors in the First Run Theatres to submit copies of the musical programs offered in their houses during National Music Week, May 3-9.

The National Music Week Committee are desirous of obtaining this information to assist them in the compilation of a survey of the musical activities in the motion picture theatres. The purpose of the survey is have a practical working record of programs which can be published and used as a basis for the activities of the Committee next year. The program should be accompanied by a detailed description of the special features and also such information as may be secured showing the extent of the activities of the local music week committee with the theatre.

It is a worthy request and it is the wish of this department that a general response will be given. Programs and other information may be mailed directly to the National Music Week Committee, 45 West 45th Street, New York City.

As an additional service, we would appreciate flashlights of sets used for special musical presentations offered this particular week. The photographs will be filed and will be used in advance publicity matter to be compiled for next season's activities.

Big First Run Presentations

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Romola" (Metro-Goldwyn)

Overture: "Excerpts from Shakespearean Operas," Composition arrangement by Dr. William Axt, David Mendoza, conducting.

Egyptian Ballet

A silhouette. The back drop flooded with orange amber with light amber moon-box hung midway. Two slender trunks of palm trees set right and left of center with practical tops which are high-lighted with green, the large fronds masking in the top of opening; a small palm tree set at extreme right and left. Doris Niles and four members of Capitol Ballet Corps, all dressed in characteristic Egyptian raiment do a dance number. No lighting treatment used in front.

Bacchanale

This number from "The Seasons" by Glazanow, is interpreted by Maria Yurieva and Veselaff Svoboda, distinguished Premiere Dancers from the Petrograd and Moscow Imperial Ballets. Fabric drop in mahogany colored material carrying a lineal frieze across the lower half of the drop in classical design with life size characters done in black and white. The man wore tiger skin costume and a vari-colored diaphanous drapery was worn by the woman. White spots to work and also for toning from the side.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City
Presentations by
JOSEPH PLUNKETT

Featured Picture: "My Son" (First National)

Overture: "Oberon" by Weber. Carl Edouarde, Conducting.

Serenade

Gold fabric curtains high-lighted with white from bridge, and rose from sides, is hung in two; curtains are slightly drawn at center revealing lower half of French windows which lead out to area with fabric backing tinted blue. A large lavender flowered bush set in front of backing. At right of the doors a three-way carved wood tapestry screen is set; left of the door-way a small stand surmounted with a large vase and flowers flanked on either side with antique single chairs. Two large candelabra torcheres are at extreme right and left. These lamps are working, amber shades being used. Pauline Miller and Everett Clark, dressed in Colonial costume sing "Un Peu D'Amour" by Silesu. Following song they exit through door-way and Mlle. Klemova and M. Daks appear from behind screen at right and render "Pizzicato" by Drigo. The man is dressed in white blouse, large black bow tie, diamond marked tights; girl in pink ballet costume. White spot to work. Following dance singers come on for repetition of portion of previous song.

A Night in Granada

A very pretentious setting is given this presentation representing section of a Spanish courtyard. The set is placed on an angle running from two at left up stage to right center, and from right center up stage on an oblique down to extreme right. In the center are three large arches supporting an arch and pillared balcony. The design is typically Spanish, the base of the set given a gray blue and a profusion of vines, rambler roses and various foliage units being used to dress the set. A large cast is used in this number; twelve ladies and nine men, all dressed in the colorful costumes of Old Spain. Colored shawls hang from balcony. A stained glass window back of the middle arch is tinted a dark amber. Amber used up-stage to high-light area way back of lower arches. Three postern lamps on the arches are lighted in dark amber. Amber and canary to flood. The ensemble sing "El Relicario" (Padilla.) This is followed by a tango dance by Mlle. Klemova and Roberto Medrano. "Remember Me" written by Jacques Gruenbuerg, associate conductor of Mark Strand orchestra, and is sung by Amund Sjovik assisted by Mark Strand Male Quartette. The Ballet Corps render "Jota" with refrain from "Remember Me" for finale.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City
Presentations by
HUGO RIESENFELD

Featured Picture: "Madame Sans Gene" (Paramount)

Overture: "Robespierre" (Littolf), Irvin Talbot, conducting.

"Le Peuple S'Amuse"

Two large rose brown velour curtains hung in one bearing two oval medallions bordered with a rose design, the one at right depicts Gloria Swanson ("Madame Sans Gene") in the character of "The Duchess" and on the left as "The Laundress." Curtains open suggesting the exterior of Vauxhall, the famous Parisian tavern about 1780; a set house placed up stage from center and off to right. The set house reveals a balcony which is reached by a step below. A wall placarded with various posters carries off from center adjoining set house; a green top tree is dead center at corner of the house. A suggested house top row is back of wall with a blue sky piece as backing. One of the largest casts ever used in a Rivoli presentation is introduced in this number. Approximately thirty characters dressed in military and civilian costumes of that period actually swarm about the set, four characters being used on the balcony. Musical numbers including two songs in French, a spirited dance ending with "La Marsellaise" constitute the introduction to the featured picture. Atmosphere for the picture is properly created by this excellent presentation. The lighting treatment is dominated by amber and canaries in the foreground and orange amber and blues in the background.

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City
Presentations by
HUGO RIESENFELD

Featured Picture: "Tides of Passion" (Vitagraph)

Overture: "Der Freischutz" (Weber), Willy Stahl, Conducting.

Marcel Salesco, Baritone, "Aria" from "Benvenuto Cellini."

Jazz Divertissement

Another version similar to number offered last week. A simple little number featuring Rialto Syncopaters introducing Dolores Farris, Danseuse. Syncopators are placed right end of the orchestra pit on raised platform flooded with amber. Close in curtains toned with pink. Jazz orchestra plays number, curtains drawn revealing long flowered design panel hung in center with two large spangled strips flanking either side of it. Black plush is used to carry off both right and left. Colored ribbons of crepe paper hung over black plush. Set flooded white and canary; dancer dressed in black lace and silver costume.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City
Presentations by
J. DeROSA

Featured Picture: "Wizard of Oz" (Chadwick) Second Week.

Overture: "Symphonajazz" (Katzman). Dr. Edward Kilenyi, Conducting.

"A Bouquet of Melody"

Two songs comprise this presentation, opening number blue sky drop hung down in one, flooded blue green; old woman sitting beside spinning wheel at center. Frederick Brindly, tenor, dressed in Irish costume, green coat and white breeches, standing beside her sings Mother Machree. Canary spot used. Close in and open to next scene. Fabric drop hung back flooded with orange amber, high lighted with blue and rose from side. Four small white baby grand pianos set across stage carrying a connecting drapery of a rose gold batik scarf. Two bronze mettaline legs hung over back drop at right center and left center, a batik scarf draped from one to the other; at center a chandelier with canary lamps covered with batik drapes is tinged with green from right. Girls in grey costumes, faces lighted with amber introduce piano quartette numbers, songs, whistle number, with four dancers dressed in orange ballet skirts and gold bodices come in for finale.

Fowler and Tamara

Terpsichorean Artists of vaudeville fame accompanied by their quartette of instrumentalists; violinist, two guitars and tiple, present regular routine of South American dances. Set is distinctly a vaudeville design, drop with painted wall and sky with cut arch in center, tab drop landscape backing dressed with garden benches, palm trees, etc.

CAPITOL THEATRE

Chicago

Presentations by
FRANCIS MANGAN

Featured Picture: "Up The Ladder"

Overture: "Rose Marie" (Friml). Albert E. Short, Conducting.

Divertissements:

Golden Fete Week is marked with an unusual program of specially arranged numbers. The following acts are offered: "The Spring Lawn Fete" introduced "Childrens Games" with four dancers, "Moonlight and Roses," song for a tenor and soprano assisted by six "Summer girls," "Miami Shore" rendered by the Male chorus; Jane "Taps" McKenna; "Under the Sea," with baritone singing "A King of the Viking Am I" followed by "Russle of Spring," dancers as mermaids and water nymphs; "The Mysterious Screens," tenor, singing "Blow the Smoke Away" and two girls in each group of golf girls, tennis girls, riding girls, bathing girls, rachet girls; "The La Fevres" present an Argentine Tango; "Blue Bird Land" with soprano singing "Blue Bird Land," two "Birdland Whistlers" and a dance number "The Blue Bird Land Fantasy"; Macy and Scott; "The Golden Finale," a five part number, (a) "Orphans of the Storm March" with toe marchers, (b) "March of the Bulgarians," (c) "Chocolate Soldier Trio," (d) "My Hero," (e) Grand Finale.

This week Banks Kennedy makes his premier appearance at the console of the Wurlitzer.

HENRY DREYFUS

Art Director of the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, and one of the chief aides of Joseph Plunkett, managing director, in the staging of Mr. Plunkett's outstanding prologues, divertissements and novelties.

EASTMAN THEATRE

Rochester, N. Y.

A very pretentious presentation is offered this week, entitled "The Prince Goes Hunting." It is a pantomime, representing the work of two members of the theatre staff. Paul Horgan created the story, while Nicholas Slonimsky, a gifted young composer and pianist, wrote the music. The production stage by Rouben Mamoulian. Three scenes comprise the feature. The first scene is "Before the Prince's Castle," the Prince and his six huntsmen starting for the hunt, followed secretly by the Prince's faithful cat. In the second scene "At the Edge of the Magic Forest," the Prince, still followed by the cat, becomes separated from the rest of the party. He falls under the spell of the Siren Witch, but is saved by the cat who reveals the Witch in her true character. In the last scene "The Magic Forest," the three Weird Sisters cast a spell over the Prince by their sinister dance. The cat turns them to stone as punishment. The Prince's party returns, and believing their master dead, mourn for him. The Fairies dance around the Prince in an effort to revive him but not until the cat brings the Fairy Queen is he restored. Twenty-two characters are programed to carry the action.

INQUIRIES

F. S.—Dallas, Texas: "Why is the cost of mica discs used in electrical effects so exorbitant?"

The care which must be taken in mining the mica is one of the reasons. As generally taken from the North Carolina mines the mineral consists of rough crystals and blocks ranging in diameter from an inch to several feet. These crystals are split into sheets, about one-sixteenth of an inch thick, with wedges or splitting knives. These splittings are exceedingly thin, mere films of from one-thousandth to one-sixteen-hundredth of an inch thick. Some sheets are so thin that a mass of it feels like a pile of the finest tissue paper. Splitting the blocks of the crystal is performed with a knife or the thumb nail, and from two to four pounds of splitting a day is considered a good output. All work is performed with hand picks to prevent damage to the crystal blocks. Good crystals of raw mica which furnish the large sheets from which the discs are cut will bring as high as $1,000 a ton. The United States produces annually about six hundred tons of the sheet mica.

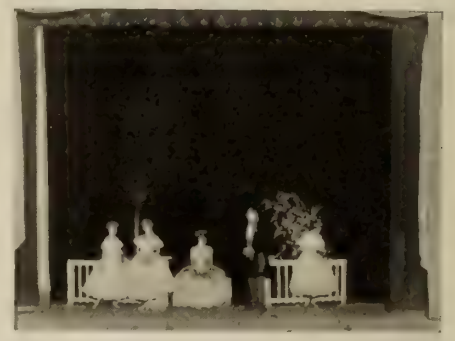
In prehistoric days when cavemen danced.

Novel Prologue By Dr. Riesenfeld

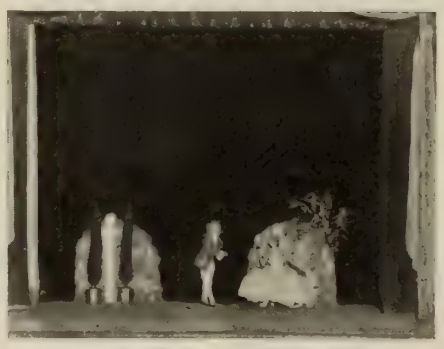
The following scenes comprised the effective presentation produced under the supervision of Hugo Riesenfeld at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City. Production was made under the direction of Josiah Zuro, the various settings designed and constructed by John Wenger. Paul Oscard staged the dances. The Rivoli Ensemble constituted the cast.

Preceding each scene a poetic title written by Morrie Ryskind was thrown on the special screen hung down at the curtain line.



When the waltz came into fashion.

Old Egyptian days when Cleopatra danced.



The minuet in colonial days.

And now—with jazzy har-mo-ny.

The dance in an Arabian Paradise.

When knights were bold.

NATIONAL BUREAU
ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC
45 West 45th Street, New York City

My dear Mr. Harriman:

The National Bureau for the Advancement of Music is glad to learn that your publication, The Moving Picture World, has taken particular interest in the observance of National Music Week, May 3-9.

I hope that your action will result in a still further advance in the use of good music by the picture houses of the country, not only during Music Week, but throughout the year. There is scarcely another force in American life that has greater potentialities for pioneer musical work than the motion picture houses. Many of them are already realizing most of these possibilities. Others will do so as soon as the necessary information and resources are in their possession.

This Bureau is heartily in sympathy with all efforts that are being made to acquaint exhibitors with the value of effective musical features in their programs. We shall be glad to assist with suggestions and printed matter any of the houses which wish to expand their musical programs. We should be pleased to have you extend that offer to the exhibitors through your department, "The First Run."

Very truly yours,
C. M. TREMAINE,
Director.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Paramount Manager Flies Air Mail Between Birmingham and Chattanooga

ALTHOUGH it is the aim of this department to confine this space to stunts practicable to a majority of exhibitors, we feel that the recent exploit of Jack T. Turner, of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala. on The Air Mail deserves the space, and it does point up what this department has consistently and persistently preached: that cooperation with a local interest is the finest possible sort of exploitation.

Turner was a military aviator during the war, and once or twice he has worked some air stunt for a picture, but when The Air Mail booking was received he felt that he could do something real.

For some time the Birmingham papers have been agitating the question of an air-mail service for the south. They feel that while the present concentration on the east-west routes will give the best results, it is more or less a matter of time when the north and south laterals are thrown out from this transcontinental trunk line, and they want to have their application in ahead of time, particularly in view of the talk of a Chicago-New Orleans route.

Knew Where to Go

The leading spirit in the local movement is the Birmingham Age-Herald, the morning newspaper. Mr. Turner sought James Parker Welsh, the City Editor, and suggested a "test" flight between Birmingham and Chattanooga, an air-line distance of approximately 125 miles. A military aviator had been commissioned to fly from New Orleans, but Birmingham wanted to be included in the stops at the first Chicago-New Orleans regular route instead of Memphis and St. Louis as now proposed.

Mr. Turner argued that an air-special to Chattanooga would show what could be done, and Mr. Welsh saw his point.

Arrangements were made, and with the consent of the Post Office Department J. G. Bass, the Postmaster at Birmingham, was authorized to swear in Turner as a temporary carrier, with a commission and everything.

All the Trimmings

A special edition of the Age-Herald was to be printed for Chattanooga, and the Chattanooga paper arranged for a return edition for distribution in Birmingham. Mail was to be carried, at regular air-postage, and it was announced that the film would be brought back as part of the return cargo and immediately shown to a special audience at the Galax.

This was the one point where the stunt flopped, in spite of Turner's precautions. He failed to get an emergency print shipped in ahead of the stunt as he had requested, and he did not make connections with the print which was naturally routed to him. He brought back cans weighted with bricks and newspapers to make the necessary weight, but he had to do a lot of stalling about "damaged film" to explain to a large audience assembled why he could not show the picture.

Hurt Business

The special showing, which of course would have carried large write-ups in all of the newspapers, had to be abandoned, and all of this valuable publicity was lost, otherwise the picture probably would have cleaned up all records.

Everything else went smoothly. About a hundred persons were at the post office at four o'clock in the morning to see Turner get the mail sacks, and as many more watched his take off, a little later, from the flying field. A much larger crowd was waiting for him at Chattanooga, where he arrived about two hours later, and on the return trip it was necessary to bar from the landing field all save the officials, so great was the crowd.

The mail was turned over to Postmaster Bass, with due ceremony, and a considerable quantity of first class mail was rushed to the postoffice for immediate delivery, while Turner took the fake cans to the theatre.

What It Got

It brought two solid weeks of front page publicity to the Galax, and this was publicity of the best possible sort, since it tied to a local ambition.

It put the Galax to the fore as a doer of things, and established both the house and the manager as in the news.

It gave the picture a form of advertising that no amount of money could buy, and for a long time to come the tradition of the "first" air-mail will cling to the house.

Moreover for the first time in local history it was possible to string a banner across the street. A special exception was made in this instance, with the stipulation that the stars and Paramount were not to be mentioned, though since a large sign on the marquise, just below, gave this data, this point is immaterial.

You may not be able to fly an airplane, but you can ride the local hobby. That's the big idea.

Argust Ideas Help Sell The Air Mail

Pat Argust, of the Rialto Theatre, Colorado Springs, Col., worked a couple of new ones on The Air Mail. For $20 and $25 tickets he got a fine lobby display. The money and tickets were prizes for the best model airplanes submitted by pupils of the Junior High School, the heads of the mechanical drawing and automotive department being the judges. The models were displayed in the lobby.

The winners were also shown in a store window with a package which, it was announced, would be sent to New York by air mail and returned on the next flight. The public as invited to figure how long the round trip would require. This, of course, centered thought upon the saving in time made by the air mail in contrast with the regular mails, and made for greater interest in this latest branch of the postal service.

The newspapers took up both stunts and helped both the service and the picture.

Let Societies Sell Tickets to Theatre

I wonder how many Managers are capitalizing on their strongest publicity medium. We here in Orlando never miss an opportunity to let some Society or organization sell tickets for some good picture.

A few weeks ago it was the High School Athletic Association, last week it was the Orlando Art Association. We often combine with the Business and Professional Women's Club, the D. A. R. or any other organization that wants to sell.

We have found that while most clubs want to do the job well, there are always slackers and so instead of giving them a straight 50% of what they sell on the streets (sale ends at noon on the day the picture opens so they do not interfere with box office sale) we give them a sliding scale. For Orlando if they sell 500 tickets we give them 50% but if they sell less than this number we only give them 25%. The answer is simple. Less than 500 tickets does not make the proposition worth the money we have to pay them.

Any Manager who is not cooperating with his local Clubs and Societies is making a big mistake for they are anxious to make money, many times, and the theatre seldom comes to their mind unless the Manager puts the facts before them. Every Orlando School, Society, Club or Organization of any kind, depends on the Orlando theatres for this kind of assistance whenever they need money. And we are always ready to aid them. We do however make it a point not to let more than one ticket sale be put on a month which keeps the idea fresh.—Frank H. Burns, Orlando, Fla.

A Tonic

Once more the fake prescription comes to the fore, D. Roscoe Faunce used it at the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., on a recent picture. The blank was signed by "Betty Compson, M. D." and the formula read that thrills and mystery with suspense surprises and romance in the proper proportion would give New Lives for Old when taken in large doses.

It was a good copy of the usual blank and 10,000 of these helped the picture materially.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN, the American composer-pianist, was the principal stage attraction on the program with Corinne Griffith in "Declasse" as the feature motion picture. Besides Cadman on the stage program, there was an overture by the Famed Mark Strand Orchestra, and an Easter novelty dance called "Easter Chicks." The Topical Review filled out the show, bringing the performance up to two hours and two minutes, of which time "Declasse" required one hour and twenty-six minutes. The Topical Review used up its customary eight minutes, which left twenty-eight minutes for the three musical presentations.

An overture that Brooklynites apparently never tire of is "Raymond" by Ambrose Thomas which was used this week. When the big prosenium curtain was hauled up new Easter decorations were seen on the orchestra stage. A green hedge row ran clear across in front of the orchestra rail. In each of the transparent windows (one on either side of the orchestra) was a peach-tree in blossom flooded from the sides with baby pink spots. The lights for the overture were as follows: medium green Mestrum flood of 160 amperes on the hedge row; medium lemon flood of the same amperage on the musicians from the dome; foots and borders of orchestra stage in blue; silver draw-curtains closed across the small production stage and lighted by two arch spots of medium green and two medium lemon. Eight minutes for the overture.

"Easter Chicks" was incident No. 2, running four minutes. On a raised platform was a huge nest ten feet square lined with straw and holding five huge colored Easter eggs. These eggs were especially made properties, hinged in the middle so they could brake open when the girls behind them made their appearance. The premiere danseuse, costumed as a rooster, appeared from the side and during the course of her solo dance knocked on each egg, which opened and revealed a dancer also costumed as a baby chick. An ensemble dance of the novelty type then followed. For a back-drop the depe blue cyclorama was used and the number was lighted from overhead by orange and amber spots.

Following the Mark Strand Topical Review came the personal appearance of Mr. Cadman. Preceding the incident was a trailer announcing him and naming the selections to be given. At the opening the set revealed a piano to the left, backed up by gold draw-curtains and with conservatory properties here and there. While the orchestra played "At Dawning" as an introduction, Cadman come on from the left and seated himself at the piano. He played the accompaniment for the following numbers: "Wolf Dance" by the ballet; "Land of the Sky Blue Water" by a bass-baritone; "The Shadowless Hour" by a soprano; "My Desire" by a tenor; "Love Like the Dawn Comes Stealing," a contralto solo; "Welcome Sweet Wind," a coloratura soprano; and "Spirit of Spring" by a mixed quartette by the ballet.

For the "Wolf Dance" which opened the Cadman group the gold draw curtains parted, disclosing a mountain scene with one of the male singers standing high on a rock dressed as an Indian chief. Beneath him was the ballet wearing wolf skins. At the finish of the dance the ballet made their exit behind the gold draw curtains which were closed over the mountain drop. For the closing number a similar stunt was used, the scene this time being a back drop typical of Spring. Sixteen minutes for the Cadman presentation.

Book Cutouts

Getting hold of a die that gave the suggestion of a book, W. J. Murray, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, had 5000 printed up for The Top of the World, black lettering on a yellow-orange ground. Some of these were given booksellers to supplement their stocks of the actual novel, while the others were mailed out. They helped the business to climb in spite of heavy opposition.

THIS SPECIAL STRUCTURE REQUIRED A MUNICIPAL PERMIT

But the Mayor told the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., to go ahead, feeling that the picture was worth while, and it helped C. W. Irvin put over The Thief of Bagdad to unusually good business. A special matinee was given the children

Mayor Permitted a Special Structure

About the best angle used by C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., was a poll of the kiddies as to whether they would rather have a special matinee of The Thief of Bagdad at a quarter or see the next special at regular prices.

The vote was almost unanimous on the Thief, and this price concession gave them all a chance to visit the oriental wonderland. At the same time it helped to impress the adults and made them more willing to part with the increased admission fees.

Another big seller was a special structure which extended almost to the curb line. The lobby of the Imperial is too small to permit an elaborate display and so Mr. Irvin obtained permission to build out over the sidewalk. It did not extend to the curb as the canopy does not go that far and the top was even with the canopy. Since the usual display was small, this stunt was more than doubly effective.

All cave newspaper passes were cancelled on this attraction, and at advanced prices all money records were broken.

Nut Stuff

Horning in on a local fashion show at South Norwalk, Conn., Al Hamilton, of the Rialto Theatre, had a man suggesting Charley's Aunt hand out envelopes containing a Brazil nut and slip reading, "From Brazil, where these nuts come from." There was no house, date or title, but it took little guessing to connect the stunt with his advertising for Charley's Aunt.

It did not hurt in the least that the Governor was the recipient of one of the envelopes. To the contrary it got him a couple of sticks in next day's paper.

Took an Encore

Almost everywhere managers have used some form of school concession to advertise the showing of Abraham Lincoln this generally taking shape as a special performance.

In York, Pa., the schools cooperated with such enthusiasm that a special matinee was run each afternoon, after school hours, and even with that there were so many disappointments that Manager Moore announced a special Saturday morning show at the reduced price when no special concession ticket was required.

He more than got his money back on the adult patronage engendered by the home talk of the youngsters.

It's old stuff, but it has not been used lately and it should work like a charm on this really god comedy. It helped make business for the Circle all out of proportion to its cost.

To get the most for his money, Storin had these put into windows in the French district by a Frenchman who explained at length to the storekeepers why they should let the bill in. Most of them did not require that much argument, but it was Storin's idea to fill them up with dope about the picture so they could pass it along to their customers. The talk did almost as much as the bills themselves, which goes to show that there are ways of making even a good stunt better.

Made a Trio

One of the press book stunts on The Tornado is the use of the warning "Nail down your roof, The Tornado is coming." Jack Hayes, of the Universal Pittsburgh office, helped the Strand Theatre, Altoona, land this on three concerns by printing both sides. The main side carried the warning with "See the reverse side for last minute instructions." These were to send your laundry to the Altoona Laundry, to see Anderson and either pay up your insurance or take some out, and to visit May's drug store for a nerve tonic." All three concerns used the cards as stuffers and with the theatre, split 10,000 four ways.

Marines Approved

There would not seem to be much of a co-operative angle for the recruiters on The Sea Hawk, but Thomas G. Coleman, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., persuaded the local sergeant that anything marine would help fill the Marine Corps, so they gave over the A boards to "The U. S. M. C. congratulates the Rialto on its showing of The Sea Hawk" with the dates thrown in for good measure.

Comes pretty easy for some people—mostly people who think.

A Leader's Illness Was Good Publicity

John J. Friedl worked a stunt on He Who Gets Slapped that cannot very well be duplicated by most managers, but it is interesting in showing how an alert manager can get publicity out of almost anything.

Mirsky, who leads the orchestra at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, was in the hospital for a minor operation. Friedl sent over a machine, an operator and the assistant director, and while the picture was screened on the wall of the private ward Mirsky and his assistant laid out the score. As a photographer was sent along, Friedl was able to illustrate the front page stories the hospital-prepared score won.

Then he installed a radio that Mirsky might hear the score played in the theatre, and that got another front page straight news story.

And the two stories worked up an interest in the score that made good business at the ticket window.

Got Them Started

For a drawing contest on He Who Gets Slapped, John J. Friedl, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Tex., had a drawing made of Lon Chaney with the features omitted. The awards were made for the best filling in of the uncompleted sketch, a newspaper sponsoring the stunt. It cost $10 in prizes and Friedl could not have bought any one of the stories for that small investment.

Among the other stunts used by Charles S. Smith, of the Shattuck Opera House, Cornell, N. Y., was a sale of tickets to the school children on the basis of eleven for the price of ten. In some classes the extra tickets were sold and the proceeds turned into the class fund.

Has Variant on Open Letter Idea

Emery N. Downs, who is just getting back into the game after a three years vacation, bobs up in Youngstown, Ohio, as manager of the Dome Theatre, a Warner Brothers house. Just to get himself back on the map he comes in with a new idea in the open letter stunt. Most open letters are addressed to the Mayor; who seems to be the favorite goat, but Downs has adapted a form which gives him a chance to get chatty with his public. He broke this idea on Revelation,

REVELATION

Dear Folks:

I want you to do some thinking with me about what the word "REVELATION" means; I asked a friend the other day if he ever had one. He said, "Sure!" The other day I bowed to a girl on the street when she smiled at me, and then discovered it was my wife in a new hat."

He didn't get my idea, though. I meant the kind of a REVELATION that is told of in the Bible (you know what I mean); St. John had a REVELATION that is sometimes called THE APPOLIPSE—(someone made a "movie" about it and four horses—must have been sort of a western drama). What I wanted to know was, could any one today, who was not Saintly, have a REVELATION—I mean one who is just plain, worldly and wild?

Now I know of just such a happening, but can't use any more space on it today but will tomorrow.

Yours For Goodness Sake,
EM.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

AN OPEN LETTER

thinking that it would help if he got over the idea of the title before he started in to sell it with his regular advertising. This was followed by a second letter which ran:

"Dear Folks:

"Remember yesterday I asked you if you knew what 'Revelation' meant? And if anyone outside of those saintly old Bible folks could have a 'Revelation,' meaning such as played 'high, wide and handsome' in their waking moments?

"Well, a certain girl named Joline Hofer employed as an artist model was the case I had in mind—Oh, she was wild, very—and strange as it may seem, she had a relevation, a sign from Heaven, and what led up to it, and what caused it, and what it did to beautiful Joline will make you sit up and blink.

"Joline is played by Miss Viola Dana in a photoplay at The Dome—the story is taken from the book by Mabel Wagnall, The Rosebush of a Thousand Years, but is named Revelation. It starts tomorrow. I thank you.

"Yours for Goodness Sake,
"EM."

The signature is, of course, a contraction of his own name, and the subscription is designed to get people asking what "For goodness sakes" means, when he will explain that it refers to the quality of the shows at the Dome. In a town that size he can make it a catchphrase and get some real advertising out of it. Even his greetings is thought out. He wants to get the intimate touch and the "dear folks" is merely one of his means to that end. He wants to make strong suggestion of friendliness. The Warner Brothers hail from Youngstown, and he wants to make the public feel that they are still home folks. This is his first use of the idea, but it worked so well that he has already repeated on The Age of Innocence, and he plans to use it whenever he wants to bat out a special or put over an ill-fitting title. It's a good plan that gets better through repetition, though it should not be used so regularly as to become common. Downs got into the picture end back in 1905 when the coalition of Keith and Proctor resulted in the Twenty-third Street Theatre, New York, being turned over to pictures and he put in some twelve years at the Knickerbocker Theatre, Cleveland, so he ought to know the managerial ropes by this time. Very evidently he does.

A Nice Example of Routing for Inserts

Harold H. Bailey has been experimenting with the routing scheme recently shown in this department and he sends in a couple of very nice examples, the better of which is shown on this page. This is a display for Sandra against a benday ground, using plan book cuts and type. It would have been better had the routing been more exactly to the edge of the cut on the right, but this white margin is well done and the panels have a display value that never could be obtained with rule work and the usual make-up. The other example is for Icebound and was used for the Orpheum Theatre, a sister house. Here the upper part of the cut is routed to let in both the cut and the lettering from a Paramount mat, with another irregular design for a tab show and a circular space for the comedy. It does not measure up to the Sandra display, which is exceptionally good. Sandra uses a five eight and a halfs, and it looks like a half page. If you have not yet experimented with this idea take this sample over to your newspaper and ask the foreman what he thinks he can do with it. If you can get results like this for little more than the cost—cost of straight composition—and a labor charge is all you should be required to pay, it is well worth while. Mr. Bailey has caught the trick. We should like to see more.

meet one, but a majority of managers seem to feel that they simply must wander away down the column, even if they have to pull in the space from a four to a three. The Merrill has used a four and gets a good cut and plenty of room for announcement. It is pretty well filled with type, but the punch to that little plug on the right probably does more for the ticket sale than would white space. It is not put in merely to plug a hole, but because there is sales value to what is printed there. Otherwise white space would have been better. The cut is almost too fine a screen for newspaper work, but it came through better than might have been expected. This makes a good appeal and gets a better display than could have been gained from a deeper space.

Serialization Helps

Because Captain Blood had previously been serialized in the Evening Telegram, the Vitagraph release was able able to run to two weeks of strong business at the American Theatre, Salt Lake City, on comparatively little work other than hooking to the published story. This was chiefly done through street car banners and in the newspaper work.

A novelty was dressing the orchestra as pirated instead of picking on the ushers.

cut showing the trouser legs, but evidently this is going to be the trade mark cut all over the country to judge from its general use, though one of the things we like most about this farce is that the trousers are not constantly obtruded. Someone less careful than Al Christie could have made a cheap burlesque out of this production, where Christie has held it to excellent taste and it will not offend the most fastidious. There is a mild play on the fact that "Charley's Aunt" is Charlie's brother, but this is scarcely fair to Syd Chaplin who is an actor in his own right and a more versatile player than his better known brother. But by and large this is one of the best examples on this title yet to come in.

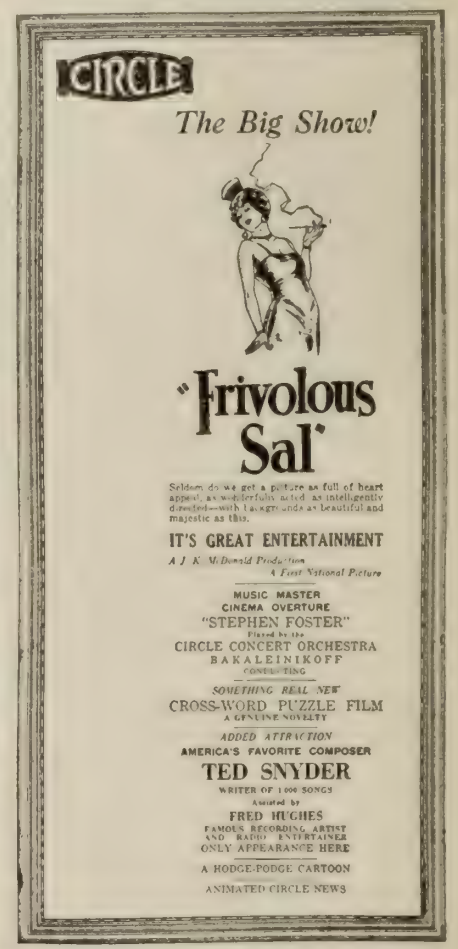
had smeared, the type still would have carried the picture over, for the reverse gets the title up big and the copy supplements the sale. Above all, it was a world-premier, and that was made the top line. Cutting off the space just above the cut level would have left a capital display with only the portrait. Adding the cut sold the scenic appeal strongly, and probably the Capitol felt reasonably secure in its use. As a matter of fact the cut came out better than most newspaper cuts do and had almost the softness of magazine work, so that made for a happy ending. The Blank houses in Des Moines usually get good results, but this is much above the average.

Get the fans out if you want to keep the "fans" through the Summer. Don't wait for July.

A Three Inch Ad in a Six Inch Space

Horizontally this space from the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, is very good. Vertically it is a dead waste of space unless the management feels sorry for the starving newspaper owners and wants to hand him charity in disguise. This space is three columns wide and about thirteen inches deep.



A First National Release

FAR TOO LONG

Counting from the top of the border to the dash below the panel for the main title, the space is eight inches. Four and a quarter inches are given to the smaller features, with the rest for the drop to the bottom of the rule. Using smaller faces in the same proportion this could have been cut an inch or two with actual profit to the appearance of the space, for the all capital lines are far from being attractive to the eye. There must be some good reason for this apparent waste of space, for the Circle uses it regularly, but the only apparent excuse for this waste is that the newspaper needs the money. Running down the column spoils the proportion, and so the appearance, it does not put over the minor items with any greater appeal, and it does waste the cost of twelve or fourteen inches of space; and we presume that Indianapolis gets a fair line rate. This would be wasteful did the space cost twenty cents an inch because it makes for a poor display. It would not be worth reproducing were it not for the use of the white space idea. That's how it gets in.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Schenectady Showman Recalls Tough Times and Pawnbrokers

As Morris Silverman, owner of the Pearl and Happy Hour theatres in Schenectady, N. Y., rakes in the nickels and dimes these days, just as he has been doing for several years past, his thoughts occasionally turn to a few years ago when he pawned his watch in Seattle in order that he might indulge in three meals that could hardly be termed "square."

It's rather an interesting story as to just how Mr. Silverman landed in Seattle. Without any definite idea as to his ultimate destination, he went to the railroad station in Albany, laid down a roll of bills and asked for a ticket as far as the money would carry him. It so happened that the amount was just about what it cost from Albany to Seattle, and so Morris saw a whole lot of country but found himself in the western city without a job and with little or no money. He finally landed a job that lasted but a few days, and later on a pawnbroker in Seattle handed Mr. Silverman a ticket for his "ticker."

It was hard sledding and Mr. Silverman never in the wildest stretch of his imagination refers to those times as "the good old days." Later on he returned east, and he has been located in Schenectady for the past eight years.

You can't blame the three score or more exhibitors of Albany, Troy and Schenectady for looking a bit glum these days. Who wouldn't when daylight saving is scheduled from April 27 on in two of the three cities and a bit later in the third? And they then read in the paper night after night just how many more automobiles are in operation in the three cities than a year ago. There is just one ray of sunshine. There is a new weather man in Albany, and he has been heard to say something about a cold summer.

Pola Negri is wholly charming in her current starring vehicle for Paramount, "The Charmer"

Cornell University and Mrs. A. E. Milligan, who runs the theatre in Schuylerville, are proud of the lad who spent his Easter vacation with his mother. Mrs. Milligan was down in Albany the other day doing a bit of shopping along Film Row and never so much as looking at Easter hats.

George M. Cohan in his palmiest days with his grey derby never had anything on Oscar Perrin of Albany and his latest creation. It's a light fawn color and looks like a million dollars. The other day Mr. Perrin was caught in a sudden rain storm. Talk about being worried! Why, he had more worries than when some opposition house had grabbed off the biggest bet of the year!

Summer is here. Henry C. Kron is opening the Casino in Fleischmanns this week, while word comes from Sharon Springs that Otto Eigen will reopen his house there on May 2. Both places cater to tourists.

L. L. Connors runs the Victory in Cambridge but wouldn't have been a bad bet as a lawyer. The way he argued his case before the Film Board a week ago was a caution. He won out.

There may be a time when W. W. Farley of Albany, head of Farash Theatres, Inc., and William Shirley, general manager of the company, may go it alone, but that time is not yet. And what's more, it looks as though it would never come unless one of the two parted with a good bit of the coin of the realm. The other day Mr. Farley offered Mr. Shirley $75,000 for his share in the company, and then what did Mr. Shirley do but come right back with an offer of $150,000 for Mr. Farley's one-half interest in the company. William Rafferty of Syracuse, like Mr. Shirley, owns a quarter interest but thus far has kept mum.

William Smalley of Cooperstown, whose letter head carries no less than fourteen houses, is at it again and admits that he is negotiating for three more. Incidentally, Mr. Smalley has a couple of dance halls which he will shortly open for the summer, and these paid him so well last year that he remarked a few days ago that he would almost as soon have a chain of dance halls as theatres.

Alice Joyce will be seen next in "Realization," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture directed by Frank Borzage, in which Percy Marmont plays the leading role

Walter Suckno, owning and running the Albany and Regent theatres in Albany, must have a splendid line of talk, judging from the way many a store keeper in the Capital City is co-operating with him. Last week Mr. Suckno displayed cards on a Tom Mix attraction in one store that is so exclusive that they don't even show a tag on goods displayed. The picture went over so well that on the opening day Mr. Suckno stopped selling tickets before 2 p. m. for the matinee.

It's now "Esquire Claude Fish" of Schenectady, for the well known owner of the American was raised to that rank in the Elks last week. But what some of his friends want to know is why he didn't show up on the following day.

Betty Feuer, who runs the Crescent in Schenectady, is but 20 years of age and sometimes her head must fairly swim, what with buying pictures, presiding over the ticket office and doing a thousand and one things. Miss Betty has been busy taking lessons the past week in how to handle a car, and from now on her visits to Albany's Film Row will be behind the wheel of a sedan. The other night while the diminutive miss was busy doling out tickets a youngster appeared and inquired if "a fellow with a red sweater had gone in." Miss Feuer was stumped, but finally the youngster solved the problem by buying a ticket and saying that he would look his friend up inside.

Even though Harmanus Bleecker Hall in Albany is the biggest picture theatre between New York and Buffalo, it isn't large enough to accommodate the crowds these days. Take last Thursday night, for instance, when Jake Golden, the manager, gave more for 25 cents than has ever been offered in the city in the way of entertainment. The house was filled before 7:30, even "nigger heaven" being packed to the rafters. The double features also included an Albany jazz orchestra, a former minstrel star in songs, and four or five amateur acts.

J. M. Moran is no longer connected with the Opera House in Coxsackie. The reins will be handled by his brother.

Business held up exceptionally well in a great many theatres in this section during Easter Week and Good Friday. William Smalley is authority for the statement that business in his fourteen theatres ran 30 per cent. on Good Friday over receipts for the same day a year ago. This year he played the best possible pictures during the week and declared that he had found the idea a paying one.

Although negotiations are pending between M. E. Silberstein of the Community Theatre and William Smalley, who also has a house in Catskill, they have reached nowhere up to the present time. Mr. Smalley says he has his price but thus far Mr. Silberstein hasn't reached it. Mr. Smalley has recently installed William F. Remmers as manager of his house in Mohawk.

As a committee to draft new by-laws, five well known exhibitors have been named to accomplish this for the Albany Zone Committee. The five are Meyer Schine of Gloversville, Louis Buettner of Cohees, Uly S. Hill of Troy, W. W. Farley of Schenectady and Robert Wagner of Little Falls. They also will settle the questions of how often the committee is to meet, what day and possible further zoning.

The only difference between Mary and Margy Angus, twins who played in Monta Bell's production, "Lady of the Night," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is that one has a beauty spot on her left shoulder and Monta Bell can't remember whether that one is Mary or Margy

Although Meyer Friedman is no longer connected in official capacity with Farash Theatres of Schenectady, he has turned a nimble hand to real estate of late and also many a nimble dollar.

Congratulations to you, William Shirley and Mrs. Shirley as well, upon your thirteenth wedding anniversary! A lot of Mr. and Mrs. Shirley's friends attended an affair at the State Theatre the other night after the evening show, and then Mayor William Campbell did his part by performing a mock marriage.

Last Saturday was the red letter day at the Mark Strand in Albany, with the Girl Scouts of the city, who had ushered the past winter at the Junior Movies, as guests of honor. Uly S. Hill, managing director of the theatre, donated the house and the picture. Subscribers to the Junior Movies, which included many of the elite of the city, had over 600 children from the various orphanages as their guests.

Buffalo, N. Y.

A contract has been let to the Rowland Corporation of Kenmore, N. Y., for the erection of a theatre and business building in Delaware avenue between Chapel and Landers roads. Work will begin immediately and the house is expected to open in the fall. It will seat 1800. There will also be a public hall seating 900, bowling alleys and sixteen stores. The cost will be $300,00. The stock in the building corporation is being taken mostly by Kenmore people, the plan being to make it a community theatre.

Manager Ray S. Averill is starting something entirely new at the Olympic Theatre, Buffalo. On April 27 he will inaugurate a complete noon hour show, when a program of pictures will be given from 12 to 1 o'clock, with a special admission price of 10 and 15 cents.

Notice that the Liberty Theatre property on East Erie avenue, Corning, N. Y., has been put on the market for sale, has been announced by Elmer G. Dodds, Corning representative of the Schine Theatrical Corporation, owner of the house. The building on the property was badly damaged by fire last December.

John Stevens, formerly associated with Schine, is now manager of the Elk Theatre, Buffalo. This house has just been sold by M. Minuse, who has gone to Florida for his health. The deal involved some $30,000.

John E. McAuley of Chicago, inventor of the latest Peerless reflector arc lamp, was in Buffalo, for a visit with Al Becker of the Becker Theatre Supply Company last week end. Messrs Becker and McAuley journeyed to Dunkirk, N. Y. to demonstrate the lamp at the Regent Theatre. H. P. Lally was so enthusiastic over the invention that he ordered four of them for his houses in Dunkirk.

Fred M. Zimmerman has installed two new Simplex machines, two Superlite lenses and one new Dalite screen in his popular Avondale Theatre in North Tonawanda, N. Y.

E. Price of the Aurora Theatre, East Aurora, N. Y., has ordered the following equipment for this new Roycroft town house. Two Powers improved machines, two Peerless low intensity arc control lamps, one Hertner transverter-generator, one Raven screen, two Superlite lenses and ticket machines. Haywood-Wakefield seats will be installed. The Becker Theatre Supply Company installed the booth equipment. The house will open in May.

Jim Cardino, owner of the Varsity and Kensington, Buffalo, and his brother, Thomas, have purchased the famous Williamsville Glen, a picturesque property which has been a favorite picnic and recreation spot for years. Jim also owns the Glen Theatre in Williamsville at the entrance to the Glen.

George C. Sarvis, manager of the Library Theatre in Warren, Pa., and Miss Ann Jane Healy, aged 24, also of Warren, who were seriously injured when the auto in which they were riding crashed into a tree on the Warren-Irvine road, are reported as having a good chance to recover.

A series of special programs for the children will be inaugurated at the Eastman Theatre, Rochester on April 25. The purpose behind these programs, which will be given every Saturday morning, is to provide, at a very low cost, pictures selected for juvenile entertainment.

Charley Hayman of the Strand and Cataract, Niagara Falls, N. Y., has arranged with the Duo-Art Film Company of Rochester to make an industrial review of the city of Niagara Falls.

Joe Schuchert, Jr., manager of the Columbia and Colonial, Buffalo, did a brody off the plank at the Buffalo Athletic Club the other day and landed on his face. Result: Two black eyes.

Massachusetts

The Premier Theatre in Fall River, Mass., rebuilt by William J. Dunn at a cost of $100,000, opened recently. It had been closed for over six years. There are approximately 1,000 seats. The policy will be first-run photoplays.

Harry I. Wasserman, manager of the Roxbury Theatre in Roxbury, has been active in theatrical circles in that city for fourteen years. He has been commended by various women's clubs and churches for his methods of operating his amusement enterprises. His friends in and out of the show business are legion.

A newly chartered amusement enterprise is the American Theatre, Inc., of Boston, which will engage in the picture business. The capital is $1,000, no par value shares. The incorporators are Alice J. Thatcher of Jamaica Plain and Hamilton MacFadden and Grafton L. Wilson of Cambridge.

William C. McNaughton, formerly manager of the Strand Theatre in Norwich and Strand Theatre in Waterbury, Conn., has been named manager of the Hyannis Theatre at Hyannis. Louis Aronofsky is owner of the Hyannis.

Charles Baldwin, former owner of the Colonial and Scenic theatres in Keene, N. H., paid a visit to Boston on his way home after a three months' vacation in Florida. Although he has disposed of his amusement houses in Keene, Mr. Baldwin does not intend to let any grass grow under his feet so far as being a provider of entertainment fare. He'll be back in business soon because Charlie is one of those regular "go-getters."

James H. Doyle is one of Boston's busiest exhibitors and likewise among the most popular. He is not an unfamiliar figure in state politics, having been at one time a state senator. Mr. Doyle is manager and part owner of the Broadway Theatre in South Boston. But that's not his only amusement enterprise for he also is actively identified with the Waldorf and Central Square theatres in Waltham.

Edward F. Cassell has purchased the buildings housing the following film exchanges in Boston: Federal Films at 46 Piedmont street; Grand-Arrow Films at 54-58 Piedmont street; Fox Film Corporation at 78-90 Broadway; Pathe Film Company at 39 Church street. Mr. Cassell resold the Fox building to David Jacobs.

Patrick Crogan of the Empire Theatre in North Adams has been called to Springfield where his son, Leonard, is seriously ill.

Courtesy and service is the keynote at the box office of E. M. Loew's Capitol Theatre in Lynn. But that's nothing surprising for its occupant is Miss Rose Finkle. She has been at the Capitol for more than a year and has a speaking acquaintance with all of the "steady" patrons.

Minnesota

Marguerite Clark Rathje of the Rex Theatre, Valley City, N. D., has been named a winner in an amateur song writing contest conducted by WCCO, Minneapolis radio station. The winning number was "Love's Melody," a waltz. There were 1,000 entries.

The city council at Renville, Minn., went on record last week as opposed to Sunday closing. The vote was 3 to 2 for keeping the theatres open.

Ground was broken this week for a new 800-seat suburban house which will be built in North Minneapolis by H. A. Jeub. The theatre will cost $80,000.

Regional meetings are being arranged by W. A. Steffes to further his new theatre circuit—Allied Theatres. Just now Thomas Burke, general manager of the circuit, and Frank Workman and Art Johnson are in the field trying to induce exhibitors to join the chain.

The Rialto Theatre in Torrington was opened by John D. Sullo on March 30.

Hartford's newest photoplay theatre has been named the Lennox and will be opened early in May. It is understood that Jack Sanson, now manager of the Lyric Theatre, Hartford, will take charge of the new house. The theatre seats 900.

Edward Raffile, popular manager of the Globe Theatre in New Haven, has turned it into a first-run house. Ye scribe always recalls the Globe with pleasure as the house having an excellent organ and organist.

Walter Donovan has disposed of his interest in the Cameo Theatre, West Haven. He has resumed the practice of his former profession as an architect.

John McCarthy, former manager of Poli's Plaza Theatre in Bridgeport has been named manager of Poli's Theatre in Meriden.

Louis Tunick and J. Fuchs of Port Chester, N. Y., have opened the Empire Theatre in Bridgeport. It has been closed for nearly a year.

David H. Brand of Roxbury, Mass., is the new owner of the Cameo Theatre in Bridgeport, which now is being operated by Universal.

Canada

During the week of April 13, the usual N. V. A. collections were made at the B. F. Keith Theatre, Ottawa, permission being granted by Manager J. M. Franklin for the collection of money among patrons at every performance for the vaudeville actors' organization. An unusual incident occurred in connection with this procedure at one performance when some unknown patron placed a handsome solid gold ring on the plate as it passed around.

"The Lightning Switch" was the title of a special musical potpourri which was played by the concert orchestra of the Hippodrome Theatre, Toronto, during Easter Week. This unique overture was arranged by Jack Arthur, general supervisor of music for Famous Players Canadian Corporation, the arrangement consisting of a combination of a few familiar bars from many different operas, classical airs, popular songs and other selections, all blending into a picturesque whole. Further interest was achieved through the offer by Mr. Arthur of a special assortment of prizes, the first being a three months pass at the Hippodrome, to those who guessed the largest number of pieces included in the musical ensemble.

Cincinnati

Cracksmen and hijackers seem to take delight in "picking" on Gus Shifus, manager of the Strand Theatre, Springfield, Ohio. On two occasions Shifus has been commanded to "stick 'em up," which requests were accompanied by the flourishing of six-shooters on the part of the bandits. Now his office safe has been robbed of $600 by burglars who gained entrance to his office during the night.

George Shaffer, theatre magnate of Wheeling, W. Va., will begin immediate construction of his $325,000 theatre at Steubenville, Ohio. It will be of brick and stone, with a stone facade modeled after the Spanish type and two ornamental Spanish mission towers on the front of the building. A set of chimes will be placed in the towers and the playing of these chimes will be a daily feature. The house will seat 2,200.

Manager Cliff Boyd of the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, announces a reduced scale of admission prices at his house. The revised schedule is 25 and 40 cents up to 6 p. m. on week days. After 6 p. m., as also on Sundays and holidays, the old scale of prices, namely, 30 and 50 cents, will prevail.

Billy James, head of the James Amusement Enterprises, Columbus, Ohio, has returned from an extended trip to Hot Springs, Ark., James being one of a party consisting of Gus Sun, Pete Harris, John Connors and P. P. Crabill.

W. O. Kirk, who has been looking after the Opera House at Williamsburg, Ohio, for a number of years, has disposed of it to D. K. Crist, who is now in active charge.

John H. Kunsky, Lew Cohen, Bert Williams and George Guise, motion picture men, were instrumental in the success of the National Vaudeville Association Fund entertainment in Detroit.

Kansas

It remained for a Chicago exchange manager, R. C. Seery of First National, to come to Kansas City for a visit just in time to win the exhibitor and inter-exchange golf tournament, played over the Excelsior Springs course last week. With a net score of 83, he having a handicap of 15, Mr. Seery led a field of about twenty contestants and was awarded a silver trophy. C. W. Allen, Vitagraph manager at Kansas City, was runner-up with a net score of 85, while C. E. Gregory, Metro-Goldwyn branch manager, won the blind hole event, the prize being a driver. "Bill" Warner of First National, who topped the field in the blind bogey event, was awarded a mashie.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City territory last week were: D. Filizola, Empress, Fort Scott, Kas., Lawrence Brenninger, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; George Shelton, Star, Warrensburg, Mo.; Glenn Dickinson, Dickinson chain of theatres, Lawrence, Kas.; Charles Sears, Sears Circuit, Nevada, Mo.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas.; S. E. Wilhoit, Jefferson, Springfield, Mo.

Improvements on two theatres in the Kansas City territory were announced this week. The Columbia Theatre, Junction City, Kas., will be improved extensively, according to Glenn Dickinson, manager, who also operates the City and Cozy theatres of that town. F. G. Weary, owner of the Farris Theatre, Richmond, Mo., will remodel his theatre at a cost of $10,000, including waiting rooms on the second floor, and plans to enlarge the lobby.

Pittsburgh

George Riester, for several months manager of Harry Davis' Schenley Theatre, last week resigned to take up his new duties on the managerial force of the Rowland and Clark Theatres. Mr. Riester has been assigned to the Manor in the Squirrel Hill district, succeeding W. J. Bernardi. Mr. Riester is well-known here, having come to Pittsburgh over a year ago to take charge of the Cameo in downtown Pittsburgh. This position he resigned to manage the Victoria at Altoona, which house he left to open the Schenley some months ago for Harry Davis. J. Harry Hayward, now at the Lyric, Pittsburgh, also a Davis house, will be in charge of the Schenley until a permanent manager is selected.

The Triangle, East Liberty, owned by the Nate Friedberg interests, during the week of April 13, celebrated its fifth birthday anniversary. Publicity Director Will Davis got out a special souvenir program in honor of the occasion and the theatre was beautifully decorated.

Gerald Gallagher is the new manager of the Cameo in downtown Pittsburgh, having taken up his new duties on April 13, succeeding W. J. Nelson, who is to be transferred to another Universal theatre in this part of the country. Mr. Gallagher, although but 26 years of age, which makes him the youngest theatre manager in the city, has had eleven years of experience in the business. He was most recently general manager of the Piccadilly in New York. At one time he was Montreal correspondent for Moving Picture World.

California

Quick work on the part of Manager W. N. Feehan of the Strand Theatre, Berkeley, Cal., probably prevented a panic on the evening of April 11, when the film "So Big" caught fire and was destroyed. At the first sign of trouble patrons began making for the exits, but Manager Feehan stepped to the stage and advised that there was no danger. Patrons were given tickets for another evening, or had their money refunded. Clarence Foster, projectionist, made a heroic attempt to extinguish the blaze and the only loss was to the film.

The picture house being erected at Hayward, Cal., by Charles Heyer is the first steel frame structure to be erected in that city.

The old Novelty Theatre at Suisun, Cal., has been remodeled and reopened as the Arlington Theatre.

Seattle

C. M. Dunn, owner of a circuit of houses in Cle Elum, Roslyn and Mabton, has purchased the Grand Theatre, Renton, Wash., from Marie Connolley, who plans to go to California. Mr. Dunn is one of the old timers, dating back twelve years or more. He has witnessed many changes during the years but has always adhered to his policy of offering a good, clean, well balanced show, such as would please the average man or woman, and has built up his three houses on these principles, from failing ventures when he acquired them to substantial and successful theatres with an excellent patronage. W. G. Whitfield, principal of the Roslyn High School, an experienced theatrical man with a pleasing personality, will be active manager of the Grand, which will continue to operate at the former price of 10 and 25 cents. An occasional good vaudeville number, extra feature attractions, etc., will lend variety to the bill, and in all probability some remodeling will be done during the summer.

The New Theatre at Greene Park, Wash., built to replace the Camp Lewis Theatre which burned about a year ago, is scheduled to open about May 1. It will seat around 1,100 and cost $20,000. Merchants of the community backed the investment, covering building and construction, and the United States Government is seating and equipping the house.

J. P. Bertram of the Vaudette Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., has sold the house to W. P. Layport.

George E. Bessenger will have his Madrona Garden Theatre open by about May 2. It is a charming suburban house and will have an attractive garden lobby effect.

E. G. ("Dad") Abbott of Sedro Woolley, Wash., is busy furbishing his house. He is reflooring and redraping the lobby, redecorating the house in Egyptian style, and is installing a fine Kimball organ.

The Liberty, Seattle, has completed installation of two of the latest type Simplex projectors equipped with the new Peerless Reflecting arc lamps. This new Peerless feature was received at B. F. Shearer's a week ago, and only two were received, but within the week eighteen have been sold. The Liberty, one of the largest Jensen & Von Herberg houses, grabbed the original two. LeRoy Johnson is the Liberty's manager.

A. E. Zable, manager of the Liberty and Ray theatres in Olympia, Wash., was in Seattle this week for the first time in several months.

C. F. Weskill of the Rose, Colfax, Wash., also was a visitor, as was Doc Johnson of the Lois Theatre, Toppenish, Wash.

William Roach, owner of the Selwood Theatre in suburban Portland, has taken over the new house now being completed in the Division Street district. It will seat 650.

A. Swan of Silverdale, Wash., has acquired the Rex, Poulsbo, and is having it remodeled. This will furnish competition to J. M. Almos' Almo Theatre.

Suburban theatres appear to be providing a wide variety of diversions for their patrons these days. W. L. Steele of the Queen Anne Theatre co-operated with the Community Club "Minute Women" in staging a lavish fashion show. Funds went to swell the building fund for the Minute Women's new clubhouse.

Messrs. Danz and Strauss of the Hollywood entertained patrons to an S. R. O. with a wedding on the stage during Easter Week.

Mr. and Mrs. John Hamrick are back from California and report a most delightful time.

Associated Exhibitors

BROADWAY BROKE. Star cast. Just a program picture and a rather fair one at that. Tone, okay. Audience appeal, you can't tell. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

GOING UP. (5,886 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Here is a picture that will make them all laugh. First MacLean picture ever run here and sure took. A comedy old and young will enjoy. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. E. F. Gick, Pastime Theatre, Moundridge, Kansas.

LONE WOLF. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. Not so good, just a fair program show. Drawn out too much. Did not please. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes city of 12,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre (500 seats), Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

RACING LUCK. (5 reels). Star, Monty Banks. This is very good, will please any audience. Went over good with me, but no crowd. This is a twin picture to "The Speed Spook." Fair tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes city of 12,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre (500 seats), Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

RUPERT OF HENTZAU. Star cast. Not a bad picture. Fair as costume kind goes, but my crowd stays out if the paper even suggests an old style cast. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

F. B. O.

BROKEN LAWS. (6,413 feet). Star, Mrs. Wallace Reid. Good picture of its kind. Percy Marmount very good. It has a dream ending. Some liked it while a few had kicks. Patrons said good lesson taught. Good appeal. Tone, good. Good for Sunday. Print new. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

BREED OF THE BORDER. (4,920 feet). Star, "Lefty" Flynn. No better than his first two but will get by. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. L. H. Greife, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

DAYTIME WIVES. (6,651 feet). Star cast. Fair enough I guess for program. Nothing big but audience seemed to like it. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

FOOLS IN THE DARK. (7 reels). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. A good comedy drama with lots of real comedy. Tom Wilson plays the negro part so you know it's good. Very god entertainment. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

FORBIDDEN CARGO. (4,850 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. Lots of action, battles and thrills, but for some reason this is not as good as "Midnight Molly" or "Silk Stocking Sal," the story is weak and Miss Brent does not register as she should, however, F. B. O. are not selling it for a special and it was worth all they charged me for it. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Has some audience appeal. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

GALLOPING VENGEANCE. Star, Bob Custer. Just a fair western with the usual story and nothing more. This will please where audiences are fond of westerns. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST. (6,500 feet). Star cast. You'll be surprised at the drawing power of this one. It did more for us than many widely tooted specials but it would have done more had they liked it better. Just a fair picture but book is well known. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

IN FAST COMPANY. Star, Richard Talmadge. Excellent action picture that is intelligently made and worth playing. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. High audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MASK OF LOPEZ. (4,900 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Real good western. Thomson getting more popular each time. Everybody pleased. All classes town of 4,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. R. L. Newell, Indelhour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

MILLIONAIRE COWBOY. Star, Lefty Flynn. A fair western that will get by where they like western pictures. F. B. O. has some nice little program westerns in these pictures. Special, no. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

ON TIME. (6,030 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Just a fair picture. Have used quite a few Talmadge pictures and liked them but thought this the poorest of the lot, however, some said good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Small town and farmer class town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

PERILS OF PARIS. Star, Pearl White. Will get by as a change but nothing extra, not as good as the other Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation picture "After the Ball." Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, not much. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. When you get a date on this in the old booking book, step on it for all you have for this is a knockout, my hard-boiled bunch of fans came out demanding to know the exact day and date of the next Thomson feature. This is the best Thomson to date, I know because I have run them all. Has a good story, lots of action, comedy, in fact everything needed to make a fine picture, which it is. If F. B. O. keeps Fred Thomson in these kind of stories for the balance of the series, he will sure be a life saver for the exhibitor. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre, Osage, Oklahoma.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,015 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A very good western program picture that pleased one hundred per cent with its many thrills and the good acting of bred and his equine pal, Silver King. For the boys who have a western night, the Thomson's are the pictures to book. Even the "intelligents" gave this picture their grudging praise. Very thrilling bull fight in last reel that made 'em yell. Tone, fair. Sunday, dunno. Special, no. Audience appeal, just one hundred per cent. Mixed class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

YOUTH AND ADVENTURE. (5,000 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Played this on Good Friday, and brought in enough money to pay all salaries for the week. Talmadge sure does pull strong here. Print new. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Great audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star, George Billings. Positively wonderful. The kind of pictures that help the industry. Business nearly as good as "Covered Wagon." School dismissed for matinee. Tone, okay.

Sunday, yes. Absolutely suitable for special. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. L. H. Greife, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star cast. A complete flop for which I am surprised. It is a picture that all Americans ought to see. For my opinion it is well directed and played. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Miners town of 2,500. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

BELL BOY 13. (3,940 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Not as good possibly as the "Hottentot" but will nevertheless please. Too short. Douglas MacLean continues his sterling work. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five percent. Higher and rural class town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theater (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alamaba.

CHASTITY. Star cast. Very ordinary without one single scene to redeem it. Tone, okay. Sunday, questionable. Audience appeal, questionable. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

DANGEROUS MAID. (7,337 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Terribly boresome. Wonder who started this costume picture bunk anyhow? Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. No audience appeal whatever. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-15, 20-25, 30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

FLOWING GOLD. (8,005 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A very fine picture. Story very good depicting the adventures of a wanderer when he hits a new oil country. Very entertaining. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

HER HUSBAND'S SECRET. (6,150 feet). Star cast. Just another feature, it will satisfy those not too critical. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

HER TEMPORARY HUSBAND. (6,722 feet). Star, Sylvia Breamer. One of those senseless, out of the ordinary comedy dramas that everybody likes for no apparent reason. Good entertainment. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fine audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

HER TEMPORARY HUSBAND. (6,722 feet). Star cast. Corking good society comedy that pleases the women as well as the men. It's a genuinely good bit of entertainment. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. High audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HUSBANDS AND LOVERS. (7,883 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. A very true to life drama of married life. Stone, as usual contributing a fine bit of work. Miss Vidor is very good as the wife and very easy to look at. All in all, a good picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

I WANT MY MAN. Star, Doris Kenyon. Starts out rather draggy, but picks up and gives fine satisfaction. Everyone I asked said they liked it fine, drew fair. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

JEALOUS HUSBANDS. (6,500 feet). Star, Ben Alexander. A fine picture with an all star cast. Ben Alexander great and so are the others in cast. Exhibitors will not be disappointed with this one. Excellent tone. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Higher and rural class town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

KID. Star, Charles Chaplin. I played this old timer again and had as good a Sunday and Monday as I ever had in the house. They like Chaplin pictures, no matter how old. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

MAN OF ACTION. (5 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. Good picture and business. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Georgia.

MIGHTY LAK A ROSE. (8,036 feet). Star cast. Good for highbrow. Business very good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Georgia.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A fine picture but took a flop in my town. One reason, trailer hurt my business on account of showing too much fighting. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. L. H. Greife, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star, Milton Sills. It is an attractive picture. Will draw them and please them. A good one for any theatre. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners town of 2,500. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter Pennsylvania.

Fox

CIRCUS COWBOY. (6,400 feet). Star, Charles Jones. The best of Jones to my opinion and others who saw it told me the same. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Miners town of 2,500. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

DEADWOOD COACH. (6,346 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Played this a week to big business, despite strong opposition. This is an exceptional Mix picture. General class city of 30,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

DEADWOOD COACH. (6,346 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Here is one that will bring the Mix fans in and will have the others coming for curiosity and will certainly satisfy. Good box office title and tone good. Sunday a little too rough. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DESERT OUTLAW. (5,932 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A blazing story of the cowboys trails and Buck as the handcuff king of the cowboys. Evelyn Brent in the cast. Good little actress. She made quite a hit in my town in "Silk Stocking Sal." Tone good. Sunday, no. Print new. R. A. Preuse, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Without a doubt the best "production" Tom Mix has ever made but the fans expect to see him in his usual garb. Tone, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 feet). Star, Peggy Shaw. These are the kind of pictures that go over good, mostly anywhere as it is a real snappy picture with lots of action and full of good clean comedy and a real good horse race at the end. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

MAN WHO CAME BACK. (8,272 feet). Star, George O'Brien. One of Fox's best productions. My patrons well pleased with it but did not do so well on it. Working conditions not good here now. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Pleased audience. All classes city of 12,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

MAN WHO WON. Star, Dustin Farnum. While a few were pleased, the majority were firmly of the opinion that this was rather poor entertainment. One sarcastic customer asked me if this picture had been made for the feeble-minded. I was just going to answer, "No, sir— nothing of the kind: this was made for jackasses," but meekly refrained. City 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MAN'S MATE. (6 reels). Star, John Gilbert. All right for program at program price. Enough action to carry it through. Nothing big or extraordinary. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

NO MOTHER TO GUIDE HER. (7 reels). Star, Genevieve Tobin. Good program picture bought from Fox as a special. Put on at program prices and had good attendance but made no money owing to high price, paid to Bill Fox. This picture was pleasing, however, and teaches a good moral in an interesting manner. Heard no kicks and all seemed well satisfied. Tone, fair. Sunday,

Exhibitor Asks Help in Crisis

"Some of the folks in this town think there is a pot of gold in the movie business, and are agitating for a Community picture show in their Town Hall; the idea being to take the license now held by theatre, close same, and have a monopoly—profits of which are to go to the town.

"If any of the gang have been up against this proposition would like to hear how they combated this danger to privately owned picture enterprise.

"Thanking you in advance. One of 'Our Gang'."

yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

OH YOU TONY. (6,802 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A little better than the usual Mix pictures but he is beginning to lose out here. Not the drawing card he used to be. Print good. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Not suitable for special. Fair audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

PAINTED LADY. (6,936 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Picture starts off rather slow but goes great after third reel. George O'Brien has a million dollar smile if he'd only use it. This picture is good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Railroad and farm class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. Ralph Saffer, Pastime Theatre, Manchester, New York.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star cast. Not a special by any means, an ordinary program picture. Sunday, no. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

SHEPHERD KING. (8,500 feet). Star cast. Slow type religious picture made in some foreign land as all stars were unknown. However, the actor playing the stellar role did some fine acting. Tied up with churches on this one and had ordinary attendance. This picture made by an American company with American actors would have been much better. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, just fair. Mixed class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

STAR DUST TRAIL. (4,686 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Nice little picture. All my patrons seemed pleased. Ran one night to good crowd. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 4,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

TEMPLE OF VENUS. (8 reels). Star cast. Some thought it good while others thought the opposite. Didn't show so well at the box office either. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Buck Jones is a good actor and why star him with Lucy Fox. This picture will bring them in but his leading lady is a poor bet. Give Buck good supporting players. He deserves them. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WINNER TAKES ALL. (5,949 feet). Star, Charles Jones. Very good well liked by nearly all my patrons. In my judgment one of Jone's best. If Fox would keep on making this calibre of shows they would be making one hundred per cent. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience well pleased. All classes city of 12,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Metro-Goldwyn

BREAD. (6,726 feet). Star cast. A mighty good picture that failed to draw but it did please most of those who saw it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. High audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A wonderful picture for the "high brows," but no good for a small town. Got just enough to pay for the picture. Average specials mean nothing in a small town with a daily change. How do we know? Costly experience. Good tone. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

SIX DAYS. (8,010 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Very good. A great deal like "Three Weeks," in fact, I think it is a better picture. However didn't draw any more at box-office. Tone, questionable. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

THREE AGES. (5,500 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Our patrons didn't rave over this one nor did any crowds throng our doors to see it. The general opinion was that it was a rather mediocre production and I know I was oversold on it. City 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

THREE WEEKS. (7,500 feet). Star, Aileen Pringle. The print we received was scissored unmercifully and for this reason we had several complaints. Its admitted that in the shape we had it the picture seemed weak and jumpy; and business was off during its entire run. City 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

UNSEEING EYES. (8,300 feet). Star, Lionel Barrymore. A northern production that was everything that could be expected. Scenery, cast, action, splendid. All Goldwyn pictures are good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

WINE OF YOUTH. (6,600 feet). Star, Eleanor Boardman. A very good "jazz" picture. Starts off slowly but picks up and has a fine climax. It teaches a wonderful lesson. Acting of entire cast very good. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw mixed class, town 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

WINE OF YOUTH. (6,600 feet). Star cast. One of the best pictures I have ever run; it's hot as a fire-cracker from start to finish; or, I should have said, from then until now. It pleased the people one hundred per cent. because it is up to date and that is what they want. Film in good shape; picture clear. Town of 3,000. No for Sunday. Roy McAmis, Princess Theatre, Sayre, Oklahoma.

Paramount

A MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A good program picture and where you run it as such it will please. Dick is the only man to take the late Wally Reid's place, and is very popular. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Appeal 85 per cent. Draw from industrial center, 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,970 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Cortez has got Valentino tied to a post, believe me this fellow is a comer. He has the face and personality that give the ladies a great flutter. Bebe is good in any picture, but is better in the bluebeard type. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,970 feet). Stars, Daniels, Cortez. A pretty fair picture but not big. Did not do well at the box office. Nicely produced. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Draw better class, city 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BACHELOR DADDY. Star, Thomas Meighan. This is as fine a picture as one could ask for. It should draw well for you if you only let the people know how good it is in advance of the showing. We had several comments on the picture. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth D. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This one is fine, as all of Swanson's are. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Draw small town class, town 3,300. Admission 15-20. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

CITY THAT NEVER SLEEPS. (6,087 feet). Star cast. Extra good. Pleased them all here. You cannot go wrong on this. Boost it. Virgnia Lee Corbin extra fine. Hope to go out in California and oh how much pleasure it would be to meet her. I am living in hopes. Other Paramount stars great. Fine moral picture. Will please all. Step on it. Bought right. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

CITY THAT NEVER SLEEPS. (6,087 feet). Star cast. A very entertaining little story

If Guy C. Sawyer sees this let's hope he'll know "Our Gang" is missing him and his good tips—they always had a tang.

The same thing goes for Adolph Schutz, Stan Chambers and some more who sent their tips dependable. Boys, come in, as before.

produced and directed in Paramount's best manner. Not very fast, but we had no complaints. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

COMING THROUGH. Star, Thomas Meighan. Meighan in a new type of story which while it is very good, it does not suit him like "Back Home and Broke," etc. A very thrilling story of a mining camp involved. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, good. Town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. W. Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California

COMING THROUGH. (6,522 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. About the usual Meighan picture and went over fine. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

CONTRABAND. (6,773 feet). Star cast. This is a very entertaining little play with the free boldfaced "Covered Wagon" boy in an important part and Lois Wilson handles the lead very nicely. People enjoyed this picture a lot. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star cast. Enough has been said of this one. One of the very best attractions on the market today. Strong educational appeal. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Higher and rural class town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). This is a good western picture, rather drawn out and too highly advertised. People come expecting too much when a picture is advertised as this one has been. Draw from all classes, town of 1,312. Admission 25-50. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (404 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Fairly interesting story. Tom Moore carries away the honors with his fine bit of acting. In my opinion, Bebe is not much of an actress. Will please as a usual program offering. Tone O. K. Appeal fair. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Draw mixed class, town 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

DAWN OF A TOMORROW. (6,084 feet). Star cast. Very good picture. This one went over good, but not worth very much. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25, special, 15-30. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

DEVIL'S CARGO. Star cast. Drama of California in gold rush days. Action slow getting under way, but last two reels are sure good. Wallace Beery runs away with the picture. Good cast, however. Tone, bad in places. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Audience appeal, good. Town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. W. Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star cast. Reports on this one from every place have been very poor. Still we got over well with it and made some money. The picture is true in so much as we are all more or less reformers until it comes to reform ourselves. Tone, only fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. All classes town of 5,000. Admission 25-50. C. E. Matlock, Rivoli Theatre (815 seats), Pendleton, Oregon.

DRESSMAKER FROM PARIS. (7,080 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. Not a strong picture but in connection with a style show with local stores went over big and pleased everyone. Tone fair. Sunday yes, and special yes if used in connection with a style show! Town 9,237. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smooths, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Usual stuff and no improvement on her former stuff. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, okay. Oil field town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

EMPTY HANDS. (6,976 feet). Stars, Holt-Shearer. A snappy show that is rather a risky proposition. If you show it to a lot of churchgoers. It is pretty good program stuff if they like this type. Tone fair. Appeal good. Not a Sunday or special proposition. Better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theater (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FAST SET. (6,965 feet). Star, Eliott Dexter. This picture was very good and held the interest to the end. It was not a drawing card, and on a two day run just broke even. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Only fair attendance. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. Friday and Saturday. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star cast. Picture good but didn't take. Good crowd first night but they didn't come back. There must be something wrong when they don't. General class town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Thtatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star cast.

Jill Lynn as "Dardy" in Vitagraph's "School for Wives," produced by Victor Hugo Halperin

This is not so good. Too long for the story and though it had some beautiful scenes and a good cast they can't keep the crowd interested for ten reels. Tone, fair. Perhaps it is suitable for Sunday. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

FEMALE. (6,176 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Nothing to rave over. Just about passable. Will please where Miss Compson is a favorite. Didn't hear any comments one way or the other, so I guessed it got by. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class city of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GO-GETTER. (7,771 feet). Star, T. Roy Barnes. This Cappy Ricks picture is good, but not quite as good as the story itself I thought. Tone, okay. Sunday, probably. Good audience appeal. Village and rural class town of 400. Admission 25-15, 30-15. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

GOLDEN BED. (8,584 feet). Star cast, Nothing to rave over. Is a special but nothing extraordinary or sensational. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Fair audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

GREAT IMPERSONATION. Star, James Kirkwood. A mighty good feature. One all will like. Step on it. A good Saturday night program. Tone fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. Rural and small town class, town of 850. Admission 10-25. Star Theatre (200 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. The first Swanson picture that I absolutely fell flat on. I believe the reason is that the public is sick and bored to death with these Balkan Kingdom stories. Since "The Prisoner of Zenda" we have had them in all kinds of disguises; all today people are ready to stone an exhibitor for showing this backward stuff. Old patrons told me it was the poorest Swanson picture I have ever shown and I have shown them all. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Not up to expectations, although Gloria does some fine work in a role entirely different to her. The story drags terribly and fans will consider it as one of her poorer ones. Too much sob stuff. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Now Booking

Jack Perrin has been signed as a new Rayart star to appear in six "Whirlwind Westerns" produced by Harry Webb

LOCKED DOORS. (6,621 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Betty seems to be slipping lately, but Theodore Roberts is very popular so this picture went over nicely and was well liked. Tone, okay. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

MANHATTAN. (6,415 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This is Dix's first starring picture and I would say that it will please his fans. Contains some good comedy and lots of action. Not a special, but one not to be afraid of. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday and no as special. Draw mixed class, town 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MONTMARTRE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. Had this bought a long time ago and when I saw it in a city I was certainly disgusted with it, and put the date way off. At least I played it. Not one redeeming feature in it. A picture that will take a flop anywhere. All foreign cast, poor direction, the bunk and am surprised that Paramount would distribute such a picture as "Montmartre. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

NEW LIVES FOR OLD. (6,796 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A very good war picture. Will please the majority. Betty Compson does not draw well with us, but this story put her across this time. Tone good. Appeal good. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

NEW LIVES FOR OLD. (6,796 feet). Star, Betty Compson. This is one of the best pictures she has ever made. I recommend it to the world. It is a good story and a well directed picture. It will show to about twenty five per cent. as many people as "Sainted Devil"—and will please about twice as many. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

NEXT CORNER. (7,081 feet). Star cast. A very good picture but it didn't draw; title is against it, it certainly has nothing to do with the picture. Worth showing for a week. Tone good. Appeal 85 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw factory class, town 2,-800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. "North of 36" pleased our patrons equal to "The Covered Wagon" while it won't gross as much at the box-office will do better than the average special. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 5,000. Admission 25-50. C. E. Matlock, Rivoli Theatre (815 seats), Pendleton, Oregon.

OLD HOMESTEAD. Star, Theodore Roberts. A good "meller" that didn't do quite the big business that I thought it would, judging from its rep. Fair tone, good appeal. Probably suitable for Sunday. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. This is a beautiful picture. It seems to appeal to all ages and classes and everyone seems to enjoy seeing it though it is apt to be a different crowd than your regular movie fans in your house when you show it. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Family audience appeal. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

SACKCLOTH AND SCARLET. (6,732 feet). Star, Alice Terry. Pleased one hundred per cent. Pictures like this with a good moral in them are always good. Very well acted feature. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Broke all records second night. My how they piled in. Good picture. Good name with pulling power. That's what we need. Better names and advertising. General class town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (7,912 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. This proved to be a fair program picture. Rental too high to make anything on a two-day run. Just broke even. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty-eight per cent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House Theatre (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A real feature sure to go good anywhere. Wish had some more like this Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, Calif.

TOO MANY KISSES. (5,750 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This is an exceptionally clever comedy. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Pathe

KING OF WILD HORSES. (5 reels). Star, Rex (horse). For some reason did not draw. Good novelty picture that pleased. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,369. Admission 10-15, 20-25, 30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

Preferred

BOOMERANG. Star cast. Here is a brilliantly done comedy that will delight the intelligent theatre patron but go over the heads of many who are not adept at following cleverness. Did very little business as the title is hard to sell. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. High audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MOTHERS-IN-LAW. Star Cast. Considered a fair picture here, and seemed to please the majority O. K. City 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

POOR MEN'S WIVES. (6,963 feet). Star cast. Will pass as a program picture, nothing exceptional whatever but entertaining enough to get by if your audience is not too critical. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

VIRGINIAN. (8,010 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. The vast majority considered this a good picture and it went over fairly well. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star Syd Chaplin. All the old "hokum" in the world put in seven reels that makes the finest entertainment possible. Capacity audiences at every performance. It's the best box office stimulator this season. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. This picture was well worth the price. Had lots of everything in it and while it did not prove up at the box office, it was no fault of the picture. Strong opposition and five tickets to the school children cut down receipts. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. Very good picture, with enough comedy in it to make it go over good. This is a little different from the usual Carey's as there is not much western stuff in it and it pleased everybody. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

TRY AND GET IT. Star, Bryant Washburn. Fair program picture, with some comedy. Would make a good filler on a double feature bill. Action rather slow. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal fifty per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

WANDERING HUSBANDS. (6 reels). Star, James Kirkwood. A very fine picture. Satisfied everybody and good box office. The title was good and the picture held up. Very true to life. Has a lot of domestic appeal. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy-five per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

United Artists

DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL. (10,000 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. Played two days and satisfied audiences. This one much better than "Rosita." Should please everybody, young and old. Print okay. Tone good. Special, yes. Audience appeal fine. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SUZANNA. (8 reels). Star, Mabel Normand. Sorry, boys, but personally can't say much for this one. Of course Mabel Normand is a top notcher but the play is the thing and the plot in this Spanish California romance is too ragged, long drawn out and tiresome. But you can't account for tastes (mine) and I really believe most people will like it. Get it and find out for yourself. City and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

THIEF OF BAGDAD. (12,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Big box office attraction and it's something finer and bigger than you have ever seen. Played two days to packed house. It's my first Fairbanks picture in my three years in the show game, and I was pleased the way we packed them in. One hundred per cent appeal and entertainment. Special, yes. Sunday, yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Universal

FAST WORKER. (6,500 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A crackerjack comedy drama that will boost Denny's average many notches. It pleased one hundred per cent for us. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. High audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

FIGHTING AMERICAN. (5,251 feet). Star cast. Good picture and business good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Georgia.

LOUISE FAZENDA

Commedienne—clever—in the Warner Bros.' roster of stars

FIGHTING FURY. (4,491 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Good western. A few parts of this feature overdone, being impossible; they should get away from this bunk. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes, city of 12,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. I enjoyed this immensely and so did my patrons. Ran Saturday to largest crowd yet. Hoot always popular. Does good acting, too. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 4,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

HURRICANE KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. A good Gibson; pleased very well, but much similar to his other features. Good for small town. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre (500 seats), Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

LOVE AND GLORY. (7,084 feet). Star cast. While I thought this was a fine picture, the majority of the audience didn't know what it was all about. If you cater to a very intelligent audience, show it. If not, use your own judgment. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, in some places. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MEASURE OF MAN. Star, William Desmond. Average melodrama. A film sermon on prohibition. Nobody kicked and nobody boosted. Box office medium. Used it with a Jack Dempsey two-reeler on Saturday. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal sixty-five per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Mighty good picture that pleased nearly all. Just good entertainment throughout. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. High audience appeal. Better class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SECRETS OF THE NIGHT. (6,136 feet). Star, Madge Bellamy. Very good program picture with quite a little comedy towards the end, but this is not a special like they want you to believe. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Treatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. This is an excellent picture. Has plenty of action and a real story connected with it. Print in excellent shape. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farmers, town of 700. Admission 10-25. E. F. Gick, Pastime Theatre (230 seats), Moundridge, Kansas.

SIGN OF THE CACTUS. Star, Jack Hoxie. Very poor; about one of the worst westerns I have played. My fans like westerns but twenty-five per cent walked out on this. Universal-Hoxies are sure the bunk. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

TORNADO. (6,576 feet). Star, House Peters. Played this ten days after the real tornado and as a precaution secured Educational's Tornado special to play with it. Drew like flies to sugar, and well liked. Have you noticed what real pictures this Baggot boy has been making of late? Bet he'd make a knockout if they'd give him some dough to work on. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

Vitagraph

BEHOLD THIS WOMAN. (6,425 feet). Star cast. The majority seemed to like it as I had lots of them to tell me as they went out. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

BEHOLD THIS WOMAN. (6,425 feet). Star, Irene Rich. Had many very complimentary comments on this production and it seemed to please everybody. Held up well throughout the run. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

BELOVED BRUTE. (6,710 feet). Star cast. Good picture for Saturday; crammed full of action. Would not appeal to a refined audience, as it is full of rough stuff. The men liked it, the ladies panned it and several walked out. Tone poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal fifty per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

BETWEEN FRIENDS. (6,900 feet). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Just between friends, this is "off color." If you run nice pictures don't play this. Not bad but lots of room to think and it gives you a start. Tone, hasn't any. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, hard to tell. Small town class, town of 1,369. Admission 10-15, 20-25, 30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

CLEAN HEART. Star, Percy Marmont. Very poor indeed. We played it two nights and didn't clear expenses the second night. Too long and draggy. Could have been put in five reels. No tone. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

FEARBOUND. Star, Marjorie Daw. Don't know why they make such pictures when there are so many pleasant sides of life to pick from. Story rough and not appealing. The ladies turned thumbs down on this one. Picture drags for five reels. Last five hundred feet free for all fight. Marjorie Daw's acting only good spot in picture. A story of the back woods. Tone poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal thirty per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Warner Bros

AGE OF INNOCENCE. Star cast. A few more like this and Warner Brothers will have to build theatres to play their own product. Patrons say it was the worst picture I have ever shown. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

BRIDGE OF SIGHS. (6,694 feet). Star cast. Played this on Saturday and pleased large audiences. Creighton Hale and Dorothy Mackaill very well cast. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

CORNERED. (7,500 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. A darn good picture but had a weak ending. I had lots of comments on this. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. L. H. Greife, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

COUNTRY KID. (6,300 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. As good a picture as I have ever seen this star in, with possible exception of "George Washington Jr.," which I think shaded this one a little. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

LIGHTHOUSE BY THE SEA. (6,700 feet). Star, Rin Tin Tin (dog). A very good production and excellent acting of the dog and the old blind man. Louise Fazenda plays the leading female part and is not fitted for a serious part. She makes a fine comedienne. Did a bigger business on Rin-Tin-Tin "Find Your Man." Suitable for Sunday. Print new. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MARRIAGE CIRCLE. (8,500 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. The best of the Warners' first twenty. Wish they could have all been as good as this. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. L. H. Greife, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

NARROW STREET. (6,700 feet). Star, Matt Moore. Excellent comedy feature that failed to draw. Warners may have the pictures but titles are no box office titles. If you can get them in on this picture they will be pleased. A real show. Tone very good. Good for Sunday. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

TENTH WOMAN. (6,250 feet). Star cast. Will please the better class. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

TIGER ROSE. (8,000 feet). Star, Lenore Ulric. Story of Northwest. Very good dramatic situations and as a whole an A-1 entertainment. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

Comedies

AFTERNOON TEA. (Winkler). A very poor substitute for "Our Gang" comedies. They are downright punk. Print new. Sunday, no. No audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

BOYS TO BOARD. (Pathe). "Our Gang." Seemed to please from the way they laughed. No tone. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Greta Nissen, Paramount leading lady, has a prominent role in "The Wanderer," which R. A. Walsh is making for Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

GRIEF IN BAGDAD. (Fox). Take-off of the "Thief of Bagdad," with the monkey as the star. Play it. Good comedy, along with the flying carpet, winged mule, magic rope, etc. Almost like the super feature. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HIGH FINANCE. (Educational). One laugh after the other, mostly in the second reel. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

HIGH HOPES. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. About up to the average of the Cameo comedies. It didn't bring many laughs out of our audience. Had a very bad stretch of film right at the end. Tone okay. Fair audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

KIDDING KATIE. (Educational Christie). Star, Dorothy Devore. Quite a few laughs but they don't go into hysterics. A good filler. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

LARRY SEMON COMEDIES. (Vitagraph). Star, Larry Semon. The second series of reissues are much better than the first and they are pleasing, as old as they are. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

NICKEL PLATED WEST. (Fox). A two-reel comedy which produced more laughs than we have heard for some time. Print new. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

OH, TEACHER! (Educational). Star cast. An excellent comedy with plenty of action, but why do the producers have little colored children going to the same school with the whites? Such mixtures as this displeas Southern patrons. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

OH, TEACHER: (Educational). These schoolboy gags pulled off in this comedy sure set them by their ears. Everybody bad a good laugh. Tone okay. Great audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ONE NIGHT IT RAINED. (Educational). A splendid comedy but too high class for the children and roughnecks. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

POOR BUTTERFLY. (Educational). An actionful comedy that put the house in an uproar. If this comedy doesn't make at least eighty per cent of your audience whoop, there is no use booking any more comedies of any kind. This is a good laugh-getter and will certainly send the audience out in a good humor. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

ROARING LIONS AT HOME. (Fox). Star, Charlie Conklin. Charlie Conklin is surely the star bear cat when it comes to blackface comedy but this picture was a little too slow for him. Kids always like to see him and his every appearance brought forth the giggles. This comedy was pleasing to all. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Strong audience appeal. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

UNCENSORED MOVIES. (Pathe). Star, Will Rogers. Very good. Rogers burlesques Mix, Hart and Valentino, and they sure are real, but it gets very few laughs. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

UP ON THE FARM. (Fox). A good laugh producer. Some gags old but nevertheless they brought laughs. One sheets good. New print. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Serials

FAST EXPRESS. (Universal). Very sensational and pleasing. Box office receipts held up from first to last episode. Patrons well pleased. J. A. Lemke, Crystal Theatre, Waco, Texas.

FORTIETH DOOR. (Pathe). Good program picture. Worth seeing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B.

Lovell's Ellis Theatre Uniontown, California

RIDDLE RIDER (Universal) Star cast. Universal promised us something new in this one and they more than made good. Oodles of action thrills, suspense and good comedy, exceptionally well. Have played seven chapters and it is holding up in every chapter, promises to finish one hundred per cent. Just bought the Fighting Kentuckian on the strength of the Riddle Rider. H. H. Martin, Rialto Theatre, Sacramento, California.

RIDDLE RIDER (Universal) Star, Wellington Richmond. Best serial ever run here at small cost of showing as compared to Hi Yo Silver. Played to a fair house. H. K. Cunningham, Bijou Theatre (400 seats), Fresno, California.

RIDDLE RIDER (Universal) Which we are now running. Seems to be a favorite and has drawn them back to begin the next episode. Business increasing with each episode and is the most successful one we have had for some time. J. A. Lasky, capital (1,000 seats), Waco, Texas.

WOLVES OF THE NORTH (Universal) Fairish, good feature. A serial. Orpheum Theatre, Wood, Texas.

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES. (Pathe). These cartoons have been showing up a little, but you can't go wrong by giving the money of a good show and letting them demonstrate. Just audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission 10 cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (598 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

FOX NEWS (Fox). Fox News were bad today, excepting views of the Presidential inauguration. Others always new. Sunday, too. All classes in big city. Admission 10 cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (598 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

GO GETTERS NO. 11 (F. B. O.) Star, Al Ricky. Usually fine, comedy and this one proved the exception. Poor comedy throughout. Lots other Sunday, too. Short, fair. Very good business. All classes in big city. Admission 10 cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (598 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

NEVER THE TRAINS SHALL MEET (F. B. O.) Star, Lawrence Veyette. Fine. Good picture and would like to see more pictures like this. Pleased everybody. Business fair. Just had to do with the "Flood Control" that is supposed to be going along, anyway, Lawrence would make a picture, have a fine time, but they don't find a town to be flooded or anything else. Very good. Small town class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. Rex E. Cline, Orpheum Theatre (500 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

PALMINERS (F. B. O.) Star, Antonio Moreno. Fairly fine story in Chinese land of opportunity, but no good to the exhibitor. Yellow photog. don't mix and interesting title don't help it. Played on Sunday to fair business. Small town class. Princess Theatre, Lovell, Wyoming.

If every exhibitor thought it was too much trouble to write and mail tips we'd have nothing to call Straight From the Shoulder reports.

All I can do is send blanks to the boys, and see that their response is properly taken care of.

A comparatively small number of the boys are carrying the burden—sincerely, unselfishly, week in and week out!

Aren't YOU ready to help?

to the school kids. Very good. Sunday, too. Medium small town class. Admission 10-25. Rex E. Cline, Osage Theatre (500 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

Independents

CRIMSON GOLD (State Right). Star cast. A good picture. Would stand by it. Very good. Sunday, yes. Special. Fair (two audiences agreed). Small and small town class, town of 500. Admission 10-25. Star Theatre (400 seats), Crawford, Nebraska.

DAUGHTERS WHO PAY. (Banner). Star, Jacqueline Logan. This is the opening picture to date. Not to be compared with Alice Whitman's Daughters. Chance Kids. Star. Starts very good for the picture, worthy and consistently good box. Town about. Sunday, no. Special. No. Middle class. Small town class, town of 500. Admission 10-25. Rex E. Cline, Osage Theatre (500 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

DOUBLE O RANCH (Arrow). Star, Jack Hoxie. This is the old story that everybody has seen many times of the new cattle and sheep war. Only two weekend days. Sunday, no. Special. Admission 10-25. Rex E. Cline, Osage Theatre (500 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

EARLY BIRD. (Full Cast). Star, Lloyd Hughes. This is a Mermaid comedy, which we claimed to have been in Mack Sennett exchange. Good. Yes, okay. Sunday, no. All classes in big city. Admission 10 cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (598 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

FIGHT FOR HONOR (State Right). Star, Jack Perrin. A good western picture with an interesting story. Jack is also on hand with plenty of fist fights and thrills. Will please the fans. Played on Sunday to fair business. Small town class. Princess Theatre, Lovell, Wyoming.

GAMBLING FOOL. (State Right). Star, Franklin Farnum. Another good western story. Much better than other pictures made with this star. Print good. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Not a special. Fair audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (598 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

HORSE SHOE LUCK. (State Right). Star, J. P. Warner. This is not a world beater, just a nice little western with a different story and will get by where you are running westerns. Tone good. Sunday, no. Business satisfactory. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Rex E. Cline, Osage Theatre (500 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

IN HIGH GEAR. (State Right). Star, Kenneth MacDonald. Not enough action. First three reels very slow. One reel of action. Will get by a fellow of double feature. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal 25% per cent. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-25-35. PAUL H. Wallen, Park Theatre (800 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

INNOCENCE. (C. B. C.) Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Picture seemed to like this picture and we had many favorable comments on it. City of 11,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Wilson, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MADEMOISELLE MIDNIGHT. (State Right). In my opinion one of Mae Murray's best productions, not like her other shows. A lot of foreign scenes, which made it good Sunday one. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes, city of 12,000. Admission 10-20. Amos Fillis, Princess Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

MIDNIGHT EXPRESS. (State Right). Star, Florence Vidor. Very good picture and pleased everyone and made a really Sunday picture. The natural scenes were unusual and the direction and continuity were perfect. Build up individual pictures this was bought right and if the big companies had this they would ask a huge price for it. You and Sadie this is the best bet to show. Open Sunday. Special, yes. Exceptional audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Rex E. Cline, Osage Theatre (500 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

OUTWITTED. (State Right). Star, William Fairbanks. A big particular opinion this does not amount to much, kept passing but drag in many places, not a box office picture for short runs, but pleased one in a thousand. Special, no. Not much audience appeal. Small town class, town of 500. Admission 10-25. Rex E. Cline, Osage Theatre (500 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

ROMANCE AND RUSTLERS. (Arrow). Star, Yakima Canutt. This boy is sure a comer and will soon be among the best of them. This is an extra good picture for this kind and will please everybody as it has lots of humor and pleasing scenes throughout. Business was fair for Sunday, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. Rex E. Cline, Osage Theatre (500 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

"The Fool" Opens on Broadway Critics Praise Film Highly

WILLIAM FOX staged his last big Broadway motion picture premiere for the present season on Easter Sunday night at the Central Theatre when the much-heralded screen version of Channing Pollock's master melodrama, "The Fool," opened there for an indefinite engagement and on a "two performances a day" policy. Supreme in his confidence that he has another great motion picture in "The Fool," one that will rank, or even outrank before it has finished, with that other great trio of Fox productions, "The Iron Horse," "If Winter Comes" and "Over the Hill," Mr. Fox broke all previous precedents for premiere presentations by making it a "box-office" opening. With the exception of the newspaper critics, not a single invitation was issued and at the one performance Sunday night the house was packed long before the picture was flashed on the screen with paid admissions at a $2.20 top.

All the metropolitan newspaper reviewers greeted and hailed it with unstinted praise as another Fox triumph. Every element entering into the making of this film version of "The Fool" was praised—the photography, the acting, direction and continuity. In almost every instance the critics centered much of their favor on Edmund Lowe for his portrayal of the featured role of the minister-hero. Harriette Underhill, in the New York Herald-Tribune, said: "The work of Edmund Lowe was the finest I have ever seen him do." Others of the reviewers also proclaimed Lowe's acting of the part as the greatest success of his career. Warm praise was also given other individual members of the supporting case—Ray Bloomer, Paul Panzer, Brenda Bond, Anne Dale and Mary Thurman. The direction of Harry Millarde, the settings and Edmund Goulding, who wrote the scenario from the play, also came in for a share of the praise.

Lavish preparations had been made by the Fox officials to give "The Fool" a successful and notable Broadway debut. For several weeks previous to the opening a continuous and effective advertising campaign was arranged for the picture by Adolphe Kornspan, musical director of the Fox Theatre at Philadelphia and Mr. Kornspan personally directed the orchestra at the premiere.

Herman Jans Promises Eight Big Independent Productions

HERMAN F. JANS, president of Jans Productions, Inc., in making his announcement of attractions he will make available for the independent market during the 1925-26 season, goes on record as being determined to do more than his share to make the year the biggest the independent exchanges and independent exhibitors have ever had.

Jans Productions will come to bat with eight big productions for 1925-26, each one to be given a production of the very highest class with casts consisting of stars and players who are genuine box office assets, and to be made by directors with a reputation for turning out box office successes. Mr. Jans will have direct personal supervision over all the pictures he makes.

First on the new Jans schedule will be "Married?", an adaptation of the widely read novel by Marjorie Benton Cooke, the scenario for which is now being prepared.

Immediately following "Married?" a screen version of Louise Winter's "Ermine and Rhinestones" will be made, and in this Mr. Jans promises that one of the best known and best liked female stars will have the leading role, while opposite her will be a leading man of international reputation. Arrangements for the appearance of these two players in Jans productions were made during Mr. Jans' recent trip to the West Coast, but he is unable to reveal their names at the present time owing to the fact that both have contracts, which shortly terminate, with one of the largest producing companies in the business.

Following these two features, Mr. Jans will make "The Roaring Forties," a story of New York life with many of the scenes laid in the Times Square vicinity; "Other Men's Wives," a story of modern morals; "Man's Dangerous Age" and "Indiscretion," all of which are working titles, and two others to be selected, making eight in all. There is a possibility that this schedule will be added to and also it is more than likely that Mr. Jans will handle the productions of one or two others of the independent producers.

All of the Jans productions will be sold on the "Jans Plan" of outright buy with no percentage arrangement, a plan that both Mr. Jans and the state rights exchanges have found to be the most equitable and satisfactory of any contract heretofore offered.

Hoot Gibson to Be a Jewel Star

An important Universal move which has been forecast for many months now is an accomplished fact, with the announcement by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, that Hoot Gibson, Universal's popular "western" star, has been elevated to Jewel Productions. This means that Hoot henceforth will be seen only in de luxe pictures, released on the same schedule as Reginald Denny pictures, Laura La Plante pictures and those by other Universal Jewel stars.

Six Hoot Gibson Jewel pictures have been scheduled for release during the 1925-1926 season.. The titles are "The Arizona Sweepstakes," "Spook Ranch," "A Hero on Horseback," "Kings Up," "Chip of the Flying U" and "The Calgary Stampede."

"Private Affairs" Completed

Renaud Hoffman Picture Has Ten Featured Roles; a Comedy-Drama

The initial print of "Private Affairs," the final Renaud Hoffman production on the current season's program, was received by Producers' Distributing Corporation this week. There are ten featured roles in the picture and these are filled by Gladys Hulette, Robert Agnew, Mildred Harris, David Butler, Arthur Hoyt, Betty Francisco, Willis Marks, Charles Sellon, Hardee Kirkland and J. Frank Glendon.

The picture is a comedy-drama dealing with the remarkable complications arising through the distribution of mail that had been lost for ten years in a small town post office. It was adapted from The Saturday Evening Post story by George Patullo.

To Produce "Seven Days"

Mary Roberts Rinehart's popular book, "When a Man Marries," which was adapted to the stage by Avery Hopwood and presented under the title of "Seven Days," has been purchased by the Christie Film Company for screen presentation. Scott Sidney will direct. It will be released by Producers' Distributigng Corporation on the coming program of 1925-26 offerings.

Katz, Blank and Others Join In Praising Rothacker Prints

TESTIMONIALS to Rothacker prints have been coming into the office of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, with gratifying regularity. They have been received from both distributors and theatre owners. A few follow:

Samuel Katz, Balaban & Katz, Chicago—"Please permit us to tell you how well satisfied we are with the consistently good quality of First National prints coming from your laboratory. It has been so long since we have had any complaint to make about printing that we proceed on the theory that there are no such things as poor prints any longer."

A. H. Blank, A. H. Blank Theatrical Enterprises, Des Moines—"Nearly eight years of faithful service, consistently pleasing, is a large order and a record seldom encountered in the annals of our fluctuating motion picture industry, but I believe that First National pictures has obtained just that from the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company. I would not attempt to gauge the value of Rothacker prints in the success of First National pictures, but I do know the utmost in screen brilliancy is very necessary, together with dependable service."

James B. Clark, Rowland & Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh—"I was talking to Mr. Wehrle, the manager of the Pittsburgh First National exchange yesterday and asked him what kind of work the Rothacker Laboratories were turning out and what kind of service they were giving him. He immediately replied, 'They are both 100 per cent.' I felt that his statement was quite a boost for you and your organization, and thought you might be pleased to know what he told me."

E. V. Richards, Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans—"It is a pleasure to me to give you an expression of our good opinion of the quality of Rothacker prints and the value of the Rothacker service to First National. Surely the fact that since First National has been in existence we have used only Rothacker service is proof enough of our complete satisfaction."

Sol Lesser, Los Angeles—"The type of service that has so uniformly been rendered by your company, I feel, is worthy of the highest commendation. Since the inception of First National, a period of some eight years, our experience with Rothacker has been most satisfying."

H. M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.—"My observation is that the work done by the Rothacker Laboratories by far excels the work done by any one else. For some reason unknown to me, the pictures from your studio are always clearer, the detail sharper, and they seem to scratch less after a few runs than others."

Fred Levy, Louisville—"I believe that the unexcelled quality of Rothacker prints, coupled with your very prompt and efficient service, has contributed in no small measure to the success of First National."

Tom M. Boland, Oklahoma City—"The Rothacker prints have for many years excellently served the Empress Theatre and its patrons. Their physical composition has been very superior, permitting photographic excellence that has enhanced our exhibitions' artistic value and delighted thousands of audiences. I cannot conceive of any more consistently fine service than that rendered by Rothacker."

"Quo Vadis" Bookings

First National Special Opened Three Long Runs This Week.

Reports from First National Pictures indicate that the spectacular "Quo Vadis" has taken a leading place among the big specials now being booked for extended runs at increased admissions. It continues its showing at the Criterion Theatre, Los Angeles, where it opened on March 21st, attracting big business daily.

It opened at the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, last week to business close to the extraordinary figure attained there by "The Sea Hawk."

Three important runs of "Quo Vadis" opened this week—at the Arcadia Theatre, Philadelphia; at the Tremont Temple Theatre, Boston, and at the Temple Theatre, Toledo. It is playing two shows a day, at increased admissions, in the three cities.

A. W. Smith, Jr., placed in charge of the sales of the specials by E. A. Eschmann, reports that the bookings on "Quo Vadis" are being signed up rapidly and that it has proved itself one of the big money-makers of the year.

Beginning the tenth week of its Broadway run at the Cameo in New York, last Sunday, "Charley's Aunt" grossed $1,505.35, an average of over $3 a seat for the 500 seats in this little Broadway theatre.

"Capital Punishment" Opens to Big Business in Los Angeles

A SEVERE fire at the Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, was an added attraction last week on the opening night of the B. P. Schulberg Production, "Capital Punishment." Clara Bow, George Hackathorne, Robert Ellis and other members of the cast were in attendance at the premier which was temporarily halted by the flames.

By the following day, however, the damage was repaired and "Capital Punishment" drew big crowds the remainder of the week. The Los Angeles reviewers agreed on the merits of the production.

The "Los Angeles Herald" said: "A very good picture. It has moments of high drama. There are scenes which one who witnesses it will not forget for a long time to come. It leaves a vivid, unreasonable picture on one's mind. George Hackathorne does splendidly."

The "Los Angeles Times" said: "A very fine picture. I have never seen such poignant emotional work and I never expect again to see any greater acting on the screen than that of George Hackathorne."

The "Los Angeles Express" commented: "A vital message powerfully delivered. The action is swift, the suspense gripping, the acting adequate. Hackathorne's performance is capital."

Start Casting This Week

With the completion of the continuity by Arthur Hoerl of "Lovers Island" this week, work will be started on the casting of this production by Associated Exhibitors. Hope Hampton is already scheduled to play one of the leading roles. The story of the picture was written by T. Howard Kelley and appeared in a recent issue of Smart Set.

Lillian Rich in Lead Role

Lillian Rich has been selected as the lead in "The Love Gamble," the first of a series of six pictures now being made by Banner Productions on the Coast, produced by Ben Verschlesier under the personal supervision of George H. Davis and Samuel J. Briskin. The Banner product is exclusively distributed by the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation. Edward Lesaint will direct the series.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Shootin' Injuns"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Here comes Hal Roach's "Our Gang" again. This time they have the urge to go west and shoot Injuns, despite their parents' pleas that the Injuns never did them any harm. They start out at night and get lost in a rainstorm, finding refuge in a tricky mechanical house designed to work automatically. The inventor isn't at home, so the gang just stumbles against all kinds of levers and push buttons, with terrific results to their nervous systems. Weird heads pop out chairs collapse, pictures roll eyes and protrude tongues, skeletons appear mysteriously and there are electric shocks that seem to come from nowhere. It's all great fun and ought to keep an audience laughing throughout its length. The idea, of course, isn't at all new, but it has been worked out along effective lines.—S. S.

"The Village School"

(Educational—Hodge Podge—One Reel)

The variety which is the distinguishing mark of the Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge reels distributed by Educational is introduced in this issue in a clever and novel manner. A child is shown in cartoon naming the buttons on a man's coat, rich man, poor man and so on, and then each of these is illustrated by scenes from widely separated parts of the world. For instance, a rich land owner in Mexico, a poor man sleeping on a park bench in New York, a beggar in India, a thieving bear in the Canadian Rockies. A cartoon shows a doctor among the savage tribes in Africa, this is the only one that is burlesqued. Other sections show various forms of wigwagging, and beavers building a dam. An amusing cartoon representing closing time as the best part of the school term, concludes the reel.—C. S. S.

"Big Red Riding Hood"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

This Charley Chase comedy features a chap who, under contract to translate "Big Red Riding Hood" into Swedish, spends his time reading it free in an open-air book store. Finally the book is bought and thrown on the rear seat of an auto. Chase mounts a bicycle, clings to the auto and continues reading the story, oblivious of everything, until he reaches the end and finds himself sitting on a balloon tire in the ocean. This subject has much good fun of a familiar sort and has been well directed by Leo McCarey. The work of the players is good.—S. S.

"Hair Cartoon"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—300 feet)

This "Hair Cartoon" O O is made suitable by its creator, Cartoonist Marcus, for your program during Music Week. Marcus rearranges the hair and whiskers on three unknown head sketches to resemble Mendelssohn, Wagner and Lizst.—T. W.

"Monkey Business"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

In the newest issue of Earl Hurd's "Pen and Ink Vaudeville" the familiar character Props uses his cleverness in helping a keeper pull the aching tooth from a gorilla. Then the fun commences for the gorilla insists on turning the tables and chases Props all over the landscape. Props tired out from running, drinks a whole bottle of monkey gland extract and gives an imitation of a gorilla himself, jumping from tree to tree, but succumbs in the end. Returning, he beats up the other keeper. There is an abundance of action and a number of laughs in this reel which should prove amusing to the average patron.—C. S. S.

"Film Facts"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

Dancing in various parts of the world is the topic of "Film Facts," released through Red Seal as Issue F. While some of the dances shown may be familiar to most audiences, the general theme is fairly entertaining. A few of the "shots" showing fast-stepping in Africa and India are replete with the wriggles which characterized America's "shimmy days."—T. W. .

"Sporting Judgment"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

This Grantland Rice Sportlight shows various sports requiring a quick and keen judgment on the part of the players, including auto racing, boxing, football and polo. The point made is that experience makes the right move instinctive; that this ability to instinctively do the right thing is what differentiates the champion from his able contenders.—S. S.

"Permanent Waves"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

The permanent waves referred to in the title of this Paul Terry Aesop's Film Fable have to do with those acquired in a beauty parlor and those invisible ones emanating from the radio. The farmer, cat and mice have a high old time jazzing around and furnish many humorous moments.—S. S.

"Wide Awake"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Shipbuilding furnishes the motive for this Mermaid Comedy, a Jack White Production distributed through Educational with Lige Conley, in the role of an assistant foreman. There is enough action and twists to the plot to supply a number of single reelers. First, a check given in payment for a boat for the Swiss navy, blows out of the window and Lige chases it all over the scenery meeting with many amusing experiences including one with a dummy which he mistakes for a lady, and a lady he mistakes for a dummy. Then is introduced deep dyed intrigue with the foreman and his gang attempting to blow up the ship at night, there is much stealthy running around and considerable spook stuff that terrifies two negro watchmen. Several ingenious mechanical effects have been introduced to advantage including an electric magnet that picks up the villain and interferes with the work generally in the hands of Conley. It is a fast-moving two reeler, fully up to the Jack White standard and should furnish a lot of laughs for slapstick fans.—C. S. S.

"He Who Gets Smacked"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

There is a hearty laugh in every ten feet of this Mack Sennett burlesque featuring Ralph Graves and directed by Lloyd Bacon. The story was written by Felix Adler and A. H. Giebler and the titles as well. It has to do with a department store salesman who argues a good fight and whom circumstances force into the ring with a tough egg, while the best girl looks on. Eli Stanton, Mollie Malone and Marvin Lobach furnish fine support, especially Lobach, who is an ideal foil for Graves. Hardly a possible gag is overlooked, and each one is handled so as to extract the maximum of comedy. The picture is almost perfectly edited—no, take out the "almost." The audience that doesn't hurt its sides laughing at this one should visit an alienist. Book it. It will go great in any theatre.—S. S.

"Big Chief Ko-Ko"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

How an Indian chief nearly deposes the clown favorite of Cartoonist Max Fleischer is the story of "Big Chief Ko-Ko." Fleischer is shown in his office sketching the clown in a cartoon. A real Indian enters the door and the cartoonist proceeds to transfer him to paper. As a pen creature he is given the grand razz by the circus performer, until he is forced from the sheet back into real life. Even then the clown is relentless and continues shooting paper arrows at him. This interchange of human beings and "out-of-the-Inkwell" characters is highly amusing. —T. W.

No Sign of Spring Fever at F. B. O. Studios; Production Speeded

WITH two new short subjects just produced, from the famous pen of Sam Hellman and H. C. Witwer respectively; with Leo Meehan preparing to shoot on the second of the big novels of the late Jean Stratton-Porter; with Emory Johnson finishing the script for his new special, and with four or five other units actually at work, there is no indication on the F. B. O. lot of the spring fever which frequently besets industry at this season of the year.

Fred Thomson is finishing the final scenes for "The Bandit's Baby," a rollicking comedy drama of the great open spaces and Evelyn Brent is just starting her sixth starring vehicle, a crook melodrama untitled as yet. It will be an adaptation of "The Chatterbox," Bayard Veiller's stage success, and Arthur Statter has done the continuity; Ralph Ince will again wield the megaphone. Maurice (Lefty) Flynn is commencing on "High and Handsome," a comedy drama, under the direction of Harry Garson.

"The Pacemakers," the H. C. Witwer series now being filmed with George O'Hara and Albert Vaughn in the starring roles, is rapidly nearing completion under Wesley Ruggles. The eighth episode has been finished. This will be followed by two two-reel series, the first the work of Sam Hellman and the second from new Witwer stories.

Emory Johnson's next production, which will start in the near future, will be a newspeper story. His mother, Emilie Johnson, is the author; as she was of such Johnson successes as "The Third Alarm" and "In the Name of the Law."

Tentative plans for the filming of the first of the Laura Jean Libbey novels of which F. B. O. recently acquired the rights, are going forward, but no definite starting date has been set.

Colleen Moore in "Sally," a First National picture that is "going over" like a house afire

To Produce in Switzerland

Emil Harder, who recently returned from Switzerland where he directed "William Tell," plans to produce a series of ten pictures in his new studios in Zurich.

As primary distribution will be made in America, the director will take with him an entire cast, technicians and writers. Among those already engaged are Hoey Lawlor, the scenarist; Paul A. Yawitz, who will establish a publicity bureau in Zurich; Louis Honegger, the actor, and Gilda Kreegan, formerly the star of "Little Jessie James," the Broadway musical comedy. "The Danger Sign" is the tentative title of the first feature to be made on Mr. Harder's return.

"Reckless Courage" Received

Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation received the first print of "Reckless Courage," the initial offering in the 1925-26 series of five-reel action-stunt features starring Buddy Roosevelt, early this week, according to an announcement by Louis Weiss, managing Artclass executive. The picture was directed by Tom Gibson from a story by Victor Roberts and a scenario by Betty Burbridge. Airplanes, automobiles and rough riding all play a big part. The cast includes, besides Buddy Roosevelt, J. C. Fowler, Helen Foster, W. A. McIlwain, Jay Morely, Jack O'Brien, N. E. (Shorty) Hendrix, Merrill McCormick, Eddie Barry, Princess Neola, the noted Tuscarora Indian actress, and Robert Burns.

George O'Hara and Alberta Vaughn are starred in H. C. Witwer's newest series for F. B. O. release, "The Pacemakers."

Lesser Engages Wilson

Impressive Plans Made for Great Neck Playhouse

In line with his progressive policy of theatre management, Irving Lesser of Principal Pictures, has added vaudeville to his present program of presenting Broadway photoplays, at his newly-acquired Great Neck Playhouse, at Great Neck, Long Island.

A new house manager, under whose guidance the theatre will be directed in close cooperation with Lesser, has been engaged. He is J. Victor Wilson, formerly on the publicity staff of the Strand in New York, and more recently general manager of the Robbins Enterprises of Watertown, New York. Lesser has given Wilson full swing in the running of the Playhouse, and plans are already being executed to have the 2,400 seat house managed along the same line as New York's best Broadway houses. The stage has been enlarged and is still undergoing extensive alterations, so that large vaudeville companies can be signed to appear there.

Big Deal Concluded

Arrangements have been concluded between the International Film Company and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the production of Cosmopolitan pictures. The first production will be a picture starring Marion Davies, which will probably be from the stage play, "The Merry Wives of Gotham," a comedy by Laurence Eyre, and produced by Henry Miller two seasons ago at Henry Miller's Theatre, with Grace George and Laura Hope Crews in the leading roles.

"The Temptress," a novel by Blasco Ibanez, will also be filmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in conjunction with Cosmopolitan.

Timely Radio Scenes

Associated Exhibitors announces that Captain Jack Irwin, United States Air Service representative located in Hollywood, is personally supervising the filming of elaborate radio scenes for the forthcoming Stereoscopic Productions' picture, "Ship of Souls," which is being produced entirely on the West Coast.

In addition to the timely radio sequences there is a terrific rough-and-tumble fight and spectacular water scenes.

Dorothy Cummings Cast

Engaged in New York to Support Gloria Swanson, in Hollywood, Cal.

Dorothy Cummings has had the singular honor conferred upon her of being the only woman engaged in the East to support Gloria Swanson in her next picture, "The Coast of Folly," to be put in production immediately upon her arrival in California.

The selection of Miss Cummings for this important role was made by Famous as a result of the outstanding success Miss Cummings achieved in the last Bebe Daniels feature, "The Manicure Girl."

Will Produce "Welcome Home"

James Cruze's next production will be "Welcome Home," adapted by Walter Woods from the stage play by Edna Ferber and George Kaufman.

The announcement from Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players in charge of production states that Lois Wilson and Luke Cosgrave have been selected for two of the most important roles, and that other members of the cast will be announced within the next week.

"Hay Fever Time" Arrives

W. Ray Johnston, President of Rayart Pictures Corporation, announces that the print of "Hay Fever Time," the fourth of the Butterfly comedy series starring Gloria Joy, has been received in New York and that the fifth of the series, "The Merry Widower," has just been put into production. In addition to Miss Joy, the cast of "The Merry Widower" includes Conrad Hipp, Joe Bonner, Blanche Payson, Tiny Sandford and Pinto Colvig.

Working on "Texas Bearcat"

Shooting on "The Texas Bearcat," the fifth Independent Pictures Corporation production for F. B. O. release, commenced this week. Bob Custer, who is starring in this series of Texas Ranger stories, grows more popular daily with exhibitors and fans, and it is expected that he will make a second series for F. B. O. distribution at the conclusion of his present contract.

Exceptional Cast Assembled by Fox For Screen Version of "East Lynne"

One of the strongest casts ever assembled for a motion picture will be seen in the screen version of "East Lynne," work on which has just been started at Fox Film Corporation's West Coast Studios under the direction of Emmett Flynn.

This cast is headed by Alma Rubens, exclusive Fox star by reason of a contract recently signed, who has the leading feminine role, and Edmund Lowe, youthful star of the Fox outfit, who is making his return to special productions in this picture. For the heavy role the Fox company has signed that stellar performer and star in his own right, Lou Tellegen.

For the character parts, many of which almost equal in importance the leading roles, the very best talent available was secured. The list reads like a "Who's Who" of filmland and includes Frank Keenan, Marjorie Daw, Leslie Fenton, Belle Bennett, Paul Panzer, Lydia Knott, Harry Seymour, Martha Mattox, Virginia Marshall and Richard Headrick.

"East Lynne" is the first Emmett Flynn production for the current season. This Fox director was kept going right up to the last minute on the current season's productions and only just finished "Wings of Youth," which will be released in May.

Associated Exhibitors Have 3 Companies Producing in East

THREE companies are producing pictures for the Associated Exhibitors in the East.

Hugh Dierker is directing Mae Busch at the Teo-Art Studios in a screen drama entitled "Camille of the Barbary Coast." The story was originally produced some years ago in pictures under the title of "Overcoats." The new version and continuity is from the pen of Ed Holland. Other members of the cast will be selected and announced at a later date.

Henry Diamont Bergere starts to work this week on a new production entitled "Lovers Island," featuring Hope Hampton, Louis Wolheim and Ivan Linow. The story originally appeared in the Smart Set Magazine and was written by T. Howard Kelley.

St. Regis Pictures Corporation are the third company at work in the East on an Associated Exhibitors release. The picture is "Headlines" and is being made under the direction of E. H. Griffith. The principal members of the cast are Anita Stewart, Louis John Bartels, Marion Haslup and Rubye Blaine.

"My Buddy's Wife," a Tom Terriss production, featuring Glenn Hunter and Edna Murphy, has been recently finished and is now in the editing and titling stage. This picture also appeared in the Smart Set Magazine and was written by T. Howard Kelley.

KENNETH HARLAN

One of the stars appearing in "Two Shall be Born," a Vitagraph picture in which Mr. Harlan has one of his best roles.

"Capt. Blood" Grips England; Book, Music, Magazine Tie-ups

PRAISED unqualifiedly by Rafael Sabatini, the world famous novelist whose chief work it picturizes—himself an Englishman—Vitagraph's "Captain Blood," a David Smith production, is duplicating in England the triumph it has enjoyed in the United States and Canada from the day of its official release.

Upon its release in the provinces, fifty theatres ran this special, day and date, and reports indicate that it is being greeted enthusiastically everywhere by large crowds, the signal success of the London premiere being repeated nightly throughout the British Isles.

The special song, "Captain Blood," which is being sung both in prologues and as an accompaniment to some of the scenes in the presentation, also is enjoying a large scale, according to the English newspapers, and a tie-up with a leading magazine whereby the story is being serialized, is proving a powerful impetus both to the picture and the novel itself.

Of all these exploitation projects, the Film Renter & Moving Picture News of London said in its issue of April 4:

"From next Monday, April 6, fifty theatres per week will be showing Vitagraph's super film version of Rafael Sabatini's 'pirate' romance, 'Captain Blood.' Vitagraph's publicity department has been engaged for many weeks on arranging a really great boost for the film on its general release day.

"Messrs. Hutchinson are publishing a special kinema edition of the novel, containing full-page illustrations from the film since every exhibitor is using the specially written 'Captain Blood' song as prologue and accompaniment, this useful feature needs no introduction.

"Something of a 'scoop' is also seen in the fact that, by special negotiation, 'Captain Blood" will start in serial form in the Union Jack library, a 2d. (4 cents) weekly which has an immense sale among people of all classes and ages. The serial will start on April 6 and will continue for several months. For the first few weeks the periodical will feature colored front covers entirely to 'Captain Blood,' and the story will be illustrated from beginning to end by photos from the film. In each issue, too, will be given a list of the theatres where the Vitagraph film is showing.

"Exhibitors should not miss this excellent tie-up—especially as special posters and slides can be obtained from Vitagraph free of charge."

Associated Exhibitors Head Starts on Big Eastern Trip

J. S. WOODY has left on a trip covering several of the Eastern exchange cities of the Associated Exhibitors. This is Mr. Woody's first trip into the Field since his election to the presidency of the distributing organization.

The purpose of Mr. Woody's trip is to acquaint the first-run and other exhibitors in the cities he visits with the program of the Associated Exhibitors for the coming season of 1925-26.

"We wish to call the attention of our exhibitor friends to the fact that Associated Exhibitors has a definite line-up of box office attractions planned far enough in advance to interest even the biggest first-run exhibitors," Mr. Woody states.

"The purpose of my first trip into the field," continued Mr. Woody, "is to show the key-city first-run exhibitors just what Associated Exhibitors has to offer them. With twenty-eight productions and four specials of first calibre; screen stars of the highest magnitude such as Conway Tearle, Lionel Barrymore, Madge Kennedy, Anita Stewart, Glenn Hunter, Tom Moore, Jack Dempsey, Estelle Taylor, Monty Banks, Johnnie Walker, Louise Glaum, Bert Lytell and Hope Hampton, there is no reason that this product should not play the first-run houses of the country in its entire force.

"The above line-up of stars is strongly supported by some of the best known screen players in the film industry, backed by some of screenland's greatest producers, among whom are numbered Whitman Bennett, Hugh Dierker, Tom Terriss, S. E. V. Taylor, Oscar Price, Howard Estabrook, Henry Diamont Bergere, Max O. Miller, Lewis H. Moomaw, E. H. Griffith, Arthur F. Beck and H. C. Weaver."

The cities to be visited are Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, Cincinnati, Pttsburgh, Boston and Buffalo.

Johnny Hines Glues Crowd to Seats with "Crackerjack"

JOHNNY HINES' latest, "The Crackerjack," was put on "cold" at the Rialto, Whitestone, L. I., last Wednesday evening at 11 o'clock, following the regular program, and scored a hit before a highly enthusiastic audience, despite the fact that the picture itself was presented in ten reels.

The "tryout" was planned by C. C. Burr in order to gauge the comic values and to cut the picture down to a maximum of 6,500 feet. The fact that the entire audience remained seated and was kept in a continual state of laughter until almost 1 A. M. after having sat through nine reels of regularly booked pictures, put a stamp of approval on "The Crackerjack" that is decidedly heartening to both the star and the producer. The unusual reception accorded the picture helped Burr but little in determining what to cut out.

According to Mr. Burr, who on three previous occasions showed Johnny Hines' pictures at the Rialto, in Whitestone, the welcome accorded "The Crackerjack" was by far more enthusiastic than that given "The Speed Spook" or "The Early Bird," both of which were put on "cold."

'What was most pleasing," said Burr afterwards, "was the fact that the speed and laughs were so prolific that, despite the lateness of the hour, not a person left the theatre until one o'clock in the morning, when the picture was finally completed. The added fact that nine reels of comedy were previously shown as the regular program of the theatre made the result of The Crackerjack's' showing even more impressive, and it is my firm belief that in 'The Crackerjack' Johnny Hines has the best vehicle of his career.

"It was our hope that we might have been able to find out where the picture lagged, or where the laughs were not so big, in order to get the picture down to regulation footage, but somehow the audience, which previously had guided us excellently in reducing the footage of 'Sure-Fire Flint,' 'The Speed Spook' and 'The Early Bird,' seemed impossible to help us, since at no time did their interest lag or their enthusiasm abate.

"The preponderance of laughs in 'The Crackerjack,' and the marked, easy swing of the continuity, made its impression upon the audience at the very beginning and carried on right through to the finish. This was in evidence by the unusual number of laudatory comments heaped upon the management at the conclusion of the showing. In all probability it will take another week or ten days to get the picture down to about six and one-half reels, at which time the negative will be rushed to the laboratory in order to have prints ready for play dates about the first of May."

Rayart's Fine Press Books Work of Dorothy Cleveland

NO MAN can have a "corner" on the designing and writing of a press book while Dorothy Cleveland sticks to her job as director of advertising and publicity for Rayart Pictures.

Press books can be almost anything, but the exhibitor who finds his press book an essential part of his booking has come to realize that Miss Cleveland's choice of matter to put in her Rayart books is just about all that he wants.

One of the most comprehensive documents contained in sixteen pages (and one of the best press books Moving Picture World has studied for some time) is that prepared by Miss Cleveland on the W. Ray Johnston Rayart release, the Harry Brown production, "The Snob Buster," starring Reed Howes. From lobby displays to music cue sheet the book is an invaluable aid to the showman.

Among the press books designed and written by Miss Cleveland to come to our official desk are "Lightning Romance," "Geared to Go" and "Super Speed," starring Reed Howes, and "Winning a Woman," starring Jack Perrin. The list is incomplete, but these samples of what can be done by a clever girl have been attracting exhibitors.

The producers working on Mr. Johnston's pictures have maintained their "still" photographs in the "A-1" class, and Miss Cleveland has excellent photographic material to work with in laying out her press books. Rayart's money-making pictures have money-making press books.—C. E. H.

Ethel Shannon Signed

Will Have Lead Opposite Harry Carey in "The Texas Trail"

Ethel Shannon, who registered a decided personal hit with Syd Chaplin in "Charley's Aunt," has been signed by Hunt Stromberg for the leading role opposite Harry Carey in "The Texas Trail," now in production at the Hollywood Studio for release through Producers' Distributing Corporation.

Charles French, Claude Payton and Sidney Franklin have been cast for other important roles in this production.

"The Texas Trail" is a picturization of the novel "Rangey Pete," by Guy Morton. It is being directed by Scott Dunlap under Hunt Stromberg's supervision.

Bennett Signs Noy

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Pictures Corporation, announces on behalf of Whitman Bennett, that Mr. Bennett has signed Wilfred Noy, the famous English director, to wield the megaphone for five Whitman Bennett productions which will reach the screen via Arrow Pictures Corporation.

"From Manger to the Cross" at Brooklyn Central Y. M. C. A.

SUBSTITUTING a motion picture for a sermon was the innovation made by the Brooklyn Central Young Men's Christian Association at its service for young men last Sunday afternoon. Regularly, for many years, a sermon or religious address by a prominent minister has been the feature of the Sunday afternoon gospel meeting. On a few memorable occasions a motion picture film has been shown, but the selection of a picture for Easter, when every effort is made to render the service particularly impressive, was an entirely new departure.

Vitagraph's celebrated picture, "From the Manger to the Cross," was chosen for this Easter showing. After a pre-view, Samuel Stuart, the association's social secretary, had said:

"'From the Manger to the Cross' teaches as impressive a lesson as it would be possible for any clergyman to expound. It is a magnificent picture. After seeing it I did not hesitate for a moment to select it for a Sunday, even an Easter afternoon, showing. I certainly recommend it most highly to any church which is on the lookout for superior pictures, and it is particularly appropriate for exhibition just at this season of the year. Nor is it through its religious qualities alone that 'From the Manger to the Cross' recommends itself. It possesses every ingredient that goes to make up first class, gripping entertainment."

This special Easter feature drew a record crowd to the auditorium of Brooklyn Central "Y," and the audience of men expressed its delight with as much enthusiasm as the conventions of the day and the place permitted. An appropriate organ accompaniment was played while the film was unrolled.

"From the Manger to the Cross" was released nearly twelve years ago, and throughout all the time intervening has been in high demand. Depicting the life of the Christ, the scenes were made in Egypt and Palestine, and the Garden of Gethsemane, the Red Sea, the Dead Sea, even the actual tomb of Lazarus are pictured.

Brown Productions to Make Twenty-Two Rayart Releases

HARRY J. BROWN PRODUCTIONS, prominent West Coast Independent producer, is to manufacture the greater part of the feature output of Rayart Pictures for the coming season. This well-known producing organization is composed of Harry J. Brown and Dwight C. Leeper. The latter is also vice-president of Richmount Pictures, Inc., a big film export concern.

Following the success of the Fred Thomson series, which Brown introduced through F. B. O., Brown hit upon a lucky star in Reed Howes, whose work he had seen in "The Cyclone Rider," a Lincoln J. Carter melodrama for Fox. He immediately signed Howes for a period of years and arranged distribution through Rayart Pictures. There will be eight of the Reed Howes dramas in the Fall Rayart program.

Brown also has completed the first of a series of melodramas called "Easy Money," starring Cullen Landis, Mary Carr, Mildred Harris, Gladys Walton and Crauford Kent. Brown will soon start work on "The Beloved Pawn," a novel by Harold Titus, which will also be made for Rayart's big program.

Brown has signed Billy Sullivan for a series to be released by Rayart under the name of "The Fast Action" series. There will be twelve pictures in this group. Sullivan was selected by Universal as the successor to Reginald Denny in the popular Leather Pusher series, and was later starred in the "Fast Stepper" series and then in Universal features.

Albert Rogell is director-general of the Brown units.

"Go Straight" Completed

Frank O'Connor has completed the direction of Ewart Adamson's story, "Go Straight!" for B. P. Schulberg. Camera work was finished this week and the film is now being edited in preparation for its release through B. P. Schulberg Productions on April 27.

"Go Straight!" which was adapted to the screen by Agnes Leahy, features in its cast Owen Moore, Gladys Hulette, Mary Carr, Robert Edeson, George Fawcett and Francis McDonald. Anita Stewart, Larry Semon and Donald Keith are appearing in some special studio sequences.

To Write De Mille Scripts

Announcement is made by Cecil B. De Mille of the signing of a contract with Mary O'Hara who is credited with a record number of successful scenarios within the past two years. Miss O'Hara wrote the scripts for such successes as "The Woman on the Jury," "Black Oxen," "Trifling Women" and "The Age of Desire."

Miss O'Hara will do three continuities a year for the independent producer. Whether her first effort will be for Leatrice Joy or Rod La Rocque has not been decided.

Big Drive on "Wizard of Oz" by Chadwick Exploiteers

AFTER a short, concentrated but very intensive advertising and exploitation campaign, "The Wizard of Oz," with Larry Semon heading a star cast, made its bow to New York audiences last Sunday.

Lon Young and Charles Reed Jones, who handled the campaign for this Chadwick Special production, did not overlook any opportunity or medium which might serve the purpose of notifying the natives of Manhattan and its environs that this famous L. Frank Baum story was to appear at the Colony.

One of the fiist tie-ups effected was with "Roseland," one of America's finest Ballrooms, at Broadway and 51st Street. A special "Wizard of Oz" night with a prize waltz contest was arranged and the contest and theatre engagement were announced in conjunction with the semi-weekly radio broadcasting stunt given by "Roseland" through station WHN. Special decorations showing the characters from the story were utilized inside and out for two weeks in advance, and the large illuminated marquee of the "Roseland" on Broadway carried an 18-foot cut-out of Larry Semon as the Scarecrow which could be seen for blocks. This display and the radio publicity reached hundreds of thousands of people and started the campaign off with a rush.

Next followed a special "Wizard of Oz" contest with the "New York Daily Mirror" and "The Daily News." Each of these papers devoting space for two weeks to this attraction. "The Daily Mirror" offered each day a cartoon of Larry Semon in the famous straw man make up which the children were invited to color. Hundreds of prizes were offered, consisting of a Sleeper Monotrol Radio Set, a Columbia Boycycle, Hohner Harmonicas, Flexatones (a new musical instrument similar to the musical saw), books and dolls of the "Wizard of Oz," Yanki Boy play suits and "Bonzo" cartoon dolls. The various prizes being donated by the various manufacturers.

The Daily News contest featured a theatre party under the patronage of Sally Joy Brown to see this fantasy, so dear to children of all ages.

Bobbs-Merrill Co., publishers of the "Oz" books issued a special photoplay edition of "The Wizard of Oz" which was displayed in book stores throughout the city and also in department stores.

Frank L. Baum, son of the author and President of the Oz Toy and Doll Mfg. Co., arranged various window displays of these funny character creations, together with stills from the production in many prominent windows.

In addition to these various mediums all the usual methods were utilized. Special block paper ranging from one-half sheets to twenty-four sheets was made and posted in every available spot in and around the Greater City of New York.

A series of specially drawn newspaper ads. ranging from sixty lines to full page in size, were carried in all the New York dailies and the unique characters attracted extraordinary attention.

Chadwick's 1925-26 Program to Be Nationally Advertised

THE latest evidence of unusual activity in the ranks of the Independent producers comes from the offices of the Chadwick Pictures Corporation where, it is announced, a contract for magazine advertising involving over a quarter of a million dollars and covering a circulation in excess of ten millions was consummated last week.

This is probably the largest individual advertising contract ever made in the motion picture industry between a single producer and publisher.

There is a lot more to the proposition than the mere fact that a vast amount of lineage will be used as the very latest theories in exhibitor exploitation are linked up closely with the campaign. Thirteen publications, known in advertising circles as "The Newsstand Group" will carry advertising in each issue on Chadwick Pictures. The magazines listed in this group include: Action Stories, The Adventure Magazine, Novelettes, Ace High, Ranch Romances, Black Mask, Live Stories, Snappy Stories, Telling Tales, Breezy Stories, Saucy Stories, Young's Magazine, Droll Stories, and others.

The Chadwick tie-up with these popular magazines further provides that each of the magazines will carry fictionized versions of the photoplays and that an action scene from the productions shall appear as the colored cover.

To further tie-up with the exhibitor, Chadwick Pictures Corporation is preparing attractive lithographic display posters that will not only be provided to every news stand handling these publications, which includes over 98% of all the stands in the United States and the posters will also be furnished to exhibitors.

The first star series to be publicized in this method will be the George Walsh pictures, the first one "American Pluck" now being completed and the magazine tie-up perfected.

In addition to this National Advertising the Chadwick Pictures Corporation is enlarging every department of its organization to amplify the various activities entailed by the increased volume of production called for during the coming season.

Fox Starts New Programme On Completing 1924-25 List

WITH the completion by Director Maurice Elvey of "Everyman's Wife," the latest special production on the release schedule of Fox Film Corporation for the current season, the attention of the Fox company's entire production forces are centered on the pictures that will form its 1925-26 program of releases.

The complete schedule is not available at the present time, but if the pictures already completed or in the course of production can be taken as criterions, the Fox output for next season will surpass anything ever attempted by one company.

That this is not idle talk is easily attested The completed productions are headed, of course, by "The Iron Horse," the John Ford screen masterpiece that scored so strikingly in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles Then come "As No Man Has Loved," Rowland V. Lee's remarkable adaptation of Edward Everett Hale's immortal classic, "The Man Without a Country," and the screen version of Channing Pollock's dramatic stage success, "The Fool."

With these super-specials in the completed list of productions to be released next season are two other Ford pictures that prove his big picture was no flash in the pan, namely, "Kentucky Pride" and "The Fighting Heart." Then there is a Tom Mix starring special, "The Everlasting Whisper," and a Buck Jones vehicle entitled "The Timber Wolf."

Big Pictures Coming

The productions in work at the busy studios are on a par with those completed. They include such ambitious picturizations as:

"Lightnin'," "The Wheel" and "The First Year," the first three of the Goldwyn Unit of Clean American Plays which the Fox organization is producing and distributing as an integral part of its releases for next season.

"Marriage," an adaptation of H. G. Wells' ever popular seller, which is the first of that great author's work to be brought to the screen.

"East Lynne," an adaptation of the stage play of the same name which thrilled and delighted three generations of Americans with its poignant drama and New England humor.

"Havoc," the picturization of that dramatic war play of the same name hailed in London and Continental Europe as one of the real dramas to have the late war as its background.

"Durand of the Bad Lands," Buck Jones' second special of the season marked for him by his promotion to stardom in special productions.

Splendid Comedy Program

Of equal importance with the specials will be the comedies to be released by Fox next season. In addition to the Imperials and Sunshines, there will be a number of series of polite comedies, headed by eight more two-reel Van Bibbers, the first seven of which, released this season, were the outstanding triumphs of the short subject field. The first of the Van Bibbers, "The Ski Jumper," is now in the course of production. Earle Foxe will be continued as star in these comedies.

Last week Director Elvey put the finishing touch to the 1924-25 program when he adjourned to the cutting room of the West Coast Studios with the first print on "Everyman's Wife," and set to work to bring it down to the approved length for special productions.

In the cutting room he met Directors Edmund Mortimer and W. S. Van Dyke in the midst of work on the last two program pictures that will be released by the house of Fox. Mortimer was busy with a Shirley Mason starring vehicle entitled "Scandal Proof," while Van Dyke had a print of "Hearts and Spurs," a Buck Jones starring vehicle, before him.

When these three directors have their prints ready for shipment East, it will mean the end of 1924-25 as far as the Fox West Coast Studios are concerned. All the Short subjects produced there for release this season are completed and in the Eastern home office for the final touches. These include six Sunshine, five Imperial and the last of the Van Bibber comedies to be released this year.

Rupert Julian Signed by Cecil De Mille

Rupert Julian director of Universal's big special "The Phantom of the Opera" has been signed by Cecil B. De Mille.

Julian has achieved an enviable reputation for his work which has been consistently of the highest order and under the De Mille banner he will be given every opportunity to further advance his marked creative ability.

For the coming season he will be assigned to the direction of at least two of the big stories already purchased by De Mille the titles of which will be announced later.

In a commentary Cecil De Mille says that he considers Rupert Julian one of the most progressive and imaginative of motion picture directors with the keenest sense of visualization.

"Everyman's Wife" is from an original story by Ethel Hill and Enid Hibbard and is graced by an exceptional cast headed by Elaine Hammerstein and Herbert Rawlinson. Other important roles are capably filled by Diana Miller, Robert Cain and Dorothy Phillips.

The story tells of a domestic tragedy caused by a young wife's jealousy, with the eternal triangle presented in a novel way. Miss Hammerstein plays the part of the suspicious spouse, while Rawlinson interprets the misunderstood husband. Miss Miller and Cain essay the villain roles.

"Hearts and Spurs" is an adaptation of Jackson Gregory's popular western tale, "The Outlaw." Carol Lombard plays the feminine lead opposite Buck Jones in the production. Other members of the cast are J. Gordon Russell, Jean Lamott, Walt Robbins, Charles Eldridge, Robert Littlefield, Freeman Wood and William Davidson.

Miss Mason's "Scandal Proof" is from a story written especially for her by Charles Kenyon and in it the petite little Fox star enacts dual roles. John Roche has the leading male role. Freeman Wood is also cast in an important part in this production, and may now go to his grave boasting of the fact that he played in the last two program pictures made by Fox.

Metro-Goldwyn's Trackless Train in N. Y.; Starts May 1 for Los Angeles

MAYOR JOHN F. HYLAN of New York temporarily abandoned a committee meeting of the Board of Estimate to board Metro-Goldwyn's Trackless Train, in company with General Gerardo Mechado, President-elect of Cuba, when the trans-continental "Special" arrived in New York Tuesday, April 21, from a trip of more than a thousand miles from Indianapolis.

Before reaching the city, the Trackless Train was met in New Jersey by metropolitan newspaper men who accompanied it to New York, where it traveled to the Battery and to the City Hall. There it was met by a civic reception committee.

Both Mayor Hylan and General Machado declared that the "Metro-Goldwyn Special" was the most ingenious contrivance they had seen. An immense crowd witnessed the train's reception at City Hall.

The Trackless Train, sponsored by Metro-Goldwyn through Major Edward Bowes, vice-president, and his aides, Howard Dietz and Eddie Bonns, is one of the greatest exploitation feats in the history of the industry.

In Philadelphia, visited before the final "stretch" to Manhattan, Metro-Goldwyn's Trackless Train met with even a greater reception than was accorded it in Baltimore, Washington, Wilmington, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Dayton and other cities along the route, in all of which the train was a sensation never equalled.

Mayor Kendrick of Philadelphia and his cabinet were guests on the "Metro-Goldwyn Special" in the Quaker City, where a special escort of twenty policemen, led by motorcycle police, carrying American flags and flags of the city, attracted phenomenal attention. Traffic was literally "tied into knots" in Philadelphia, where the Trackless Train had the endorsement and co-operation of the city government and received unlimited courtesy from the automobile association.

The success of Metro-Goldwyn's "Trackless Train" is due to co-operation between Edward Bowes, Vice-President of M.-G.-M. (center); Howard Dietz, Director of Advertising and Publicity (left), and Eddie Bonns, Director of Exploitation (right).

At the executive offices of the Stanley Company of America motion pictures were taken of the "Metro-Goldwyn Special" to be exhibited in all the theatres of the Stanley circuit.

In Washington, D. C., which was visited after Pittsburgh, a police motorcycle escort met the Trackless Train. Known as the most restricted city in the country in regard to any manner of street exploitation, Washington extended every courtesy to the "Metro-Goldwyn Special," which paraded three miles down Connecticut Avenue, Pennsylvania Avenue, and around the White House, finally halting before a newspaper office where motion pictures were taken by a news weekly. Traffic in Washington was blocked on every street traversed by the Trackless Train.

Mayor Jackson of Baltimore and other city officials were guests on the "Metro-Goldwyn Special" when the Trackless Train arrived in that city. At one point traffic was held up twenty minutes while crowds surged about the amazing locomotive, tender and Pullman car. The Baltimore News carried a five-column "spread" on the event, indicative of the tremendous publicity which is accruing to Metro-Goldwyn as a result of the transcontinental tour.

The Mayor of Wilmington and newspaper men met Metro-Goldwyn's Trackless Train seven miles outside the city, riding to the city on it and through the principal streets, which were thick with crowds.

On May 1 the "Metro-Goldwyn Special" will start from New York for Los Angeles, exploiting Metro-Goldwyn's product next season.

Added to Cast of "Sun-Up"

With production starting this week at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios on "Sun-Up," Sam De Grasse, William Orlamond and Arthur Rankin have been added to the cast of Edmund Goulding's screen version of the Lula Vollmer stage success of last season.

As announced last week, Lucille La Verne has the mother role she created in the play, and Conrad Nagel has been assigned the leading male role, that of Rufe, a boy of the Kentucky mountain country. It is quite a departure from Nagel's usual type of characterization.

Metro Changes Title

Word comes from the Coast that "Don't" is the new name of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of Rupert Hughes' "The Girls' Rebellion," which Alf Goulding is directing under the author's personal supervision with Sally O'Neill in the title role. The working title has been known as "The Rebellious Girl." John Patrick plays opposite Miss O'Neill in this new Rupert Hughes picture.

Lillian Gish, the "First Lady of the Screen," was signed last week by Nicholas M. Schenck, Vice-president of the Metro-Goldwyn Company, to a long term contract. Miss Gish will leave in a few weeks for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Culver City, where her production will be made

John C. Flinn Returns From the Coast After Completing Elaborate Program

John C. Flinn, vice president of Producers Distributing Corporation in charge of production returned to New York this week after an extended stay in Los Angeles and the disclosure of the coming season's big program, the details of which have been so carefully safeguarded, may be expected within a few days.

For the past seven weeks Mr. Flinn has been in continuous daily conferences with Cecil B. De Mille, Al. Christie, Hunt Stromberg, A. H. Sebastian, Frances Marion, William Sistrom and Renaud Hoffman, on the stories, stars, directors and supporting casts that will be contributing factors in the exceptionally elaborate program to be offered during the coming season and it is understood that practically everything pertaining to actual production has been definitely planned.

The minor details of program arrangement are now being worked out and as soon as these are set Mr. Flinn will be in position to announce the schedule of releases with full and complete details of each big production.

Four Directors Will Produce Forthcoming Schulberg Films

B. P. SCHULBERG has announced that his next year's program of eighteen pictures will be divided among four directors who will work exclusively for his organization during the next twelve months. All of them will be men who have proved definitely their ability to deliver profitable box-office material.

One group of stories will be assigned to Gasnier. He begins his fourth season as a Schulberg director with such past successes as "Rich Men's Wives," "The Breath of Scandal," "The Boomerang" and "White Man" to his credit.

James P. Hogan has already contributed this year two of the outstanding Schulberg successes in "Capital Punishment" and "The Mansion of Aching Hearts." He will be retained on the 1925-26 program to direct at least four of the stories called for.

Frank O'Connor has recently completed "Go Straight!" for this month's general release. This is his first picture under his B. P. Schulberg contract which will extend through next season's activities.

A fourth director is expected to sign with Schulberg Productions this week. He is one of the best known men in that branch of the industry.

JOSE JUNQUERA, of Madrid, the well-known Spanish philanthropist and sportsman, arrived in the United States two weeks ago with the print of the first Spanish motion picture feature to be exhibited in the United States. It is "The House of Troy," from the sensational novel by Perez Lujin, which has reached its forty-fifth edition in Spain, and will be shown at Carnegie Hall next Sunday evening. Lujin enjoys in Spain the same literary prestige as Ibanez and Zamacois and his works will be exploited in this country through the publication in English of "The House of Troy," the story of which concerns the adventurous life of modern students at the University of Santiago in Spain.

FORREST HALSEY

One of the peers among those who adapt other people's stories to screen, Mr. Halsey has done a notable work with his adaptation of "Madame Sans Gene," by Victorien Sardou and Emile Moreau, the celebrated stage play in which Gloria Swanson is starred by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Sally" Going Big

Colleen Moore's Current First National Picture Sweeping the Country

Colleen Moore's screen version of the musical comedy success, "Sally," has quickly established itself as one of First National's biggest money-making productions, according to information from E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution of that organization. One hundred and fifty prints were made.

The tenor of the reports received by First National from all parts of the country are that "Sally" is giving complete satisfaction to picture patrons and that big receipts are pouring into the box offices.

"Sally" is without doubt the biggest hit that Colleen Moore has had. She is making innumerable new friends by her portrayal of the Cinderella-like heroine. The humor and sense of comedy which she brings to bear upon the part have made the public realize as never before her great versatility and what an excellent actress she is.

"Chickie" Evokes Praise

Executives at First National Pronounce It Fine Box-Office Picture

First National's "Chickie," recently completed at the company's New York Studio under the supervision of Earl Hudson, with John Francis Dillon directing, was screened at the home office for executives last week and aroused a degree of enthusiasm that no ordinary production could evoke. Their reports ranked "Chickie," from the box-office standpoint, with the outstanding successes made by the company.

"Chickie" will soon have a pre-release showing at the Strand Theatre, New York. Mr. Hudson gave the picture a cast which includes many names with a high box-office value. Dorothy Mackaill has the title role. Others in the cast are John Powers, Hobart Bosworth, Myrtle Stedman, Gladys Brockwell, Olive Tell and Paul Nicholson.

"Balto's Race To Nome" Goes Into Educational's May List

WHAT is probably the strongest array of one- and two-reel comedies yet listed for release this year by Educational is assembled for release during May. Eight two-reel subjects, seven of which are comedies with well known stars, and one timely special, "Balto's Race to Nome," with six single-reel subjects composed of comedy and novelty subjects, comprise the program of the month.

This special, in two reels, will be the outstanding release of the month. It is rapidly nearing completion, and prints will be shipped directly from Los Angeles as soon as the picture is finished, in order to give exhibitors the opportunity of cashing in on the timeliness of the picture. Sol Lesser is producing, and the snow scenes, taken in Alaska and on Mt. Ranier, have been finished. A little studio work in Los Angeles remains to be done.

The balance of the two-reel subjects will comprise two Mermaid Comedies, one with Al St. John and the other with Lige Conley in the leading roles, and one release each of the Walter Hiers, Lloyd Hamilton, Juvenile, Tuxedo and Christie series.

The first week of the month will present Lloyd Hamilton in his two-reel comedy, "King Cotton," a "Way Down South in Dixie" comedy, filmed in the cotton fields around Brawley, California. Dorothy Seastrom, his leading lady in all of this year's releases, will again be seen in the same capacity. "Dragon Alley," a Juvenile Comedy with a cast headed by Jack McHugh, will be the other two-reeler on the week's schedule. The single-reel release for the week will be "Monkey Business," an Earl Hurd cartoon comedy, one of the releases of the "Pen and Ink Vaudeville" series.

Elmer Clifton Will Direct Barthelmess Productions

ELMER CLIFTON has been signed by Inspiration Pictures, Inc., to direct its future productions starring Richard Barthelmess for First National release.

"Shore Leave," work upon which was begun last week, will mark the eighth production for the young actor that John S. Robertson has directed. Upon its completion Mr. Robertson will take a vacation in England and on the Continent.

Mr. Clifton has had long training in screen work, both as an actor and in the directorial end. For nine years he was an actor and a directorial assistant to D. W. Griffith while the latter was making "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance" and "Way Down East." Mr. Clifton also directed, under the Griffith banner, several of the Dorothy Gish comedies. He is looked upon as one of the ablest of the young directors, and J. Boyce Smith, vice-president and general manager of Inspiration Pictures, is enthusiastic over the signing of Mr. Clifton for new Barthelmess productions.

Mr. Clifton established himself as one of the most promising of the younger directors with his own production of "Down to the Sea in Ships," a successful screen portrayal of New Bedford whaling days. Mr. Clifton directed Mr. Barthelmess when the latter was playing leading roles with Miss Gish.

"Shore Leave," now in work, is from Hubert Osborne's stage play of that name in which David Belasco starred Frances Starr. Mr. Barthelmess will act the role of a "gob" and will have the active assistance of the Naval Academy authorities at Annapolis and of officials of the Navy Department in making it conform to actual academy and service conditions.

Writes Music for Film

Charles Wakefield Cadman, considered by music critics to be one of America's greatest living composers of enduring music, has written a special rhapsody for "A Lover's Oath," the first of the product to be made by Astor Distributing Corporation. The composition is entitled Omar Khayyam, which is the theme of the photoplay, in which Ramon Novarro and Kathleen Key play the important roles. The composition was made at the request of Ferdinand P. Earle, who adapted and directed the immortal poem to the screen.

Corinne Griffith in "Declasse"

First National Production Meeting With Success Everywhere

Corinne Griffith's latest production, "Declasse," from Zoe Akin's stage success, is also going over big, with prospects of equalling, if not surpassing, in popularity anything in which Miss Griffith has been seen.

She gives a splendid performance in the role of Lady Helen Haden. The entire production is a delight to the eye for the beauty of its photography, of the settings and costumes.

Robert G. Vignola's directing is also coming in for high praise from all the first run theatres which have shown "Declasse."

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Warner, parents of the Warner Bros., who recently gave up their theatre in Niles, O., and retired to Hollywood. Sam Warner is standing in the middle

First National Signs for Series With Johnny Hines

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES has just entered into a contract with C. C. Burr for a series of Johnny Hines productions for release by that company in its Winner group of productions for the coming season. The pictures will be of the kind in which the star has won his biggest following.

Production on the first Johnny Hines feature for First National will probably begin May 15. It will be based upon a popular novel by one of America's foremost writers. Charles Hines will again direct, with photography under the supervision of Charles Gilson and John Geisel, all of whom have been connected with the Burr organization for a long period of time.

First National feels that in the closing of this contract it has obtained one of the most popular of the rising young comedians, whose productions will add material strength to its forthcoming releases. The public has shown a keen interest in the Johnny Hines type of picture during the past several years and his following has been increasing rapidly.

The C. C. Burr-Johnny Hines association began in 1919 and still continues. It has been one of the highly successful managerial tie-ups in the business. Mr. Burr was attracted by Hines' vibrant personality when he was dancing with Wellington Cross in John Cort's musical comedy, "Just a Minute," and soon had him under contract, first presenting him in a series of Torchy comedies from Sewall Ford's stories.

Mr. Hines, who is not yet thirty years old, is a native of Golden, Colo. He was educated in Pittsburgh and at the College of the City of New York. He had eight years' acting experience on the stage before turning to motion pictures. He began his screen career with Pearl in "Miss Petticoats," "Tillie Wakes Up" and "Alias Jimmy Valentine." Among other productions which he has made are "A Scrap of Paper," "Neighbors," "Hearts of Gold," "The Little Intruder," "Eastward Ho!" the Torchy comedies for Educational, "Sure Fire Flint," "Burn 'Em Up Jones," "Luck," "Little Johnny Jones," "Conductor 1492" and "The Crackerjack."

As will be seen from the above list, he has played a wide range of parts and his services are an acquisition that will be up to the high standard of merit which First National has set for its product.

Conway a Metro Director

Jack Conway has been added to the directorial list of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and has been assigned to direct the next Elinor Glyn production, "The Only Thing."

GLENN TRYON

The Hal Roach comedy star, whose laugh-making pictures are released by Pathe.

Lillian Gish to Leave for Coast As Soon As Her Story Is Picked

LILLIAN GISH, who was signed to a long term Metro-Goldwyn contract last week by Nicholas M. Schenck, vice-president of the company, will leave for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios at Culver City as soon as a story is decided upon for her first production, Miss Gish stated this week.

Several famous works are under consideration for the star's first appearance under her new arrangement, and a choice will probably be made within the next few weeks. Metro-Goldwyn states that in any event the story decided upon will be a work well known to the public, and which will give the popular actress the finest opportunity she has yet had to uphold "the mantle of Bernhardt and Duse," which such authoritative writers as Joseph Hergesheimer, Theodore Dreiser, James Branch Cabell and George Jean Nathan agree has fallen upon Miss Gish.

The question as to the director who will be chosen for Miss Gish's first production is one that is causing considerable speculation in film circles. It is quite certain that he will be selected from the staff of fifteen directors at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

The signing of Lillian Gish by Nicholas M. Schenck for Metro-Goldwyn is as one of the most important film coups of the year. Following closely the arrangement by which Marion Davies became a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star, the Gish contract is a move which virtually puts this organization at the top of the film field.

Johnny Hines signs contract to produce a series of feature comedies for First-National release, while C. C. Burr (standing) who is making the productions, and R. A. Rowland, production manager for First National, look on

Completes "Old Home Week"

Thomas Meighan has completed "Old Home Week," his latest picture for Paramount, adapted by Tom Geraghty from an original screen story by George Ade, author of several of Meighan's most successful photoplays. The picture was filmed at the company's Long Island studio and in Ocala, an agricultural town in Florida, famous for its orange groves.

Bebe Begins New Play

Bebe Daniels has started work on her latest effort for Paramount, "The Wild, Wild Girl," under the direction of Edward Sutherland. Rod La Rocque will play opposite Bebe. The screen play was written by Tom J. Geraghty from a Liberty Magazine short story by Stewart M. Emery.

Novelties for Weiss Stars

Unique Advertising Methods Employed on Three "Western" Boys

Weiss Brothers are planning to get out an unusually complete assortment of advertising novelties on their three stunt stars, Buffalo Bill, Jr., Buddy Roosevelt and Wally Wales, during the coming season, according to an announcement by Louis Weiss, managing executive of the Artclass organization, which distributes these popular series in the state right field.

Attractive post cards printed on gold embossed paper, distinctly novel in appearance, have been prepared on each of the three riding boys and will be used by theatres to give out as souvenirs at matinee and other special performances, at theatres when they are showing Buffalo Bill, Jr., Buddy Roosevelt or Wally Wales features. Each card bears the signature of the boy whose portrait it bears and can be used as a souvenir photograph for fans, who wish to add to their collections of stellar portraits. The cards are striking in appearance and different from any hitherto prepared for any motion picture artist, giving the impression that they are actually gold-plated from a little distance.

Weiss Brothers have also prepared a set of Buffalo Bill, Jr., Buddy Roosevelt and Wally Wales blotters, in two colors and of most attractive design, and special stationery has also been prepared, the back of which lists the productions and presents the portraits of each of the Artclass headliners, while the regular letterhead of the exchange will be carried on the front side of the sheet.

Hogan Directing "Lady's Lips"

The direction of "My Lady's Lips" was begun this week by James P. Hogan who will picturize this original screen story for B. P. Schulberg. It will constitute the tenth and last release on the schedule of B. P. Schulberg Productions this season. It will be ready for general distribution on June First. Immediately upon the completion of "My Lady's Lips," Hogan will direct the first of series of Schulberg pictures for next year.

Metro Production Is Speeding on Coast, Says Mayer Here for Meet

PRODUCTION on the coast is proceeding at top speed, Louis B. Mayer stated on his arrival in New York this week to attend the Metro-Goldwyn sales convention there. Mr. Mayer, who is vice-president of the company and in charge of production at the Metro-Goldwyn Mayer studios at Culvery City, said that his organization is at present in the midst of the greatest activity it has yet known, and that an increased number of productions will soon be under way at the studios.

"There will be no let-down of production," Mr. Mayer stated. "We are, on the contrary, planning an even heavier schedule, and at present we have more units at work at our studios than at any time in the past year.

"When I left the coast Fred Niblo was shooting important scenes of 'Ben Hur,' King Vidor had started 'The Big Parade,' and Tod Browning 'The Mystic.' Bob Leonard was finishing 'Time, the Comedian,' Alf Goulding had Rupert Hughes' production of 'Don't' well under way, as Monta Bell had 'Pretty Ladies.' Reginald Barker was shooting interiors of 'The White Desert,' after a location trip to the Rocky Mountains, and Edmund Goulding was hard at work on 'Wrath,' after a location trip to the Tehachapi Mountains. Marshall Neilan had completed 'Patsy,' and Hobart Henley was completing 'Nothing to Wear.'

"Other units were ready to start work, and by the time I return to the coast several new productions will probably be under way.

"In anticipation of the biggest season that the whole industry, as well as our own company, has known, we have steadily built up our producing organization in every department, so as to be able to give exhibitors pictures of the highest box-office calibre. This we know we can do, for we have under long term contracts the most popular stars and featured players in the industry, as well as proven directors.

"This company is building success not simply for the present, but for the years to come, and to that end we are developing new players who a few years from now will rank among the biggest favorites on the screen. There is at present an emphatic need of new blood in all branches of production, and this company is doing its share by encouraging new talent and giving it every opportunity to prove itself.

"We have increased the equipment of our studios, and added new buildings, in preparation of the biggest production program our company has known. At the time of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer merger a year ago, our studios were the largest and finest equipped in the world. Today we are in even a better position to produce the best box-office pictures, and from the record of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures the past season it must be apparent that we are going to play second fiddle to no company in the industry the coming season when it comes to making pictures that will give exhibitors handling our product a boom year."

Before Mr. Mayer returns to the coast, it is expected that he will give his attention to the current theatrical offerings and other available screen material.

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Pittsburgh Men

As you already have been informed, the Pittsburgh motion picture projectionists have formed a Chapter of the American Projection Society, which same is in excellent condition. On Sunday, April 12, the chapter will listen to the first of a series of lectures to be held under its auspices.

An engineer of the Westinghouse Company, whose name has not been supplied, will address the Society on "The Theory, Care and Efficient Operation of Alternating Current Transforming Devices," which means motor generator sets and mercury arc rectifiers.

W. C. Kunzmann, of the National Carbon Company, will address the same meeting on "The Manufacture and Correct Use of Carbons For Motion Picture Projection."

Invitations have been issued to all motion picture projectionists and exhibitors and theatre managers in the territory surrounding Pittsburgh.

As It Should Be

This is as it should be. I am most agreeably surprised at the vigor with which the Pittsburgh men have taken up the work of the American Projection Society. I trust they will not allow that enthusiasm to lag after the novelty wears off. To all A. P. S. chapters let me sound this warning: ONLY ADMIT TO MEMBERSHIP THOSE MEN WHO HAVE GIVEN EVIDENCE THAT THEY RESPECT THEMSELVES, THE PROFESSION OF PROJECTION AND THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY. You can get members easily. Your real problem is not to get members so much as it is to keep the bars up against all except really desirable men. The "Aw that's good enough" man has no right place in the American Projection Society, which wants and should admit progressive, wide awake men ONLY.

The compliments and best wishes of this department are extended to the Pittsburgh Chapter of the American Projection Society.

Gosh All Hemlock!

Recently I had an inquiry from a man (who frankly admitted himself to be a novice, BUT who held a Pennsylvania license because HE HAD PASSED THE PENNSYLVANIA EXAMINATION) as to why he was unable to get satisfactory light with 60 amperes A. C.

Inquiry developed the fact that he was working with the face of his converging lens 10 11/16 inches from the film, and with an arc distance (distance crater to face of converging lens) of FOUR AND NINE SIXTEENTHS INCHES!!!! Laugh that off if you can. He was using 60 ampers A. C. at the arc.

Pennsylvania officials have been very progressive in some ways, but it certainly seems as though their examination needs the vigorous application of a monkey wrench and two pairs of pliers to tighten up the loose joints.

Bluebook School

Question No. 271—(G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, has called my attention to the fact that I received a well assorted group of replies to the following question, asked quite some while ago). What is total candle power of the crater of an ordinary arc which is .5 of an inch in diameter, if the C. P. per square millimeter is 150? All right! Consider the question as being re-asked. No shirking now. Get busy and dig the correct answer out. Such a question may seem very hard, and it is too, but you can make the grade if you really try.

Question No. 272—What is meant by "current frequency?"

Question No. 273—What is the difference between A. C. and D. C., and what kind of a generator armature (if any) is used to generate D. C.?

Question No. 274—Explain exactly what the various things in this diagram mean—the slope of the sides of the triangles, for instance.

Question No. 275—Why should the propectionist understand the effect of current frequency as applies to projection?

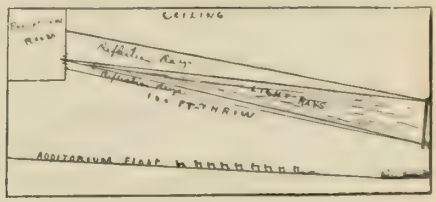
Can It Be?

C. M. Swabb, Projectionist Gem Theatre, Oilton, Oklahoma, springs a new one on us, as follows:

Noticed an article in March 29 issue, regarding the use of a mirror for a screen. I was much interested, as I had been thinking of such a screen for quite some time. Have even gone so far as to try it out on a small scale. Am certain it can be used successfully, as per the following plan:



There must be a considerable projection angle, and the mirror must be perpendicular to the axis of projection—so that it will reflect the light straight back to the projection room, as per sketch. The result, according to my experiment is a beautiful picture, with a light which, while very brilliant, yet is mellow and very easy on the eyes of the audience.

The illustrative sketch I send is the same as that sent in by Brother P. E. Thomas, Creston, Iowa, except that the screen is set differently, but this small difference produces a very great difference in what the audience is able to see on the screen.

Is It Possible?

Now I wonder if this is possible? Don't seem so to me, but I have long since passed the point of declaring a thing which seems to me impossible to be so when the thing in question has actually been done. But anyhow, even though we grant that the audience can see a picture, how could the projectionist see it? Mind you, however, I'll have to be shown that the audience COULD see it, and if it can the thing is surely of no value, because of the fact that at least some portion of the audience usually is located pretty close to the axis of projection. Swabb makes the positive statement that he has tried this thing out, and that it worked. Only for that I'd say it is entirely impossible, right off the honorable bat.

Excellent Rendition

During the last week of the Astor Theatre run of The Lost World, for the second time, I sat through a rendition of that most wonderful production by Projectionists Harry Tillman and John Tillman.

Aside from the distortion due to an absurdly heavy projection angle, there was no fault in their rendition of this production before the audience. It was placed on the screen perfectly, with excellent, not too brilliant illumination, and excellent speed of action. My compliments to Projectionists Harry and John Tillman.

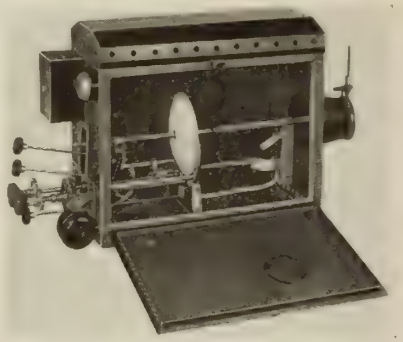
Preddy Equipment

Our old friend, Walter G. Preddy, San Francisco's pioneer motion picture theatre supply dealer, who is and always was a live wire, is "out" with a low intensity arc lamp equipment, which same is illustrated herewith.



Preddy Reflector Arc Lamphouse

You will note that the lamphouse is of ample dimensions; also it is well ventilated, though there seems to be no means provided for piping the same to the vent flue in order to carry the fumes from carbon volatilization outside the projection room. This same, if I rightly remember, is true of all the low intensity lamphouses which have been brought to the attention of this department up to date.

True, these arcs do not make nearly so much gas as does the high intensity or ordinary arc, but nevertheless they do make considerable, and there is no good reason why it should be turned loose in the usually already overheated projection room, or turned loose whether the room is over-heated or not, as it is not recommended by any doctor I know of as especially healthy.

Mr. Preddy describes the equipment as follows:

Two Types

We manufacture two types, Automatic and Hand Feed. The operation of the Automatic type is as follows. We employ a voltage relay wound to 2500 ohms resistance. This relay is connected across the arc. When the carbons burn apart the voltage across the relay terminals rises, which closes a pair of tungsten contacts, which, in turn, operates a 1/100 H. P. series type motor, and by a worm gear and ratchet device the carbons are thus moved together, till the voltage drops and the relay automatically disconnects the motor. The motor is connected in series with a resistance which brings it up to a point where it is just about ready to start. In other words, the motor is poised to a point whereby a little added current will make it pick up and run. This added current is furnished by the relay. We poise the motor across the arc in series with a resistance unit which allows a very small amount of current to pass through the motor at times. This does away with sparking at the contacts. The contacts operate without visible sparking, even when viewed in a dark room. We believe the tungsten points will outlive the lamphouse.

The gears shown, mounted near the motor, do the feeding. The gears mounted on the rear of the lamp knobs do the focusing. They maintain the crater in the proper focal point of the mirror by moving the carbons in at the proper rate, which requires some accuracy, considering that the positive carbon burns faster, and is of greater cross section.

By pulling out on the positive carbon feed knob the gears are pulled out of mesh, and then either carbon may be fed separately. The top knobs shown are for the side and up and down movement of the negative. The knob at the bottom is to raise and lower the light spot. A knob for moving the light spot sideways is also provided. The lamp has every convenience that is really necessary to operate it.

A pilot light is provided, and opening the door for trimming will light it. Closing the door puts the light out. This is controlled by a switch in the door casing.

The mirror is spherical and 6½ inch in diameter. We might add that we are still to have one crack from heat.

For most all requirements we employ only one set or trim of carbons, the rear one being 5/16 by 12 solid and the front or positive 7/16 in. by 12 in. cored. Under working conditions the positive crater is 3½ in. from the face of the mirror.

Looks Good

Friend Preddy seems to have covered the ground pretty well. I have not personally examined and tested this equipment, but have faith to believe that anything bearing the name of Walter Preddy will be well and honestly made, and efficient in operation. The Preddy low intensity lamp CANNOT be installed in your present projector lamphouse. You must purchase the full equipment or nothing, which consists of lamp, lamphouse and current regulating device. No condenser is used.

The low intensity arc (reflector type) should have the very serious consideration of all projectionists and theatre managers who have need for greater screen brilliancy than can be had with incandescent, but who do not need the very high, brilliant screen which results from the use of high intensity.

That the low intensity lamp will displace the ordinary arc for projection purposes I firmly believe. It is here to STAY. Rightly handled it will give screen illumination fully equal to that supplied by a well handled ordinary arc using 65 to 75 amperes, and in addition the light tone is more pure.

BACK VIEW OF RECTIFIER PANEL SHOWING WIRING

When Reflector lamps are used in connection with a rectifier it is very important that the regulating reactance on the rectifier be removed from the circuit. This may be easily accomplished by placing a short length of wire across the reactance terminals as shown in the diagram, which will shunt or cut it out of the circuit. We have marked this wire "W" on the diagram which is to be connected from terminal No. 1 to No. 7. This connection or jumper renders the reactance inoperative.

Preddy supplies a hook-up by means of which two low intensity arcs may be burned on a 30 ampere mercury arc rectifier, which seems to be the answer to the puzzle change-over has presented when two ordinary arcs and a rectifier have been used in the past.

From Mexico

From Ed. Quezeda, of Quezeda Brothers, El Tigre, Sonora, Mexico, comes the following:

Dear Mr. Richardson: For some time I have seen your answers to the different questions that go to you from all over the United States in regard to projection.

Now I have experienced a trouble, and though I am outside the United States—I mean the place where I am working is—there is no doubt that, being in the same line, you will give me your advice.

Please tell me what makes the arc lamp throw the light backward after the carbons have burned for about five minutes, and during that have a bright light at the aperture.

We use A. C. at the arc and burn ¾-inch size Columbia A. C. Special carbons. Have tried to produce a better light by placing the carbons at different angles—that is, speaking of the carbons alone; also by moving the same to quite a number of positions in regard to distance from the collector lens, but yet we are unable to locate the trouble. We have ordered the Bluebook of projection, but it has not yet arrived. Any advice you may be able to give us with relation to the subject will be highly appreciated.

Correct Terms

I was amused at one thing. Here is a man who lives in a Spanish speaking country, and his English is a bit stiff, in writing at least, though very understandable—much more so than many letters received from our own countrymen. Yet he uses correct terms—Collector lens, for instance.

Your question, friend Quezeda, will doubtless cause a smile to illuminate the faces of many of our sophisticated projectionists, BUT while to us your trouble is very simple, still I know just how difficult it is to you, and how badly you feel at being unable to master it.

Doubtless you have your Bluebook by now. Turn to 402 and STUDY the matter on pages 402 to 408, inclusive. Also note "Using A. C. Arc for Projection," page 390.

Your trouble is that you have not got exactly the right advance of lower carbon tip with relation to upper carbon tip, which same governs the angle of the crater and its location. See figure 119, page 404 of Bluebook.

The set there shown is for D. C. The best set for A. C. is the same, except that the A. C. crater is very small, hence the advancement of lower carbon tip must be very exact. I would suggest that you drill a very small hole in the lamphouse door, exactly opposite the arc, on the left, or non-operating side of the projector. Over this hole place a piece out of the center of a broken plano convex condenser lens, and on the projection room wall (try left hand projector first) place a white sheet of paper to receive the image of the craters which will be projected to it.

You may now watch the performance of the crater handily and move the lower carbon tip ahead or back, as is needed. When you have seen how it is done you may then repeat the operation on the other projector lamphouse, placing the paper screen on the lamphouse of the left hand projector, or you may place a bit of mirror in front of the lens and project the image to the ceiling, wall or floor.

This department is here to serve readers of the Moving Picture World anywhere and everywhere. We cover the United States and Canada very thoroughly, and Australia and New Zealand fairly well. Used to have a number of correspondents in both countries, but they have not been much in evidence of late, for reason unknown to me. Presumably it is because it requires so very long a time to get replies to questions from either country.

Mexico we hear from very little, because it is a Spanish speaking country, hence most Mexican projectionists and theatre managers are presumably unable to read the World. The same thing applies to all South American countries. We shall be glad to give you any possible aid at any time.

Good Stuff

Recently a projectionist, who I will not name, in the course of a personal note to me, said: "Am now very busy overhauling the Simplex mechanisms from the Jewell Theatre. They have gone through several fires (presumably meaning aperture fires only.—Ed.) without being properly cleaned. I found that the E-1 film trap was badly warped from the effects of the various blazes. Made a clamp for it and, having heated it with a torch, was able to bring it back into alignment by the use of wedges.

"Why did I not buy a new E-1, you ask? Well, F. H., I am quite a nut on such things, and every time I do something of this sort it gives me knowledge, which same may very well come in handy in some case of emergency."

Gentlemen, that is what I call real ENERGY. I do NOT advocate trying to repair things which are not expensive, and which may better be replaced, BUT when a man deliberately goes to all the trouble just to equip himself with knowledge and experience, I say it is G-O-O-D!!! Such a man possesses one of the foundation stones of advancement, and that is ENERGY—lack of just plain laziness, with which so very many are in greater or less degree inoculated, though in many cases without knowing or realizing it.

I make this bald statement: Any man who either dislikes his work or hates it, or who takes no pleasure in his work, but shirks a job because he can shirk it and "get by," is either engaged in work for which he has no taste, and therefore is unsuited, or else he is in greater or less degree infected with LAZINESS.

Smith Back Again

When I stepped in the door at the Mackler dinner I thought I was seeing things, for there stood Will C. Smith, who had just plain disappeared out of the moving picture landscape something like six months ago, leaving us all to wonder if while he had taken a bath he had accidentally kicked the plug out and slipped down the drain pipe.

However, we should not indulge in levity, for friend Smith has had a siege of illness. And he looks it, I'll tell the universe. His herd of friends—for every one likes Will C.—will be mighty sorry to know of this, and more than glad that he has recovered, and is again "amongst us" with his chapeau in the ring and ready for all comers, catch as catch can and may the best man win.

Bluebook School—Answers 241 to 245

Question No. 241—Give us your idea of the best location for the rewinder and other various necessary projection room devices, other than the projectors themselves. Don't just describe your own layout, but consider the matter from the standpoint of convenience, safety and general convenience.

Charles Armentrout, Mason City, Iowa; Harold E. Hurlbutt, Oshkosh, Wis.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, Cal.; Harry Dobson, Toronto, Ont.; H. C. Mallory, Castle Rock, Wash.; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, N. H.; W. C. Budge, Garden City, L. I.; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Ill.; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Mich., and G. K. Jones, San Antonio, Texas, all gave more or less complete replies to this question. I believe you will be interested in knowing the "other fellow's" viewpoint on such a thing as this, hence I shall give space to several answers.

Whitt says:

My idea of the location of the various things necessary to use in the projection room will not agree with the general practice of locating these necessities by those who plan and build projection rooms. However, you asked for my idea, so here goes:

Provided there is ample room, the rewinder should be located immediately back of the right hand projector—right as we face the screen. The film cabinet should be beside it, to its right, which places it to the rear of the left hand projector. This arrangement provides for maximum convenience in handling the film, and does not compel the projectionist who works alone to be far from the operating side of either projector, though of course the process of rewinding will compel some neglect of the screen, since his back will be toward it.

The rewinder could be located on a shelf on the front wall between the projectors, but there I like to have a hand driven rewinder, so that necessary inspection may be made with the least possible neglect of either the projector or the screen.

I prefer to have the stereopticon placed to the left of the projectors (To the right, as here used, always means right as we face the screen), with the spot, if one there be, to their right.

A large cupboard, built upon the general plan of a kitchen cabinet, should be so placed that it will take up the least possible space—into one of the walls if possible. Its location is, of course, governed largely by door openings, etc.

A fire extinguisher should be located on the front wall, between the projectors, or better still, one to the right of both projectors. The volt and ammeter, and perhaps a polarity switch should be located slightly above the level of the eyes on the front wall between the projectors. These instruments thus located will be near the eyes and need not have a pilot light, which is always annoying.

If automatic dowsers be used, I strongly recommend that the switch opening the right dowser be located on the projector itself, in a position where it may be readily reached from either side. This arrangement will permit of the projectionist making change-over without being out of touch with the arc controls of the working projector, which is well in event the arc needs a bit of "nursing." If he wishes he may make the change-over on right side of the projector and be on hand to adjust anything which may need attention at the moment of starting.

A hot carbon butt container should be located where it may readily be reached, and still be out of the way, and last, but NOT LEAST, I want a comfortable chair, where I can sit and watch the picture, with all projector controls within instant reach. Oh, yes, I would locate the port shutter master cord end attached to a spike beside the projection room door, and have my opera glasses hanging where they may be reached from either projector working position.

Wallace says:

The best location for the various devices necessary to projection, other than the projectors themselves, would be to a great extent governed by the number of men on duty at any one time. The great majority of theatres employ only one projectionist to the shift, and that one has no helper. We may therefore safely use that condition as a basis for consideration of the placing of the rewinder, film cabinet, inspection table, adjustable rheostats, dimmers and other devices requiring more or less attention during the time projection is in progress.

It would of course be very bad for a lone projectionist to absent himself from the projection room to do rewinding, particularly if it were necessary to make repairs to a film, while projection is in progress. The objections to this are so many and so obvious that I need not recite them, except to say that fire hazard, lack of control of projection speed for various scenes, and lack of control of screen illuminating are sufficient to absolutely prohibit absence of the projectionist from the room.

Having thus established the necessity for the location of the various things it is necessary that the projectionist use within the projection room itself, our problem is to place them conveniently, and with maximum safety.

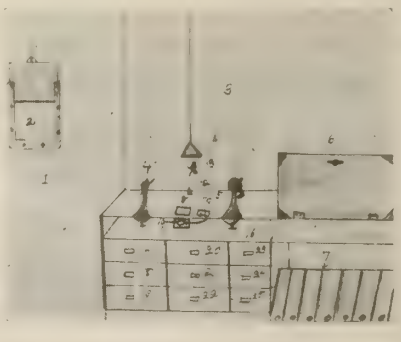
In my opinion the rewinder should be located directly in line with one of the observation ports, either in front, between the projectors, or directly back of them, this to the end that the screen may be viewed while rewinding is in progress, without moving from the rewinder to do it. Moreover, it will be better that the projectionist be as nearly as practical equi-distant from both projectors while rewinding, since there is always the possibility for need for INSTANT action to avert serious trouble. Personally I favor the back wall position, because of the fact that the front wall presents some additional fire hazard, though it may be a bit more convenient.

The film storage cabinet may be easily and conveniently located under the rewinder table. The cabinet must, of course, be self-closing. The rheostats should be placed high on the wall, and as far from the projectors as is possible without causing their control (adjustable rheostats) to be inconvenient. Ammeters and voltmeters should be so placed that they will be constantly under the eye of the projectionist on duty. The front wall location is best.

Any other controls necessary may be placed where they will be most convenient to the man who is to use them, remembering that unhandiness, and particularly unnecessary unhandiness, makes for poor work.

Where two men are on duty at all times the situation is very different. Then the film cabinets and rewinder should be located in an adjoining fireproof room, the same holding true for rheostats.

Johnson sends a drawing, which is herewith reproduced, of a combined rewinder



table, film cabinet and supply storage cabinet, concerning which he says:

In the sketch, 1 is the front wall of the projection room, 2 an observation port, 3 the right hand wall, 4 and 5 rewinder elements, 6 an inclosed rewinder, 7 the film storage cabinet, the location of which depends upon the type used (the one I have tried to illustrate is the type which automatically lifts out the reels when opened, and closes by gravity. It should be shown a bit higher from the floor, and set at an angle—that is, tilted forward slightly, which allows of the reels being taken out more readily); 8 is a slot cut into the table top, with a thick glass set into or over it, and an electric globe (10) beneath it (The glass should be ground to a dull finish by rubbing with fine emery cloth); 9 is the splicing machine, 11 the metal shield around the bulb, 12 the cement bottle, 13 scissors, 15 a safety razor blade, 16 an open shelf for tools or miscellaneous articles, and 17 to 25 drawers or compartments for tools, carbons or other supplies.

Dobson says:

There is one certain thing, viz: The rewinder should be placed in such position that there will be plenty of light and plenty of "elbow room," on the theory that good surroundings induce good work.

No hard and fast rule may be laid down as to rewinder location, because of the fact that laws in various states and provinces compel the placing of the rewinder in the wrong location in so far as has to do with convenience. Also the number of projectionists per shift, and whether or not a single projectionist has an apprentice or helper counts in the matter of location.

According to my own views the best procedure is for the man who is taking charge of projection, especially in a new theatre, to size up the situation, and plan the location of the various devices necessary to projection in the best possible position, as to safety, convenience, comfort and efficiency, which the local laws and the number of men to be on duty will permit.

Budge says:

Answering this question from the standpoint of only one man on duty at a time, the rewinder should be located in a fireproof inclosure, well vented, in the back wall of the projection room (Take note of that, the rest of you.—Ed.), and the speed set at six minutes to the 1,000 feet of film.

Laws vary in different locations, but such a rewind cabinet, if piped to the open air and properly made, will always pass muster with an inspector.

The projectionist should always have a good view of the screen, and be within reaching distance of the projector controls, no matter what he is doing, hence the devices must be placed with that idea in view.

Hanover says:

The location of projection room devices, or some of them at least, are made the subject of local laws in many places. Also they usually are placed at the whim of, or according to the ideas of, some architect who knows nothing about the practical problems of projection, and who does not take the trouble to consult a competent authority on motion picture projection.

Assuming myself to be laying out the plans of a modern theatre projection room, I would, if it be a three-projector installation, locate the center projector on a center line perpendicular, sidewise, to the surface of the screen, with the other two projectors, one on each side, spaced equi-distant from it, with four feet lens center to lens center if the projection distance be 125 feet or more, forty-two inches if it be 100 to 125 feet, and thirty-six inches if it be less than 100 feet. This, mind you, Richardson, is not exactly the best way to put it, because the distance should really be based on focal length of projection lens, but I cannot shave the time just now to work that out.

I would then locate my stereopticon and spotlamp (if there be one or both) on three feet center to center of lens basis, either on the right or the left of the projectors, or one on either side, as may seem best under the circumstances surrounding the individual installation.

I would have a recess built into the rear wall of the projection room five feet long by twelve inches deep (eight will do, but twelve is better) by eighteen inches up and down, cement lined and covered with a metal frame carrying wire glass doors as transparent as can be obtained. This recess I would connect with the open air by means of a fireproof flue or pipe having an area of about 100 square inches. Under this recess I would locate another of equal dimensions, except that it would be only eighteen inches long. This latter also is covered by a metal frame carrying wire glass metal frame doors. It is to contain the rewinder motor. Between it and the rewinder recess I would provide an opening for the motor belt, and the motor wiring would be such that the motor will not operate except both compartment doors be closed and LOCKED SHUT. Such an installation will pass any inspector, no matter what the local law may be.

I would install a hand-driven motor, and inspection table elsewhere—in an adjoining room if such a fireproof room be available, provided two men are always on duty while projection is in progress. If not, then I would install this table and rewinder at the front wall, between the projectors, if necessary, though that is very bad. If elsewhere I would have a special, small observation port just over it so that the projectionist may keep an eye on the screen while inspecting the film.

All measuring instruments, such as volt and ammeters, should be on the front wall, near the observation ports. The modern practice is to install a panel board under each observation port.

Motor generators should never be in the projection room itself, but in a room immediately adjoining. Just where the switchboard ought to be will usually depend upon the individual installation, but the more handily they are placed the greater the encouragement to men to do good work. Dimmers, where handled by the projectionist force, usually should be near the ceiling and in the most convenient possible place. Where that will be again will depend upon the room itself. If it is not more than nine feet front to back it is likely that just back of the projectors will be best, though if there is a large spot port it is better to so place them that the exact effect may be watched through it.

The film storage cabinet location naturally should be beside the rewinder, because that saves steps. It may even be under the rewinder table, if one is used for the power rewinder.

Rheostats may be placed near the ceiling and covered with a hood connecting with a pipe to carry the heat away outside the room, or they may be placed outside the room, though so located that access to them may be had conveniently. If they be adjustable, it is an easy matter to arrange to manipulate their levers or switches by means of wires or levers.

The trouble lamp should be constantly connected with a live circuit, and supplied with sufficient cord to permit of its use in any place it is likely to be of use. It should be hung, together with its carefully coiled cord, in some convenient place, probably on the rear wall just back of the projectors, unless all that space is preempted for other purposes.

Question No. 242—What importance attaches to having the two elements of the rewinder in perfect line with each other? IS YOUR OWN REWINDER IN PERFECT LINE?

Dobson says:

The rewinder elements should be in perfect line, because if they art not the reels themselves are not in line, and the film edges will be subjected to heavy and unnecessary strain through rubbing against the side or sides of one or both of the reels. This bends the film through the row of sprocket holes, and weakens it right in the place subjected to the most heavy strain in the process of projection. Loose splices will also pull apart more often when the rewinder elements are in line.

Armentrout adds this:

Yes, Your Honor, my rewinder is in perfect line, both laterally and vertically.

All right, Brother Armentrout, but I'm no dad blamed traffic court judge, by heck, and I ob-ject to that Youronor stuff!

Mallery says:

If the elements of the rewinder be not in good alignment, the reel edges will rub across edges of the film. If such a rewinder be used and the speed of rewinding be rapid, then the film edges will be struck sharp blows as the reel revolves. Under this condition a ragged edged reel will have something like the effect of a buzz saw. Much of the older film is too dry and brittle to stand such treatment without suffering serious damage. Such abuse is very hard, even on new, pliable film.

And now here is an objection I have not heard voiced up to this time. If the rewinder tension be too slack, and the rewinding be done at high speed, using a wobby reel, there will be single layers of film which will project from the film roll sufficiently to bring the perforations into full view. When such a roll of film is shipped on an ordinary reel, the weight of half a dozen or more reels above it will crush these protruding layers, and bend the film edge at right angles.

If the protruding film edges, which I have many times myself noted, is really due to this cause, then that is a new one to the editor and it is passed along to you as a valuable bit of information, because there is no manner of doubt but that exactly the damage described is often perpetrated, and it is very serious damage indeed, all footage thus buckled being utterly ruined if the band comes in the sprocket holes.

Question No. 243—How would you arrange for making splices at the rewinder table?

Mathews says:

I would space my rewinder elements far enough apart to give plenty of room for working comfortably. I would place a 16 c. p. Mazda over the rewinder, with a narrow angle cone-shape opaque shade which would throw light downward on my work ONLY. I would install a cement bottle made like the figure on page 271 of the Bluebook, and last, but by no manner of means least, would install an approved film splicing device on the table top, in line with and half way between the two rewinder elements.

If hand splices are to be made, which I do not at all approve of, I would install everything named except the splicer. In its place I would cut a hole in the table top two inches wide by three or four long. Under this I would place a low power lamp, controlled by a conveniently placed push switch. Over the hole, with its top set flush with the table top, I would place a piece of heavy glass, ground to a dull finish on its under side by using emery dust or fine emery cloth or paper. In this glass, using a small drill and turpentine, I would drill four holes to receive locating pins, which I would make of ordinary nails, filed at their points to fit film sprocket holes, cut off and cemented into the holes with high grade plaster of paris. The glass I would putty into the hole cut in the table top, having provided a recess in the opening to support it, of course.

Which, incidentally, calls for a hooray for Cleveland. It's the first time that city has been heard from, and it listens very good indeed.

Question No. 244—Give your views as to the speed of rewinding.

All those named expressed some opinion on this, though there was considerable diversion of views. Hanover sets the matter forth best, it seems to me. He says:

Rapid rewinding does a great deal of harm, also it requires that the man doing it watch the operation closely, since otherwise if anything goes wrong much damage may be done.

The advantages of slow rewinding, and when I say "slow" I mean six to eight minutes to the thousand feet, is that the operation will be noiseless, the film may be rewound tightly without slippage, and there is no necessity for watching the process, unless inspection is necessary.

There are those who advocate an inspection at every projection, but I hold this to be unnecessary. If the films are examined carefully, and all loose splices eliminated, they should run perfectly while you use them, PROVIDED YOU HAVE A CORRECT TAKEUP AND APERTURE TENSION AND NO WORN SPROCKET TEETH. After inspection there really is no necessity for any speed of rewinding in excess of eight minutes per thousand feet, but speed may be increased to six minutes without hurting anything.

At those speeds the rewinder rolls along silently and smoothly, and the automatic switch stops the motor when the end of the film comes. I have used seven minutes to the thousand feet for two years, and find it entirely satisfactory.

Mallery says:

If you have rewound at good speed with poor reels, and who of us has not, you have observed that the action is not smooth, but jerky. Every jerk causes the film to slip, and every slip means scratch marks which will become "rain" soon as they fill up with dirt. A speed of six or more minutes to the thousand foot reel is best.

Armentrout says not to exceed four minutes to the 1,000 feet. Wallace says six minutes.

Dobson says:

There should be two rewinders, one hand driven (with which any speed should be possible), for repairs and inspection. The other should be power driven not faster than twenty minutes to the 2,000 foot reel, which is plenty of speed for all practical purposes where projection itself is at a proper, or even a decent speed.

By "any speed" for the hand driven rewinder I mean that it may be slowed down for careful inspection, or driven fast, at will.

Question No. 245—Give your ideas as to the general equipment and adjustment of the rewinder.

Mathews says:

This has been partly covered in the replies to previous questions, but: The rewinder elements should be spaced far enough apart to supply working space. It should have ample light supplied. Its elements should be in perfect alignment. It should be provided with an adjustable brake tension for the dummy. It should be inclosed in a fireproof magazine or other enclosure. It should be motor driven, with a hand driven rewinder for inspection and repairs. The power rewinder should have an automatic switch on the motor circuit so arranged that when the end of the film comes the motor will stop. The dummy tension should be such as will rewind the film tightly, but should not be excessive.

High Amperage Loss

Recently I fell into conversation with two men whom I know to be at least above the average in intelligence and projection knowledge. I soon saw they did not understand the reasons why high amperage entails loss, and tried to explain the matter. To my amazement they seemed unable to understand the matter at all, though I illustrated it with sketches.

If this is true of these men, then surely it is true of many more, hence I have decided to make a detailed, careful, illustrated explanation of the matter, and show you how to prove it out for yourself.

Those of you who are observant have, or should have noticed that from, say, twenty five amperes up to sixty amperes, direct current, you get increased screen illumination in just about exactly the same proportion that the amperage is increased.

Put in another way, if you illuminate your screen with a twenty-five ampere arc, burning normally, and then increase the amperage to say thirty-five, except for such variation as is caused by the carbon working more efficiently at one amperage than the other, when the thirty-five ampere arc is burning normally, crater angles, etc., being the same in both cases, you will find that your screen illumination has increased in practically exactly the same proportion that the amperage has been increased.

This same thing holds true up to about sixty amperes. By this I mean that up to a maximum of sixty amperes (ABOUT sixty. The maximum will vary somewhat with different optical systems) this holds true.

Falling Off

But you will also find that when the maximum of about sixty amperes has been passed (I speak of the ordinary arc ONLY, not the high intensity) there will be a falling off of the percentage of increase in screen illumination as compared with the amperage increase. In other words, while you will get an increase in screen illumination with each boost of amperage, up to about 125 amperes, the screen illumination increase will not be in proportion to the amperage increase, and as the amperage is increased above about sixty, the relative increase in screen illumination will decrease, until at about 125 amperes it will cease altogether, and when that point is reached you will be unable to get any considerable increase in screen illumination, if you can get any increase at all, by further amperage increase.

In other words, 125 amperes (about—the point of saturation varies slightly with different optical systems) you can get the same screen illumination that one thousand amperes would give you.

Note:—That statement may or may not be exactly true. It is possible, though I doubt it, that higher amperage might increase the thickness of the crater floor, and thus its brilliancy, but I doubt it since at 125 amperes the carbon is at the point of volatilization and the depth or thickness of the incandescent floor of the crater probably as great as would produce higher light giving power.

Why This Is So

And now I am going to explain to you why all this is so, and enable you to prove the thing out for yourselves, always remembering what I have said about variation of point of saturation in different projector optical trains.

First, any pin point on the face of the converging (front) condenser lens acts exactly as a minute hole in a thin metal shield in the same plane occupied by the face of the lens would act. As you doubtless all know, if there be an opaque plate C, Fig. 1, in which is a minute hole, and arrow A be illuminated so that its image is projected through pin hole C, image D will result, and the size of the image will be in exact proportion to (A) the size of the object and (B) its distance from plate B with relation to the distance of image D from plate B. I think you all know that if the distances X and Y remain the same, any change in the size of object A, as at E, will result in a change in image D as at H.

If you have means of increasing your amperage in, say, ten ampere steps, from say 25 to 60, you are in good shape for the experiment I shall propose. You can make it in less satisfactory manner with a less range of possible current changing, but to do the whole thing right, and follow it through to the final conclusion, you must have a means of increasing your amperage from about 25 or 35, up to 125, by gradual steps—gradual steps in order that you may observe the exact result of every move.

First obtain a piece of very THIN, perfectly flat metal. Copper will be best, but it must be very thin. In its center pierce a minute hole—just as small as you can make. One half inch from it make another and, in a straight line with the other two, make other holes, each a half inch from the last, until you have a row of holes extending two inches from the center, or five holes in all.

Next Steps

Now lay the metal on the face of the converging lens, first making sure that both metal and lens are perfectly clean, and attach it thereto in such way that the metal will lay perfectly flat against the glass over the entire surface. MARK THAT LAST WELL, since if the metal is not flat against the glass at each hole, then the experiment will not be a true one.

Having done all this, arrange some method for stopping all the holes, except the center one. This latter must be so done that the following may take place.

First, having opened the projector gate and affixed a piece of white paper behind the aperture opening, get your arc burning normally at 25 amperes. Get your crater angle right, and be sure it REMAINS THAT WAY THROUGHOUT THE EXPERIMENTS. You will find a small, bright spot of light on the white paper at the aperture. This is the image of the arc crater. It corresponds to object A and image D, Fig. 1.

Having observed the size of the spot, increase the amperage to 35, and wait until the arc is burning normally—say two minutes. What has happened? Why the increase in amperage has increased the size of the crater, has it not? And since the crater diameter has been increased the SIZE OF THE IMAGE UPON THE WHITE PAPER AT THE APERTURE HAS BEEN INCREASED ALSO, has it not?

So far so good. You should now have the idea I am trying to convey to you. The "spot" is composed of tens of thousands of images of the crater, each projected by a pin point of the converging lens, and THE SIZE OF THESE IMAGES WILL DEPEND UPON THE SIZE OF THE CRATER, HENCE UPON THE AMPERAGE.

Now increase the amperage, by ten ampere steps if possible, pausing each time long enough to allow of the crater changing size completely so that you may note the exact result. UNDER ORDINARY CONDITIONS YOU WILL FIND THAT WHEN SIXTY AMPERES IS REACHED THE IMAGE OF THE CRATER PROJECTED BY THE CENTER HOLE WILL JUST ABOUT COVER THE ENTIRE APERTURE OPENING.

What does this signify? Stop and think a moment. The image we are observing is projected by the pin hole representing the center zone of the converging lens. The image of the crater entirely covers the aperture. Is it not just plain common sense that no matter how much larger you may make the crater diameter by increasing the amperage, THE CENTER OF THE CONDENSER CANNOT POSSIBLY PUT ANY MORE LIGHT THROUGH AN APERTURE OF THAT SIZE LOCATED THAT DISTANCE AWAY FROM THE CONDENSER? All the additional light would, in the very nature of things, fall outside the aperture opening.

Study that over for a while, brother. The center zone of the condenser is, insofar as has to do with that distance X and Y, and that size aperture opening, WORKING AT ABSOLUTE MAXIMUM CAPACITY.

But now let us close the center hole and open the one next to it. We will find exactly the same size image, BUT IT WILL NOT BE LOCATED IN THE EXACT CENTER OF THE APERTURE OPENING. It will, instead, be located about as per X, in B, figure 2. This means that the zone of the condenser represented by the hole which is projecting B, Figure 2, projects its crater images off center at the aperture. It projects them of equal size with the center hole, but does NOT project them to the center of the aperture. The center of the crater image projected by this zone of the converging lens is off center in the aperture exactly proportionally as the pin point which projects it is off center in the converging lens. Get that firmly and clearly fixed in your minds, because unless you understand that you cannot understand what follows.

Now since the crater image projected by hole No. 2, as we shall call it, is of the same size as that projected by the center hole, but is not in the center of the aperture opening, it follows that IT WILL HAVE TO BE ENLARGED TO A GREATER

DIAMETER THAN WILL THE IMAGE PROJECTED BY THE CENTER HOLE BEFORE IT WILL ENTIRELY COVER THE APERTURE.

We now have a condition where at sixty amperes, or thereabouts, the crater image projected by the center zone of the converging lens is large enough to entirely cover the aperture, hence the center zone of the condenser is working to maximum capacity. We, however, find that the image projected by the second hole does NOT cover the entire amperage at sixty amperes, hence that zone of the condenser is not working to maximum capacity at sixty amperes, and we have to raise the amperage to probably seventy or seventy-five, or maybe even eight before the image projected by it covers the entire aperture opening, and that zone of the condenser is working to capacity, insofar as has to do with the aperture size and distances X and Y obtaining. The center zone is now working far above capacity and WASTING THE SURPLUS LIGHT.

C, figure 2, shows the off-center location of the image projected by the next outlying zone of the converging lens, and how much larger the crater image must be to cover the aperture, and bring that zone of the condenser up to maximum capacity, while D, Fig. 2, illustrates the condition as to the last, or outer zone, in which the outer ring represents the diameter of the image of a 125 ampere, or thereabouts, crater.

Under condition D we have not put much, if any, more light through the aperture from the zone represented by the rings in A, Fig. 2, but under condition A you will observe that the images projected by the outlying zones of the condenser would not entirely cover the aperture opening, while the images from the outer zones of the condenser would cover but a relatively small proportion of it.

Light Wasted

On the other hand when the condition represented by D is set up you will see that the images projected by the central zones of the condenser have been increased to exactly the same diameter as the outer ring in D, and all the light falling outside the actual aperture opening is, of course, wasted.

There, gentlemen, that is about as plain as I know how to make the matter. Experiment will make it clear to you, I am sure, if you have the patience, energy and facilities for making it. I will be glad to answer any questions relative to the matter which you may care to propound.

This applies equally to the high intensity arc in theory, but not so much in practice, because the crater of the high intensity arc is so much smaller, for any given amperage, than is that of the ordinary arc.

Screen Tests

Recently A. L. Raven addressed the American Projection Society on the subject of "Distortion in Motion Pictures." His address showed Mr. Raven to have a very comprehensive grasp of the subject. The quotation is clipped from the March American Projectionist, which gave a full account of the lecture:

Another interesting experiment can be made if you have a white diffusing type screen such as a plaster wall, muslin sheet or white painted screen, by hanging a small piece of specular screen, as the metallic coated types, somewhere near the center of your screen and projecting a beam of light from the projector to the screen, just as you would when projecting pictures but without the film in the machine. While the light is being projected take a position in the centre aisle of the theatre and to the rear of the house and you will observe that the screen that was white before the piece of specular screen that was placed against it will now seem dull and gray but the specular screen will be very bright.

Then take a position off to one side of the screen so that you are out of the direct reflection angle of the specular screen and the white screen will appear white as usual. The gray dull appearance will have disappeared and the specular screen will appear as if it were reflecting no light at all. The white screen appeared dull when viewed from the centre of the house because the harsh light from the specular screen caused the pupils of the eyes to close somewhat so that the proper amount of light per unit of time did not reach the retina from the white screen.

Useful Experiment

While Mr. Raven's analysis of the reasons for the change from gray to white may be correct, and in fact I am inclined to believe it is correct, it seemed to me this experiment had a far more useful value than Mr. Raven gave it in his talk.

If what he says is true as to the effect described, and I think it is true, then why is not this an eminently practical method of determining just what screen surface is best fitted to your theatre?

Suppose, for instance, you prepare a painted surface according to the directions on page 227 of the Bluebook. This screen, which I will hereafter refer to as screen X, should be of generous size—say not less than four feet square and six is better.

If it be a new theatre, hang screen X in the place where the center of the theatre screen will be, and have each screen salesman hang a sample, two-foot-square or thereabouts, of his screen in its center. Now examine it from ALL points in the house auditorium, including the balcony, if there be any. Unless my argument is at fault, the salesman's sample will be best from all points in the house where it shows a greater brightness than the painted surface, EXCEPT that we must take into consideration the low cost of frequent renewal of the paint, and the possibility, not to say probability, of heavy cost for renewal when the patent screen surface becomes dull.

Same Old Stuff

Then, too, if a screen salesman "happens along" with a "my-screen-surface-is-the-only one-on-earth-really-worth - even-considering" and the time worn "That-screen-of-yours-is-t-e-r-r-i-b-l-e, T*E*R*R*I*B*L*E" line of conversation, you have but to instruct him to place a sample of his screen in the center of your own, project the white light to it and examine it from all points in the theatre.

I think we may safely say that wherever you get a view which shows superior brightness from the salesman's sample, it will actually give a brighter picture from that point—WHILE IT IS NEW at any rate. Where the brilliance of the two is equal, the salesman's sample has no advantage in power of reflecting light to that point in the auditorium than has your own, and if your screen looks brighter or whiter from any point or points of your theatre, then the salesman's sample has inferior reflecting powers to your own, insofar as concerns that point, or those points.

Think it over. If Mr. Raven has any fault to find with my argument I shall be glad to have him set it forth because he impresses me as knowing his subject remarkably well. Strikes me that, as I said in the first place, this experiment points the way to a very efficient and very practical method of selecting a screen surface suitable for your theatre.

Seconds the Motion

Carlisle Anglemire, Projectionist "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pa., seconds John Griffith's motion, made in a recent issue, in which he objects to the sharp corner sprocket hole, and advocates rounded corner. Anglemire says:

With regard to brother Griffith's letter dealing with the two types of sprocket hole in film, I desire to second his motion. I believe the round corner sprocket hole, as advocated by brother Griffith, and illustrated in March 28 issue of the department, should be adopted as standard, as Griffith has suggested. I have myself noticed increased tendency to noise when projecting the sharp angle corner sprocket hole film.

It seems logical to suppose the round corners will withstand strain better, and thus prolong the useful life of film. AND anything which enables the film to withstand the abuse it is subjected to by the too numerous near-machine operators still at large, will be a great help, especially to the small town exhibitor and projectionist, who must use the films after every one else has taken a crack at them.

In closing, let's express the hope that your good right arm is better by now.

You bet it's better, friend Anglemire. If you don't believe it, come on over here and start callin' me uncomplimentary names.

Both as editor of this department and member of the Committee on Standards and Nomenclature of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, I thoroughly agree with yourself and brother Griffith. I hold that the round corner is LOGICALLY the stronger, and that it presents no known disadvantages.

Shame on You All!

Shame on you all! There are thousands of motion picture projectionists who read this department with more or less regularity, and probably half the number read it regularly, yet out of all that vast number only ONE (1) has taken the trouble to make comment on this most important matter, and that one is brother Anglemire. In a matter so closely and importantly allied to motion picture projection practice I should have had AT LEAST five hundred letters commenting on it. Let a matter of relative importance to architects appear in one of the leading architects journals and see what percentage of the architects will get busy with arguments for or against. THAT'S ONE REASON WHY ARCHITECTS GET REAL MONEY, BOY!

What It Was

Only one man of you all was able to identify the old projector, a picture of which was published in March 14 issue. Will C. Smith, at one time General Manager for the Nicholas Power Company, was the man. He identified it as the "Power Peerless," which was the name of the very first projector put out under Mr. Power's name. So that's that.

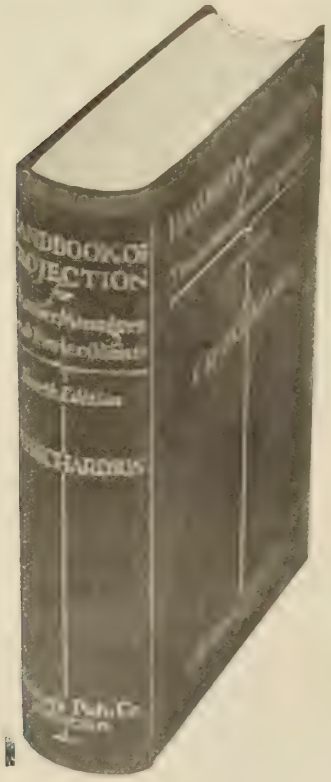
THE WAY TO IMPROVE!

PROJECTION



Some things in the Theatre Business, Mr. Exhibitor, are beyond your power to control. You have to use your best judgment—and gamble.

But you can control the quality of your Projection because it is a purely mechanical process governed by definite knowledge.

The Public Follows Perfect Projection.

F. H. Richardson's 4th Edition HANDBOOK OF PROJECTION is constant power in your hands.

Its 974 pages of illustrated practical information, and its 842 appropriate questions and answers has enabled thousands of exhibitors to have perfect projection.

It will do the same for you.

54 from UNIVERSAL

FIFTY-FOUR FROM UNIVERSAL FOR the year 1925-26 on Universal's Second White List!

EXHIBITORS, I KNOW, WILL GREET THIS WITH UNUSUAL APPLAUSE and appreciation.

IT IS IN ANSWER TO THEIR REQUESTS, WHICH HAVE LITERALLY bombarded me, for more and more features for next year from Universal.

IT PROVES TO ME THAT THE FIRST WHITE LIST MADE GOOD IN performance on all its promises.

NOW THE SECOND WHITE LIST INSURES EXHIBITORS A GREATER amount of White Pictures for next year—the kind that lift mortgages off theatres.

IT GUARANTEES EXHIBITORS THE SAME WHITE TREATMENT AND white contracts that made dealing with Universal a pleasure. Everything above board—nothing up anybody's sleeve.

YOU WILL FIND 30 JEWELS AND 24 BLUE STREAK WESTERNS LISTED on the following pages. I won't try to tell you here about these pictures. I have not allowed my advertising director to try to sell you with copy. You will find only facts (and then more facts) listed about each of them.

YOU'LL REALIZE AFTER READING THAT THERE ARE SPLENDID titles—box-office titles—stars with drawing power and directors with records of money making pictures in the Second White List.

BEHIND THIS SECOND WHITE LIST, UNIVERSAL WILL LAUNCH A tremendous advertising campaign—the greatest and widest—spread ever attempted by this company.

YOU WANTED MORE PICTURES—I'VE GIVEN THEM TO YOU. You've praised the principles upon which we built the First White List and I've given you a Second White List, based on the same principles.

The Sign of the best Serials

Produced and Released by Universal

1. PERILS OF THE PRIMITIVE
featuring BONOMO
with MARGUERITE QUIMBY

This is a story based on "Swiss Family Robinson." Mr. Laemmle is more enthusiastic about this serial than any serial released in many a year. There isn't a child living that can read that hasn't read this book. It's an ideal story for Bonomo, as it combines plenty of feats of strength with stirring adventures with wild animals. Directed by Francis Ford.

2. ACE OF SPADES
WILLIAM DESMOND
with MARY McALLISTER

You know what's happened with THE RIDDLE RIDER with William Desmond. This is proving to be one of the most successful serials released since Eddie Polo's. William Desmond is the serial star today. He stands alone! THE ACE OF SPADES is another fast moving Western picture, laid in Oklahoma during the last big "land rush." The coast reports the first episode is a knockout. Directed by Henry McRae.

3. THE SCARLET STREAK
featuring BONOMO

Following "The Ace of Spades" comes THE SCARLET STREAK which is Bonomo's second serial of our next year's schedule. This is a story based on the "death ray" which has consumed pages of space in the papers throughout the world. This will be a big production as we plan on making it very high class, and will probably be the most expensive serial made during the year.

4. THE WINKING IDOL

Our fourth serial is THE WINKING IDOL, stirring Western dramas of the Aztec country written by Charles Van Loan, a famous author. The cast for this picture has not been settled as yet, but will likely include William Desmond, our Western "ace."

5. THE PHANTOM ISLAND

From the stirring novel of adventure and mystery by Frank R. Adams. With a great cast, a famous director and a tremendously thrilling story, it is certain to be a tremendous asset at all box offices.

6. STRINGS OF STEEL

STRINGS OF STEEL is by Phillip Dutton Hurn and Oscar Lund, a romance of the development of the telephone. The coast is extremely enthusiastic about this story and say that it will make one of the best serials we have ever released.

You'll say it again and again—UNIVERSAL Has the Serials

Milwaukee?

THERE is an undercurrent of feeling that the coming Milwaukee convention is going to really accomplish something. In other quarters there is the faintest suggestion that conventions always will be conventions, that speeches and resolutions are the best that can be expected.

The answer is in the hands of the exhibitors who go to Milwaukee.

If they are going with no preconceived plan of action, with merely a desire to let off steam and cuss words—then it can be set down now that they are helping the cause of those whom they oppose.

Resolutions are not play dates.

Play dates are, first and last, the essential commodity of this business.

If the exhibitors who go to Milwaukee are not ready to donate their play dates to the cause they can just as well withhold the speeches and the enthusiasm.

That's the whole story.

WE INCLINE to the belief that Sydney S. Cohen and his associates have a definite course of procedure in mind. The preconvention campaign has been staged with adroit ability. That same ability, it seems to us, cannot fail to realize that a convention this year that accomplishes nothing more than speeches will be little short of a calamity.

This is the critical year.

If we return from Milwaukee with the usual post-convention feeling — the "what was it all about?" attitude—then it will be for independent distributors and exhibitors to buckle down to business and forget the attempts at organized activity.

There are no handicaps this time; there can be no alibis.

Harmony is not an impossibility.

The leaders of the Allied States group are maintaining an attitude of kindly, if passive, interest. "If anything constructive is done, we are with them," says Al Steffes. "We will by no means do anything that might in any way be construed as an attempt to toss monkey wrenches."

That's the right spirit. From it almost anything might come.

The answer is up to the men at Milwaukee.

WE DON'T like to go too far into the record. But it might be just as well to do so for the purpose of pointing a "horrible example" to the men who will go to Milwaukee.

Memory tells us of a Chicago convention flooded with resolutions about what the exhibitors were going to do to Paramount if that organization didn't stop buying theaters.

Paramount is still buying theaters—and selling pictures to the men who made the speeches.

Next we come to a Cleveland convention that accomplished the stupendous task of casting Frank Rembusch into outer darkness.

Minneapolis, it seems to us, can be summed up in the presentation of a check to Mrs. Dodge.

Washington and Chicago again—and hectic civil war, but no Emancipation Proclamation for Independents.

Boston — and a harmony fest. A rip-roaring resolution aimed at Marcus Loew—and "referred to the Executive Committee."

Without going too far into the dim past, that comes pretty close to being a convention history.

Will we add Milwaukee to the list?

Or start a new list?

The answer is in your care, gentlemen.

Speaking Freely

BACK home—and broke. From West Baden, Indiana. First National's spring meeting. "And a good time was had by all."

Right here we want to say that we hope First National never abandons these Spring and Fall get-togethers. They are a great chance to meet on one spot as representative a group of exhibitors and producers as the industry boasts. They can hold the next one in Kamchatka and we'll be there. We wouldn't miss the chance of renewing acquaintances and shaking hands all around if we had to walk there.

The boys did some very good work, too. Induced Robert Lieber to remain as president, despite his desire to rest and give some attention to his health. That was a good trick. Number Two: The addition of Sol Lesser to the Executive Committee. Sol is a pretty capable citizen, and it is a move in the right direction to get his wisdom and film brains in the executive councils.

Incidentally, quite a few of the franchise holders told us that Sol is blossoming out as a speaker. He must have handed some straight talk out at some of the sessions.

Unless the action at West Baden was merely a trading gesture it looks as though Sam Goldwyn and First National are to part company. Sam has made some pretty good pictures in the past year, too. But there is a difference of opinion as to how high a negative cost can go and still leave a margin for comfort.

The big news of the meeting concerns the rumbles that Gordon's New England string is to come under the control of Famous. Some folks say that Famous already has an option. Others that there is still the possibility of a group of First National men getting together on a deal. A mere matter of eight to ten million dollars is involved. Looks like an opportunity if you have that much lying around loose.

This is a serious matter to First National. Even more serious than the well-remembered Hulsey incident, for it was thought that the gates had been closed after the horse was stolen that time. If Famous can come in First National's back door and annex so important a territory as New England almost anything might happen.

The franchise isn't involved. Cannot be. But the franchise without the theatres is something else again.

Look for more announcements from Famous. There are other circuits hanging on the plum tree.

Charlie Burr and Bob Kane are two welcome additions to the First National group. The boys at West Baden were frank in showing how glad they are to have them. And they tell us that President Lieber made a speech on comedies at one of the sessions that couldn't have been stronger if Charlie Burr had written it himself.

Hiram Abrams was on hand. Smiling urbanely, and trying to tell interviewers that he was thinking more of rest than business. Oh, yes! Hiram has reason to smile this year, with the line-up that Joe Schenck is preparing out there at Los Angeles. Give Hiram plenty of things to sell and he's happy.

Paul Mooney got out of bed after a tussle with la Grippe and journeyed to the flowing springs. Wouldn't have missed the trip for the world after listening to the glowing words about "Charley's Aunt."

Pretty soft for a sales manager when you can get a chap like Max Balaban giving a half hour's speech about your picture—and that was what the Chicago wizard did for "Charley's Aunt."

Judging from the atmosphere Eddie Eschmann's sales report must have made a hit.

Henry Ginsberg sneaked in on the gathering playing a lone hand and came away with some contracts. We are going to get a commission on the Lee Goldberg one.

Guy Morgan had Sam Goldwyn's worries on his shoulders, which didn't give him much chance to smile.

At that he didn't have as much trouble as Charles Pinkerton, who, in a moment of abberation accepted the job of Traffic Manager. Never again!

Captain Bains, of Kinograms, did a good job for his weekly by giving the franchise holders a chance to meet him and get acquainted with a corking personality.

We have seen many examples of printing in this industry. We have occasionally thought we had seen "the last word." And then something else has come along to add another word. But we think it will be a long time before anyone surpasses the Metro-Goldwyn book for this year. Howard Dietz did the job. And a great job it is. Too big and fine for us to even attempt a description.

Bruce Johnston got back from Europe just in time to turn around and catch the train for West Baden. Life is just one trip after another for Bruce since he entered the foreign field.

Shucks, he hasn't much on us. We are just catching our breath and before we really do that we will have to start for Milwaukee. And we quit selling once because we didn't like the road. Oh, hum!—— R. E. W.

Harry Nolan to Build Mountain States Circuit

HARRY NOLAN, First National franchise owner for Denver and district manager in the Mountain States territoy for the same organization, has thrown his hat into the ring. The well-known pioneer is getting into action this week on the job of building up a new circuit through the Mountain States section. Plans for the financing operations start at once. The identity of Mr. Nolan's associates was not made public.

As a member of the Swanson and Nolan firm Harry Nolan's film career dates back to the earliest days of the industry. The firm conducted a number of theatres at one time and also owned the Universal exchange for Denver. In recent years Harry Nolan has refrained from extensive theatre operations, retaining only four theatres and giving most of his attention to the distribution of First National product.

Facts and Figures on Product

By Sydney S. Cohen

ACTUATED by a desire to dispel from the minds of my fellow theatre owners the fear that there would be a shortage of worthwhile pictures for the coming year, and impelled by the desire to prove correct my own oft repeated claims that there would be more quality product from the independents than ever before in the history of the industry—I, in my capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, sent out under date of March 15th the appended questionnaire to all of the known producing concerns.

The response was overwhelming, and the extremely encouraging results are tabulated below. It is indeed gratifying to learn from them that not only will there be no possible shortage of product during the coming season, but that there will be an abundance of quality pictures from the Independents. Thus is my contention most fully borne out; and since this condition is one of benefit to my fellow theatre owners it is a double satisfaction.

In the following tabulated results of the questionnaire, theatre owners will note that not only does the quantity and quality of the product listed therein assure the big downtown first run houses, and first run houses everywhere—(neighborhood or in the smaller cities) of an ample supply from which to choose their programs; but the smaller theatre owner's needs will be fully cared for as well.

Read our questionnaire carefully, and then read this following list of films with the same care. This is information furnished us by these various producers and the classification is theirs not ours.

The Questions

(1) How many feature motion picture productions of more than 5,000 feet in length will your company release during the coming season?

(2) How many feature pictures will you release, that you might classify (A) (B)?

(A) of course referring to the type of picture worthy of a full week's run in cities or zones where such is the policy; or for the longest possible run given a picture in the larger neighborhood theatres or first class houses in smaller cities and towns.

(B) To refer to all other features worthy of a split-week run in houses dedicated to that policy or to the three, four or five day run which the first class houses in smaller cities and towns and the large neighborhood houses give to features which merit such showings.

(3) How many feature pictures, usually described as program pictures, will you release? These, of course, are pictures worthy of a two day play, to be played either singly or as double features according to the policy of the theatre—or to be played singly in the smaller, daily change houses.

Canadian Fire Heads Decree Inflammable Films Be Labelled

A complete session at the annual joint convention at Ottawa, Ontario, April 20 and 22 of the Association of Canadian Fire Marshals and of the Dominion Fire Prevention Association was devoted to the subject of moving pictures, various phases of the topic being listed under the following items: importation, transportation, manufacture, storage, sale and use of films in Canada.

Delegates from all parts of the Dominion took part in the discussions but the sole net result was a recommendation to the Canadian Parliament and various Provincial legislatures as follows:

"That moving picture films be so labelled when being transported from one point to another that ample warning will be given as to their degree of inflammability."

Another progressive step, however, was the organization of a "Film Hazard Committee" in the personnel of the Dominion Fire Prevention Association to study the numerous angles of the use and handling of moving picture films. The chairman of the new body is Raymond S. Peck, director of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau, Ottawa, this being a branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce. Others elected to the committee include: Capt. Orr, M.C., Toronto, director of the Ontario Moving Picture License Department; G. T. Lewis of Toronto and Tom Moore of Ottawa, the latter being president of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress, incidentally representing the organized motion picture operators of the country.

KANSAS CITY MAN TO COAST FOR PARAMOUNT

Sidney R. Kent, general manager for F. P.-L., when interviewed recently at Kansas City, according to reports reaching this publication, stated, as to the future status of Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman and Royal theatres, Kansas City:

"Mr. Newman will go to the West Coast in June or July to manage the Rialto, Metropolitan and Grauman theatres for Paramount. Our company now is on a deal to buy the Newman and Royal theatres in Kansas City and I believe the final papers will be signed in Los Angeles during the Paramount sales convention."

Petition Mayor to Prohibit Carnivals

A petition which is sponsored by the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri and which will be presented to Mayor Albert I. Beach is being circulated in Kansas City this week as a result of tactics of a carnival company at Thirty-first street and Southwest boulevard. The petition:

"We, the undersigned business men and residents of Kansas City, Mo., respectfully petition you, honorable mayor, to exert your best efforts to the end that carnival companies may not locate and show in our city, as we believe them to be a menace to society and detrimental to our business interests."

St. Louis Courts to Decide if Showman Can Reward Fan

Whether the proprietor of a picture show has the legal right to present attendance prizes to his patrons is to be tested in the courts of St. Louis, Mo.

The reform wave is rampant in the Mound City. At the recent city election Victor J. Miller, running on a strict law enforcement platform, was selected for Mayor, and immediately thereafter the Board of Police Commissioners appointed by Governor Samuel A. Baker declared war on raffles, euchres, pinochle, lotto and other games for prizes.

Including in their edict attendance prizes of all kind, the police on Sunday, April 19, arrested Louis Stahl, manager-owner of the Union Theatre, Union Boulevard at Easton Avenue, on a charge of operating a lottery or some such charge.

For many months Stahl has held what he terms Pay Days for the children of his neighborhood. It has been his custom to once each month give a special matinee for the children and to distribute pay envelopes and candy to every child attending. The envelopes contain from one cent to $2 each.

Buffalo Planning a Booking Combine?

That efforts are again being made to form a booking combine in the Buffalo territory are intimated from a letter which is being sent out to exhibitors by an attorney, evidently representing a group of exhibitors. The letter reads in part:

"Several owners of moving picture houses in Western New York have discussed with the writer the advisability of having a central purchasing agency for their films. The advantages of concentrated buying are too well known to need much in the way of explanation. The writer, who is an absolute outsider so far as the moving picture industry is concerned, has been asked to communicate with you and ask if you would attend a meeting with several of your associates to discuss the possibilities of a practical working plan that would be to the mutual benefit of all concerned."

Inquiries fail to divulge who is behind the move.

T. O. C. C. INSTALLS OFFICERS; GIVES O'REILLY DIAMOND

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce on the night of April 28 at a dinner in the Hotel Plaza installed officers for the ensuing year recently elected. With the exception of one or two changes, the entire staff was then re-elected. Chairman Charles O'Reilly was presented with a diamond ring by members of the organization as a token of the esteem with which they hold him.

Short speeches were made by many, including Attorney Nathan Burkan, Will Hays, Chairman O'Reilly, Senator James J. Walker and Sydney Cohen, newly elected to head the T. O. C. C.'s board of directors.

WORLD'S PROPHECY FULFILLED

As predicted in a recent issue of Moving Picture World, Governor Alfred E. Smith vetoed the bill which was passed by the New York state Legislature, and which amended the general business law of the state as it relates to the manufacture and use of film of a nitro-cellulose base.

Coming and Going

George Fitzmaurice, motion picture director, has just returned on the S.S. Paris from a trip to France.

Marion Davies, Cosmopolitan star, arrived in New York this week from Hollywood.

J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president and general manager of Film Booking Offices, returned to New York a few days ago after a two weeks' sojourn at the Coast studios of the company.

Pat Dowling arrived in New York this week on the Homeric from England, where he had been vacationing.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., arrived in New York this week on the Majestic from England where he had been in his annual conference with his London associates.

Harold Lloyd and several members of his company arrived in New York from the Coast recently.

B. Berger, general manager of Gerson Pictures, is in Manhattan from San Francisco.

Henry King left the East a few days ago enroute for the Coast.

Edward L. Klein sailed for Europe this week.

M. P. T. O. A. Reveals Portion of Program for Milwaukee

The stage is all set for the Milwaukee Convention. Those who attend will witness big and important happenings from Tuesday to Friday, May 12 to 15th. A portion of the convention program which has been taken care of by the Milwaukee-Wisconsin Committee, follows:

Lawrence Whittet, Secretary of the Milwaukee Association of Commerce, will deliver an address of welcome on Tuesday. A sight-seeing trip on Wednesday for the ladies who will leave the Milwaukee Auditorium at ten o'clock, visit the Eline Chocolate factory and have luncheon at one of the resorts on the lake. After luncheon the theatres will be open to welcome these visitors. A Dutch Lunch will be served in the basement of the Auditorium for the delegates on Wednesday afternoon, and in the evening, a banquet and dance will be held at Gimbel Brothers' Grill. For Thursday afternoon, another sight-seeing trip has been arranged for the ladies who will visit the Phoenix Hosiery Plant, Mitchell Park, West Allis, Wauwatosa and Washington Park Zoo. Thursday evening the Wisconsin Theatre Roof Garden will be at the disposal of these who wish to go there.

As all of the time of the convention will be devoted entirely to business sessions, this extensive program for the ladies has been arranged to occupy their stay in Milwaukee. The complete convention program is now being arranged and will be published a week before the time of the convention.

GOLF TOURNEY JUNE 9

The Film Daily spring tournament, an annual event in the Manhattan district of the film industry, will be held this year on June 9 at Briarcliff Lodge, Westchester County.

M. P. T. O. of Western Pa. Talks Arbitration at 5th Convention

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania held their fifth annual convention at the George Washington Hotel, Washington, Pa., on April 21, 22 and 23. The convention was without doubt the greatest in every way ever held by the organization. The attendance was large, much work was accomplished, many important problems were threshed out, and the theatre owners in attendance were made acquainted with the proposed booking combines throughout the country, and the possible consequent formation of a huge trust which would revolutionize present conditions in the industry.

They were told that if the contemplated trust becomes a reality, an independent organization must be formed to combat it. This was the topic that dominated the entire convention. Practically all of the speakers dwelt at length on this phase in the operation of the theatres. The speakers urged the theatre owners not to sign up with any booking arrangement of any kind, at least not until after the forthcoming National Convention to be held in Milwaukee.

Harry Davis, prominent Pittsburgh exhibitor, speaking on the subject, urged the support of the independent producers, and said that the only way to encourage the independents is with playdates. For if they do not have the playdates, they cannot produce the pictures. "Sign up with a booking arrangement of any kind, and you sign over the control of your theatre," said Mr. Davis.

In discussing the troubles of the arbitration board of Ohio, Samuel Bullock of Cleveland, stated arbitration meant one continual battle. The object of this board is to adjust grievances between the exhibitors and the exchangemen, but Mr. Bullock stated that it was one continual drag. He asserted that the exchanges do not want the truth. He related many experiences the board had had in carrying out its decisions, and in securing adjustments for the exhibitor.

President D. A. Harris stated that the business of the arbitration board is to adjust the differences between the exhibitors and exchanges, and he told the assembly that the board is not intended for the benefit of the exchange.

In explaining the work of the Pittsburgh arbitration board, M. A. Rosenberg stated that the greatest number of complaints come from the exchanges. The exchange is then prepared to fight to a finish and has its case all prepared in legal form, while the exhibitor generally does not. He advised the exhibitors, in bringing complaints against the exchanges, to prepare their cases beforehand. He stated that the arbitration was a battle, but he felt that the exhibitors had accomplished something through its workings.

R. F. "Pete" Woodhull, chairman of the national board of directors, made a talk on the menace of block booking and he proposed theatre combines. He also urged the support of the independents.

Declaring that the official and popular mind in Pennsylvania was now most appreciative of the real value of the Motion Picture Theatre as a community institution and the importance of the leadership inherent in the custodians of this great medium of expression—the screen—and that transformation of a pronounced character resulted as a consequence, M. J. O'Toole, head of the M. P. T. O. A. detailed in an interesting manner the advances made in this relation to the convened theatre owners.

A resolution was read and adopted whereby an effort will be made to have exhibitors of West Virginia join the Western Pennsylvania organization. M. A. Sybert, of Moundsville, W. Va., added to the resolution by making a motion, which was later carried, that no exhibitor in West Virginia should be given the privileges of the arbitration services of the organization unless he is a member.

The banquet on Wednesday evening was a very enjoyable affair. Approximately 300 persons were present including the theatre owners, their families, and many of the Pittsburgh exchangemen. Keith performers, by the courtesy of the State Theatre at Washington, furnished the entertainment. Among the speakers were: M. J. O'Toole, R. F. "Pete" Woodhull, Sam Bullock, Mayor W. W. Hoyt, of Washington, Harry Davis, D. A. Harris, Fred Herrington, Walter Silverberg and Henry W. Gauding.

At the closing session Thursday afternoon, April 23, the incumbent officers were re-elected for the ensuing year, as follows: D. A. Harris, president; M. A. Rosenbloom, vice-president; B. Nadler, treasurer; F. J. Herrington, secretary. Wm. R. Wheat, M. A. Rosenbloom and Hyman Goldberg, whose terms as directors had expired, were also re-elected.

Following are the names of the exhibitors who registered at the fifth annual convention of the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania, at the George Washington Hotel, Washington, Pa., April 21st, 22nd and 23rd:

H. B. Kester, Pittsburgh; Sam Bullock, Cleveland; Mr. Blackburn, Pittsburgh; Sam Haimovitz, New Kensington; R. F. "Pete" Woodhull, Dover, L. R. Meyers, McKeesport; George McGowan, Indiana; S. Kept His Head

When fire threatened the block in which the Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass., is a part, Manager Frank Hookailo quietly announced to his audience of 2,000 that a break in the projection machine prohibited the showing of the feature picture. While the fans, unaware of the neighboring danger, filed orderly to the street the orchestra was kept at full tilt. The fire, which took place recently, is estimated to have caused damage amounting to about $10,000.

Badger-Paramount Attitude Unchanged

Predictions which had been made in some quarters, that the Milwaukee office of Paramount would change its attitude towards the Badger Theatres Corporation after the annual New York convention, have failed to materialize and the two are still as far apart as ever.

G. A. Smith, local Paramount manager, denied upon his return that Wisconsin's booking combine had even been discussed. "We are adhering to the same policy which we established in the past," was his only comment.

Pedigo Visits the World

Ned Pedigo, who has been in the show business more years than most, and who recently sold his theatre in Guthrie, Oklahoma, visited the Moving Picture World office this week. Ned has a tent and his car and all the fixings and is touring all over the country, expecting to devote most of the summer to it. He will end up in Guthrie again, it having been his home since he was eleven. "Will you go back into the show business?" we asked him. "Well, I think not," he said. "The boys in the exchanges all tell me I will. Maybe. But it's a game I'm glad to be out of—for the time being, anyhow."

NEILAN BUYS GARSON STUDIOS

The Harry Garson Studios, 1845 Glendale Boulevard, Hollywood, have been acquired through outright purchase by Marshall Neilan and P. A. Powers for Marshall Neilan Productions, the latter organization announces. Extensive alterations and additions which when completed will accommodate four producing units are already under way. Neilan will act as general director in addition to personally directing one unit. The other three will be under three outstanding directors, to be announced shortly.

MANAGINC WEST COAST CHAIN

Archer M. Bowles, of San Francisco, general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., Northern California division, and formerly manager of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, has been made general manager of the entire West Coast circuit of moving picture houses, numbering more than 120. He succeeds Harry C. Arthur who resigned recently to accept a position with a large eastern financial concern.

Steffes' Iron-Clad Contract Seen As Steel Helmet to Producer Club

Allied Theatres Circuit Already Recruits 102 from Only Key Spots in Northwest—Soon to Invade Dakotas, Comb Towns

By TOM WALLER

UNDER an iron-clad contract W. A. Steffes is signing up Northwest theatres into the Allied Theatres Circuit. A week ago it is known that Steffes had secured 102 signatures to copies of his contract. None of these 102 represent any portion of North and South Dakota, which states, it is said, have not yet been approached by the growing Northwest buying combine. Present plans, as gleaned at this time, call for their invasion in the near future.

The 102 theatres at present registered represent only key points, their adjacent smaller territories having not yet been combed. Before many weeks it is the expectation of the new circuit to have thoroughly scoured every inch of the jurisdiction within its boundaries and to have doubled or more the present quota of recruits.

The Allied Theatres Circuit is termed the agent in the contract. Under the terms of this stipulation the agent, with the final approval of the respective member, will act for the exhibitor in the contracting of all film. Also that the showman shall not sell or assign his interest in the theatre until he has given the agent ample notice, when the agent will have the option to make such purchase.

This latter clause is seen as a direct and decisive blow at the maker of pictures who would assume the title of producer-distributor-exhibitor. Armed with such an option the circuit would be able to quash attempts by such producers to acquire the houses of its members.

The membership contract is as follows:

MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT

Entered into this.....day of....., 1925, by and between..... of ..... proprietor of the.....Theatre at ....., hereinafter described as exhibitor, and Allied Theatres Circuit, Incorporated, hereinafter described as agent, WITNESSETH:

In consideration of the acts, payments and mutual promises of the parties, it is agreed:

1. That the exhibitor hereby grants, delegates to and confers upon the agent the sole and exclusive right to negotiate, bargain and contract for motion pictures to be exhibited in said theatre and used by the said exhibitor;

2. That the exhibitor will suply to the agent copies of contracts with film exchanges for pictures or service shown or used in said theatre during the past two years or more; and will supply all information required by and necessary to the agent to inform him fully as to the price paid for pictures or picture service and the terms and conditions under which such pictures and service have been shown in said theatre during said period;

3. That the agent alone will act for the said exhibitor and theatre in negotiating and arranging for contracts, in the standard and usual form, for the showing or exhibition of special feature, regular program, or other, motion pictures or service, and will forward such contracts to the exhibitor when prepared; if such contracts shall be satisfactory as to form and price the exhibitor shall sign and return same to the agent who shal thereupon countersign them and deliver the copies thereof to the respective distributors or producers with whom made; it being understood that such contracts shall not become binding nor effective for or against the exhibitor or theatre until both the exhibitor and the agent shall have signed same;

4. That the exhibitor or theatre will pay the agent, for its services, a sum equal to 15 per cent of the amount paid as rental by or for the theatre for all pictures or film service, which shall be shown or used by the said exhibitor or theatre beginning June 1, 1925; provided that, if payment be made prior to the showing of such pictures or service, or on or before the Thursday of the week following such showing, he or it shall pay only 10 per cent of such cost;

5. That the exhibitor or theatre shall arrange all details of bookings, routing, advertising matter, etc., with the distributor but shall report, in writing, to the agent the dates of all bookings not less than fifteen days in advance of showings; and if he or it shall fail to do so the agent shall be entitled to and shall be paid the full 15 per cent of the cost of such service as his commission, whether paid in advance of such showing or not; provided that, if any change shall be made in the booking or showing of pictures after such report has been made the exhibitor shall pay only 10 per cent commission thereon to the agent;

6. That this contract shall not be assignable by either party without the consent of the other; that the exhibitor shall not sell or transfer his interest in said theatre without first notifying the agent in writing of his intention so to do, whereupon the agent shall, within 90 days after receiving such written notice, have the first, prior and exclusive right to purchase same for $.....; provided that, if the exhibitor shall procure, from his or its successor or vendee, a written agreement to accept, conform to and carry out the terms and provisions of its instrument, such agreement will be accepted by the agent in lieu of, and as a release and discharge of, the foregoing option to buy;

7. That this contract shall not be terminable for two years from the date hereof except by mutual consent; that thereafter the exhibitor or theatre may terminate same by giving six months' notice of cancellation in writing, such cancellation to be effective at the end of the twenty-sixth week after the agent shall receive such notice; and the agent shall not be entitled to or be paid any amount after the effective date of such cancellation except for services performed prior to the receipt of such notice;

8. That, subject to the foregoing terms and conditions, this contract shall extend to and be binding upon the heirs, personal representatives, successors and assigns of the parties;

9. That the exhibitor shall be entitled to a vote for the nomination of two of five directors of the agent; and the two nominees receiving the highest number of votes of exhibitors shall be elected and qualified by the agent to act, and shall act, as such

$18,790,800 for New U. S. Theatres

According to a special dispatch from Washington, thirty-six contracts calling for new theatres throughout the United States, representing a total of $18,790,800, have been placed since January first of this year. The Middle West led in value of contracts awarded, the amount involved being $5,700,000.

The largest single contract in this last mentioned total was that of Warner Brothers, who, the dispatch states, have drawn plans for a theatre building at Youngstown, Ohio, to cost $1,000,000. In the Middle Atlantic States the sum of $5,100,000 will be expended, while in New England $550,000 will be absorbed. In the Southern States $1,000,000 is the total. West of the Mississippi the building operations amount to $1,500,000, and in the Far West, $4,940,800.

Pathe Re-Elects Its Officers at Annual Stockholders Meet

The annual stockholders' meeting of Pathe Exchange, Inc., was held at the Pathe home office, New York City, April 28. The following directors were elected: Charles Pathe, Edmund C. Lynch, Paul Fuller, Jr., William Fellowes Morgan, Jansen Noyes, Elmer Pearson, Lewis Innerarity, Bernhard Benson, G. L. Chanier

Immediately after the stockholders' meeting the board of directors' meeting was held and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Chairman of the board, Edmund C. Lynch; president, Paul Fuller, Jr.; vice-president, Elmer Pearson; vice-president, Bernhard Benson; secretary, Lewis Innerarity; treasurer, John Humm; assistant treasurer, W. C. Smith.

Pearson was also reappointed general manager of the company. He reported the company's affairs in a prosperous condition and the outlook good.

Joe Friedman Wins

Product under Metro-Goldwyn's second contract goes to the Tower Theatre, St. Paul, owned by Joe Friedman. It is understood that the competition in the St. Paul territory was especially keen for the Metro-Goldwyn sheaf of box office attractions. Among the contestants in the race which Friedman won was the aggressive and locally powerful Finkelstein and Ruben circuit.

Warner Bros. Will Retain Vitagraph Co. Trade Mark

THE purchase of the Vitagraph Company of America by Warner Brothers, which caused a stir in motion picture circles last week, does not mean that the old company is to pass out of existence, according to Harry M. Warner. He stated that the Vitagraph trade mark will be continued with a bigger and better program, in addition to the forty pictures already announced by Warner Brothers.

All Vitagraph business will be in charge of the departmental heads of Warner Brothers and conducted from the home office of the Warners, 1600 Broadway. The advertising and publicity departments have now moved in from Flatbush, and are functioning under the Warner Brothers advertising department.

Harry M. Warner has arrived in Los Angeles to check up on the Vitagraph production schedule. Before leaving New York he said:

"The purchase of Vitagraph by Warner Brothers means that Warners become a tremendous factor in distribution as well as production. In addition to our own forty pictures, we will go ahead with production under the Vitagraph trade mark and as far as possible carry out the plans under way by that company when the purchase was made.

"Just exactly how many pictures Warners will have under the programs of the two companies it is impossible to say at this time. But it surely means that the exhibitors will have a stronger hold on independence because they will be assured of a steady supply of high class product distributed through a major, old line exchange system.

"Warner Brothers' product for the 1925-26 season and all future Warner pictures will be distributed through the newly acquired Vitagraph exchanges. Concerning actual production, I will have more to say upon my return from Los Angeles in about three weeks."

While Warner Brothers acquire no contract stars by the purchase, it does obtain a number of valuable pictures already in release. Also two finished but not released, "Wildfire," with Aileen Pringle, and "The Unknown Lover," starring Elsie Ferguson. There is also in production at present "Steel of the Royal Mounted," featuring Bert Lytell, and "The Happy Warrior," a J. Stuart Blackton production.

Vitagraph has announced 30 pictures on its production schedule and it is for the purpose of straightening out this program so that it dovetails with the Warner schedule that Harry M. Warner is now in Los Angeles.

Although Warner Brothers through the Vitagraph purchase acquires an eastern studio in Brooklyn, it is not likely that they will produce in the east for the present. Harry Warner said that with their own splendidly equipped studio in Hollywood and the twenty acre Vitagraph west coast plant they would have sufficient producing room in the west for their present plans.

What Warners may do with the Flatbush studio in regard to future production will be decided later. The company will retain the studio, according to Mr. Warner, so that they will have a plant in case production in the East is found necessary.

There was welcome news to both Warner Bros. and Vitagraph department heads on April 27 when the organizations met in the Astor Hotel at a luncheon which is to be a weekly affair hereafter. Sam Warner was introduced to the newcomers into the Warner organization by Sam E. Morris, general manager of Vitagraph.

In welcoming the Vitagraph men, Mr. Warner spoke of the fine feeling in the industry for Vitagraph and stated emphatically that in taking over the Vitagraph exchanges, the personnel was not to be disturbed.

Over-Booking!

C. E. Williams, president of the M. P. T. O. of Nebraska and Western Iowa, issued this week a statement saying that there are a great many exhibitors in that jurisdiction who have over-bought product and that others should be careful not to follow suit. He emphasizes:

"You should approach this subject with extreme care and consideration, as you must understand that all pictures contracted for must be played."

Not Up to Church, Says Buffalo Judge Granting Theatre Permit

QUOTING from Mayor Frank X. Schwab's recent proclamation that the theatre is a recognized national institution and stating that the refusal of the city council to grant Simon Wertheimer an unqualified permit to build a motion picture theatre on Hertel avenue, Buffalo, "might well have been held arbitrary, tyrannical, capricious and unreasonable," Justice Hinkley in a decision has issued Wertheimer a peremptory writ of mandamus compelling the city to grant him a permit.

In 1923 Wertheimer commenced the erection of the building at 1400 Hertel avenue to be used as stores, offices and a theatre. When the stores and offices were completed Wertheimer applied for a permit to erect the theatre building. The council on November 21, 1923, resolved that inasmuch as the theatre was to be opposite Saint Margaret's Church, Wertheimer be granted the permit subject to the consent of the church authorities. The church refused its sanction and the council refused to issue the permit.

"A study of this unique resolution presents interesting questions," stated Justice Hinkley, referring to the council's resolution. "That it is fatally defective upon its face is readily apparent. The council places in the hands of an unofficial body, the church authorities, the governmental function of granting or refusing a permit to petitioner to erect a motion picture theatre. It thereby gives to that unofficial body the power arbitrarily to deprive the petitioner herein of his vested interests in real property." The real question of the litigation, declares the court, is the application for a permit to erect a motion picture theatre.

"Legislation and its judicial construction must keep pace with advancing civilization. Much of the confusion of legislation and judicial precedent is due to the early puritanical ideas that a theatre in and of itself is an inherent evil. Exhibition of moving pictures on the Sabbath was, as late as 1916, a crime.

"The enviable position of the modern theatre, in its accomplishment of moral uplift, is clearly indicated in the well chosen language of the mayor in a recent written proclamation."

In conclusion the court states: "There is no judicial sanction which vests in the council either police power or legislative authority to prohibit the erection of a theatre in any particular locality. It follows that the council has no authority to refuse to grant the petitioner's permit because the theatre is across the street from a church. To compel it to do that which it was required to do is not controlling its discretion, for it had no discretion so to act." Incidentally, the council is made to pay $50 costs.

Buffalo Film Trade Is Headed by McCarthy

Frank J. A. McCarthy, one of the most popular film men in the state and manager of the Buffalo office of First National, has been elected president of the Film Board of Trade of Buffalo, succeeding Sydney Samson of Bond Photoplays, who has held the office for three years. McCarthy, a graduate of Harvard University, has been associated with Paramount and other companies in the Buffalo territory, prior to going with First National.

Other new officers of the board are: Vice-president, Colonel Howard F. Brink of Educational; secretary, Earl W. Kramer of Universal; treasurer, Henry W. Kahn of Metro-Goldwyn. The board of directors: Norman L. Sper, Dependable, chairman; Sydney Samson, Bond; Fred M. Zimmerman, Producers Distributing Corporation; Basil Brady, Pathe, and Charles W. Anthony.

The Film Board is now occupying new quarters at 59 Root Building on the fifth floor. Installation ceremonies will be held at Stein's Hotel in Orchard Park on the evening of May 4. A committee composed of Messrs. Samson, Zimmerman and Kahn is now busy arranging for this annual event.

BIG FIRST NATIONAL POST TO HARRY D. WILSON

Arrangements this week have been concluded between Al Rockett and John E. McCormick of First National Pictures, and Harry D. Wilson whereby Wilson will assume the post of director of publicity and exploitation for First National Productions on the West Coast. The arrangements will become effective immediately. Walter Rivers, who has held this position, will enter the scenaric department of First National and Silas Snyder who is also identified with the First National exploitation department, will remain in his present capacity.

For several years, Wilson has been publicizing stars individually. Prior to that, he was for six years associated with Sol Lesser, during which time he exploited Jackie Coogan, Baby Peggy, and many other units under Lesser's banner.

Incorporations

Motion picture companies incorporated at the rate of one a day during the past week, the records in the secretary of state's office showing that a total of seven charters were issued to companies entering the business in New York state. With but one exception, the new companies will maintain their principal business office in Manhattan. The largest company was the Shore Road Theatres Corporation, capitalized at $200,000, with J. B. Berger, Frederick and Anita Huebner, of Brooklyn. Other companies formed during the week were: the 48th St. Studio Corp, $10,000, Samuel Cahen, Dorothy Starr, Nathan Raff, New York; Pen and Pencil Films, Inc., $5,000, B. Ginzburg, B. Wintheil, H. Berlin, New York, while the following did not specify the amount of capitalization: Benak Films, Inc., Dorothea Fleming, Whitman Bennett, Pearl Cohen, New York; First Strongheart Unit, Inc., H. C. Hand, S. C. Wood, R. J. Gorman, New York; International Reopticion Corporation, Van Dyke Hill, G. H. Fox, Lyman Sessen, New York; The Manners Family Films, Inc., Buffalo, C. Davidson, R. W. Snow, F. S. Davidson, of Buffalo.

SHAKE-UP IN SAXE'S WISCONSIN

A shake-up, striking suddenly at Saxe's Wisconsin Theatre in Milwaukee, has resulted in Harry Davey, director of the front of the house, and two of his aides leaving the organization. Davey has been succeeded by Donald Waterson, late of Saxe's Modjeska. The others who have left are Davey's chief usher and a cashier.

Just what was behind the sudden change has not been revealed. Davey's explanation being merely that he was tired of Milwaukee and anxious to be once more in New York where he had once been in the employ of the Mark Strand. There was no statement forthcoming as to the reason for the other changes.

QUIT TOY BUILDING, MILWAUKEE

Once the center of the entire film distributing business in Milwaukee, the Toy building at Second street and Grand avenue, is about to be deserted by the last of its exchanges. According to an announcement made by Charles Trampe, of Midwest, his company, along with F. B. O. and the Ray Smith Theatrical Supply house, will move shortly into a new structure to be erected on Seventh street, between Grand avenue and Sycamore street. The building will be 40 by 150 feet and one story high.

First State on Record to Get Behind Big Film Movement Already Has Many Unique Exploitation Plans—Wobber Reviews

MICHIGAN is the first state to come forward as a solid unit in support of the national Greater Movie Season which is being inaugurated by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., that organization announces. Although the celebration does not begin until August, picture theatre owners in Michigan have not only taken enthusiastic hold of the idea but already are working to put it across, according to H. M. Richey, general manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, Inc., who has arrived in New York to consult with the Hays organization and to complete arrangements that will assure Michigan a smooth forward drive now that its campaign has started.

"Actually Michigan can claim some credit for the inauguration of the Greater Movie Season," Richey stated in pledging the cooperation of his association. "We prepared plans for such an event last year, but deferred the project in the hope that a national movement would be set afoot and thus lighten the burden the affair automatically would impose on any exhibitor organization undertaking it single-handed. The foundation we laid then affords us an immense advantage in the present campaign."

Apart from the national effort that will back the season, interesting plans have been developed for Michigan. Proclamations from the governor and mayors of the various cities will give the season official endorsement. More than thirty organizations, including Rotary and Kiwanis clubs, Red Cross, Women's Federation, Y. M. C. A. and American Legion, have already been enlisted to the movement. Prominent public men have signified their willingness to state the case of the screen on platforms and over the radio, and their work will be carried on by four-minute speakers at theatres and public gatherings before and during the season.

One of the neatest pieces of exploitation yet planned to focus attention on the screen, may result from a tie-up with the Detroit police department. All traffic officers in that city, according to the plan, will wear white gloves and on the upraised hand of authority motorists and pedestrians will read the message, "Stop! Have you been to the movies?" Permission also will be sought to extend the Greater Movie idea with slogans painted at crossings. At least two state-wide newspaper contests are planned, one to determine the most beautiful girl in Michigan, who will receive a trip to Hollywood; the other of more general appeal, having an automobile as its capital prize.

The endorsement the Greater Movie Season has received from business men quite unconnected with the industry, is farther convincing theatre owners of the plan's value not merely in an abstract way, but brought right down to increased box-office receipts, according to letters the Hays organization is receiving.

Wobber Tells of Possibilities

The Greater Movie Season celebration which has become the most important annual event in the motion picture industry in San Francisco, Los Angeles, and many other cities in the United States, as well as Sydney, Australia, was conceived by Herman Wobber, Paramount District manager. His idea is the logical outcome of Greater Movie Week which was then in effect every year in many parts of the country.

"Movie Week celebrations showed the idea had national possibilities. But Movie Week never became popular because of the name which limited the very purpose of the celebration. Movie Week was supposed to encourage interest in motion pictures on the part of people who seldom or never, by choice, see a motion picture and to restimulate the interest of regular fans. The idea was sound, but the public reaction to Movie Week was that local theatres were merely celebrating seven days of good pictures. Movie Week gave no promise of anything more significant.

"Therefore we arrived at the idea of changing the name Greater Movie Week to Greater Movie Season, to begin August 1st," said Wobber. "We purposely did not confine the season to any specific length of time because of several important considerations. Mainly, we did not want to give the public the impression that this was merely a seven day celebration of exceptional pictures: but rather a gala observance of the Springtime of the motion picture industry, celebrating the new and better pictures, and the new and better methods.

"The right to have an annual movie season indicating the arrival of bigger and better pictures is as well founded as the opening of the baseball season, the opera season, the seasonal style presentations or the commercialized merchandising seasons of Christmas and Easter. The natural inclination of dramatic and screen editors and critics to give liberally of their space at the opening of the season has long been the custom.

"Every phase of our first celebration in San Francisco was to bring home to the public that motion picture history is being made every day, and that yesterday in the quickly changing order of things becomes ancient today. This thought was aimed to attract the class of people who seldom attend motion picture theatres because they have been disappointed by one or two poor pictures.

"Another benefit of Greater Movie Season is that it opens a new channel for exhibitors to exploit their theatres. It is natural for some exhibitors to get into a rut, applying the same effort and the same appeal week after week, sometimes resulting in decreased attendance. Therefore means must be found to periodically give exhibitors the opportunity of doing something entirely different from their regular week to week method.

"The campaign as originally launched in San Francisco covered three of the leading down town theatres. In their first campaign they made use of the boards, they used very liberal newspaper space; and gave their screen weeks in advance; ribboned their employees, published thirty thousand expensive booklets, announcing not only the purpose of the season, but their product for the ten or twelve weeks to follow. In all the campaign must have cost the three houses well in excess of $5,000.

"The first week not only compensated them for their entire cost of the campaign but gave them several thousand dollars additional profit. The second week showed an increase in attendance of over fifteen per cent, and the succeeding weeks showed continual gain. To accomplish this it was necessary to involve almost the entire organization of the three theatres. Ordinarily the putting over of a motion picture theatre is left in the hands of the manager and the advertising manager, but in this case the entire organization was called together at a meeting, and the purpose of the undertaking was explained. The co-operation of every employee was immediately felt. A greater courtesy was apparent throughout the house, a greater interest in the welfare of the organization was manifested and a result entirely satisfactory and sufficiently encouraging to warrant its undertaking a second year was derived.

"On the day The Greater Movie Season opened in San Francisco a street parade was held consisting of a brass band and decorated automobiles furnished by the various exchanges.

"The second year was very similar in efforts and results as the first. The third year showed a broadening of the plan, by which all the first run down town theatres co-operated. A street parade was held in which Norma Talmadge appeared. In a public reception on the steps of City Hall, the mayor welcomed Miss Talmadge and endorsed The Greater Movie Season. A tremendous amount of publicity was obtained.

"Our Greater Movie Season this year will be the greatest of them all. Los Angeles has already received the support of the Chamber of Commerce and will have a pageant this year which I am told will be as beautiful as the annual Flower Show. In fact the Greater Movie Season in Los Angeles is expected to be an annual civic affair in which all the business firms will be asked to participate.

"The biggest benefits of the Greater Movie Season will not be felt until the event is observed by every town in the country with a motion picture theatre."

SCREEN FIGHTS EPIDEMIC

Aid of the screen has been enlisted in Milwaukee in a fight against a smallpox epidemic that has claimed a score of lives and has brought threats of drastic action on the part of the health authorities, unless vaccination becomes general. Trailers calling attention to the situation are being run through the cooperation of the public service department of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin.

State Rights Sales

Columbia Pictures announces that Joe Brandt has signed with the Creole Enterprises for the distribution of the whole program of six Columbias, six Waldorfs and six Perfections which they will make for 1925-26. The territory covered in this big deal includes North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Harry Brouse, well known exhibitor of Ottawa, Ontario, who died last August quite suddenly, left an estate having an estimated gross value of $728,174, according to the official legal papers filed for probate in the Surrogate Court at Ottawa on April 23. The late Mr. Brouse left no will of any kind and the extensive property has been divided equally among the three members of the immediate family.

Among the physical assets were the Imperial and Franklin theatres at Ottawa which Mr. Brouse directed personally for years. The Imperial has now been leased to A. H. Coplan, who is also the proprietor of the Princess Theatre in Ottawa. The Franklin Theatre is under lease to J. M. Franklin, manager of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, until next August. Bert Brouse, the son, assumed the management of the Imperial Theatre in conjunction with J. A. McDonald after the death of his father, but ill health, including an operation and an attack of scarlet fever, forced him to relinquish the work.

For years Mr. Brouse was well known throughout the North American continent through his connection with Associated First National, having been one of the charter directors of that distributing and producing company. Although the estate is listed at $728,174, it is subject to mortgages totalling $251,912. The Brouse properties also included the Alexandra Hotel, Ottawa.

TO START $400,000 HOUSE IN N. Y.

Officers of the Shore Road Theatre Corporation, Brooklyn, N. Y., announce that shortly ground will be broken at 86th Street and Fifth avenue, N. Y., for the erection of a theatre to cost approximately $400,000. Frederick Huebner is president of the organization and Eugene H. Pulch is the treasurer.

WORCESTER MAY CENSOR "LEGIT"

An attempt is being made to establish a play jury in Worcester to pass upon the legitimate attractions presented at the Worcester Theatre. At the present time the motion pictures are censored by the Worcester Board of Motion Picture Review and the burlesque shows are passed upon by Miss Elizabeth Tracy, police censor.

New Jersey Delegates Picked to Attend National Meet

The M. P. T. O. of New Jersey at their monthly meeting on April 23, at the Plaza Hotel, Jersey City, designated the following delegates to attend the M. P. T. O. A. convention in Milwaukee May 12, 13 and 14: Joseph M. Seider, head of the New Jersey organization, who will be the chairman of the delegation; Peter Adams, vice-president, Sidney Samuelson, R. F. Woodhull, Louis Rosenthal and Leon Rosenblatt, directors; Charles Hildinger, Morris Kutinsky, David Kaiserstein, Harry Wilkins, William C. Hunt and Lew Peizor.

A large delegation of Hudson County Theatre Owners attended the meeting. Joseph Bernstein and David Kaiserstein addressed the meeting and expressed their gratification at the progress made by the State body.

The theatre owners were the guests of Leon Rosenblatt at luncheon prior to the meeting, when State Senator Thomas Mathis, of Ocean County, joined the exhibitors. Others present were Henry P. Nelson, state secretary; William Keegan, state treasurer; I. M. Hirshblond, Benjamin Schindler and Leo Juskowitz, state directors, and Messrs. Brennan, of the Orpheum Theatre, Jersey City; Freund, Orient, Jersey City; Mertens, Fulton, Jersey City; Binkow, Temple, Union Hill; Bacili, Rivoli Theatre, West New York and Finkelstein, Acamedy, Jersey City.

President Seider, who is recuperating from an operation for bronchial trouble spoke on the activities of the organization since the last meeting. He discussed the campaign for the Greater Movie Season; proposed changes in the Uniform Contract; Legislation; Music Tax Adjustments; Arbitration; Postal rates and negotiations with the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey seeking a reduction in rates for electricity. Seider announced he has retained Joseph Varbalow, prosecutor of Camden County, as counsel to represent members in all cases effecting them, before the Philadelphia Arbitration Board; also that he has engaged Norman Samuelson, a lawyer, brother of Sidney Samuelson, to represent members in their cases arbitrated in the City of New York.

The state convention will be held in Ashbury Park late in June or early in July when many matters of interest to every theatre owner in the state will be discussed.

FAMOUS GETS LOCKPORT HOUSE

A. Edmund Lee and Charles E. Dickinson of the Lock City Theatres, Inc., of which the former is president and general manager, announced the closing of a contract for the leasing of their new Palace Theatre in Lockport, N. Y., by the Famous Players-Lasky corporation for a term of years. It is reported that the yearly rental will be $20,000. The house has a seating capacity of 1,800.

VARNER OPENING NEW THEATRE

Colonel Varner's new Concord Theatre in Concord, N. C., will open May 4, according to an announcement made by manager, Miller Meriwether. The New Concord Theatre is modern in every respect, being built entirely of concrete and steel and having a seating capacity of 700 downstairs and balcony.

The policy of the theatre will be big pictures with short subjects to balance each program and the policy will be three pictures per week. The new Concord Theatre is another house linked to the chain of theatres already being operated by Varner.

Announcement

It should be a source of as much interest to exhibitors as it is to us that reports from previews at Los Angeles and the opinions of the critics are to the effect that HAROLD LLOYD'S newest picture, his last under the Pathe contract, is beyond question the best picture he has ever made.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC. is further pleased to publicly voice its appreciation of the HAROLD LLOYD CORPORATION'S contractual integrity in having spent in the production of this picture over three times the amount called for by contract.

Pathe also wishes to emphasize in this manner the fact that each Harold Lloyd picture will continue to be sold on its own merits, and without regard to or in conjunction with any other pictures.

The new picture will be released in early Autumn.

A special sales staff is being organized to augment and co-operate with the regular Pathe force in the prompt distribution of this wonderful picture.

Skouras Bros. Class A Stock Is Admitted to St. Louis Exchange

Financing of $5,500,000 Ambassador Theatre Causes Central Western Company to Float 25,000 Shares; Value Rises

MOTION picture history for the Central West was made on Tuesday morning, April 21, when 25,000 shares of the Class A stock of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., of St. Louis, Mo., was admitted to the St. Louis Stock Exchange and active trading in the stock began.

Previously the board of directors of this exchange had made an exhaustive investigation of Skouras Brothers Enterprises and voted unanimously to admit the stock issue to the exchange. It was the first time that a motion picture enterprise of any kind was permitted to list its securities on that exchange.

Prior to the action of the exchange the brokerage firms of A. G. Edwards & Sons and Lorenzo E. Anderson & Company had taken private subscriptions for the 25,000 shares available for the public and the offering was oversubscribed six times. All persons seeking to purchase the stock at $36, the price asked, were forced to accept far less than they wanted to purchase. On the exchange the stock steadily increased in value at the closing session of the week $37.50 a share was asked. The book value of the stock as of December 31, 1924, was $27.25 a share. The high price asked and paid for the stock indicates the confidence the general public apparently has in Skouras Brothers.

The placing of the 25,000 shares on the exchange was part of the plans of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., to finance the $5,500,000 Ambassador Theatre and office building to be erected on the north west corner of Seventh and Locust streets. The company had been incorporated in Delaware on February 25, 1921, with a capitalization of 10,000 shares of no par value stock. This stock had been held at $100 a share. Recently the company was authorized to increase its capitalization to 80,000 shares of no par value common stock of which 25,000 shares is Class A and 55,000 shares of Class B.

Holders of the old stock were permitted to trade it for the new Class B stock on the basis of five shares of new for one share of old. The Class A stock holders will be permitted to trade it in any time within five years for Class B certificates on the basis of one share of A for 1½ shares of B. A is preferred over B in matter of dividends to the extent of $3 per share, being paid that amount of dividend annually before any dividend may be declared on the B stock. Five thousand shares of B stock is held in the treasury.

In addition to its many theatres the company owns approximately 3¼ per cent of the stock of the First National Corporation and has exclusive First National rights in Missouri, has the Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois rights to Warner Brothers, Preferred and Educational Pictures and owns the St. Louis Film Exchange which distributes many high class independent features and short subjects.

From time to time in their climb upward Skouras Brothers took in a little outside capital but at no time did they relinquish control of their enterprises. In fact the only other money invested in their enterprises prior to putting the new stock on the open market was $62,500 paid in by outside interests in 1920.

The extent to which their little nest egg of $3,200 put to work in 1914 when they entered the business plus the $62,500 taken in during 1920 has grown is forcefully revealed by the financial statement of their organization as of December 31, 1924.

During the past two years the company and its 100 per cent controlled subsidiaries had earned more than sufficient income to pay the $3 a share dividend provided for the Class A stock while the companies in which it holds a half interest, etc., earned enough to assure more than twice the sum needed for the dividends.

It is anticipated that the Ambassador Theatre and office buildings will greatly increase the earnings of the company. Loew's State Theatre at Eighth and Washington avenues, but a few blocks from the proposed theatre has not had a losing week since it opened on August 21, 1924, while there is a very great demand for office space in the down-town district at the present time.

In conjunction with the new Ambassador building a new 100 per cent controlled subsidiary of Skouras Brothers Enterprises known as the Central Properties, Inc., with a capitalization of $750,000 full paid has been formed. It is also proposed to issue $4,500,000 of first mortgage bonds for the purpose of acquiring the site and building the new theatre.

Spyros P. and Charles P. Skouras and their associates will control every bit of stock in Central Properties, Inc., the stockholders of record being F. Laurent, 9996 shares; S. Jeffries, W. Arthur Stickney, E. Vaughn and Leo Rassieur, Jr., one share each. The company by its charter is authorized to operate and control amusement places.

The proposed first mortgage bonds for $4,500,000 on the Ambassador will also be secured by the leasehold, improvement, equipment, etc., of the New Grand Central and by an assignment of the First National franchise for first run pictures in St. Louis and in addition will be guaranteed by Skouras Brothers Enterprises and Spyros P. and Charles P. Skouras.

WILL SMITH WITH I. M. S. C.

The Independent Movie Supply Company, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue, N. Y. C., announces the appointment of Will C. Smith as general manager of its organization.

Silliman Still Behind Badger

A statement, assuring members of the Badger Theatres Corporation that he will continue to give his wholehearted support to the organization despite his recent resignation as president, has been issued by J. H. Silliman. He says in part:

"For the benefit of our members, as well as the trade in general, I wish to make it clear, however, that my resignation does not mean withdrawal of my support. My houses are and will continue to remain a part of Badger. With new members making application each day, the continued growth of Badger is now assured."

Silliman still remains as a director of the Badger and is looked upon as right hand man of George Fischer who has succeeded to the presidency.

$200 CHECK STARTS SUIT

Stanley J. Rollo, former president of Criterion Pictures, Inc., is defendant in a suit in New Bedford, Mass., the basis of which is the presentation of an alleged valueless check for $200 to Miss Dollie Sullivan, a scenario writer. The plaintiff in the action is the Corn Exchange Bank of New York City. The bank alleges that Rollo made and gave to Miss Sullivan a check for $200 on the Safe Deposit National Bank on September 27, 1924, in payment for a scenario. She indorsed the check to the plaintiff, but it was not honored by the Safe Deposit National Bank, according to the declaration in the case. After the check was returned, the New York bank says that it gave due notice to Rollo and now seeks to recover the $200 and interest. The defense contends that the corporation and not Rollo personally is responsible for the check.

ALBANY HONORS MRS. COLBERT

Mrs. Elizabeth V. Colbert, the newly appointed member of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, was honored in her home city of Albany last week, when she was the chief guest at a reception given at the Hotel Ten Eyck, by the Albany county Democratic organization. Mrs. Alfred E. Smith, wife of the Governor, was in the receiving line. During the evening, Mrs. Colbert was presented with a handsome traveling clock, while the Motion Picture Commission itself sent a letter which was read and which extended a warm welcome to the new member.

Movements

Exhibitors Herald has moved its New York City offices from the Longacre Building, Broadway and 42nd Street, to No. 565 Fifth Avenue.

The Film Daily moved Saturday, May 2, from No. 71 West 44th Street, to 1650 Broadway.

Troopers Inspecting N. Y. Theatres

The New York State Troopers are engaged at the present time in inspecting motion picture theatres throughout the entire state and ascertaining if they live up to the requirements of the law, particularly as to fire escapes and exits. A number of the houses have been notified to comply more closely with the law, or face closing. The reports of the troopers on their inspections, are sent on to headquarters in Albany. In this work, the State Troopers are cooperating with the New York State Labor Department.

Canada Pushing Bill Amending Copyright Aiding Composer

Meagre details were heard at Ottawa on April 24 of a measure to be brought before the Canadian Parliament within a few days to amend the Copyright Act of 1921 for the extension of the word "performance" to cover all presentations of music so that the composer will be able to collect a royalty on all presentations.

The amendment to the Canadian act is also to be broadened, it is stated, so that radio broadcasting of music will also come under its legal jurisdiction and composers will be able to collect a royalty fee every time that their music is broadcast by any but amateur stations. The bill providing the music copyright amendments has been put forward by E. R. E. Chevrier, Federal member for Ottawa East.

One of the new provisions is that any infraction of the new provisions, such as the presentation of a copyrighted musical selection without arrangement with the composer, would result in a fine of $50 for each offense. It is recommended that one-half of such a fine should go to the informer or complainant.

CANADIANS TO VISIT MILWAUKEE

The Ontario Division of the M. P. T. O. of Canada held a rousing luncheon in the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, on April 22, when arrangements were completed for the Canadian delegation to the convention to the M. P. T. O. A. at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on May 12 to 15. Many officers and members of the Ontario branch signified their intention of attending the convention, including President J. C. Brady of the Ontario M. P. T. O., who is the owner of the Madison Theatre, Toronto; Ald. W. A. Summerville of Toronto, the vice-president, and many others.

Appointment of Delegates to Milwaukee Taken to Assure Re-Affiliation of Two Insurgent States with M. P. T. O. A.

TWO unexpected and outstanding actions predominated over the annual convention of the M. P. T. O. Kansas and Missouri at the Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, April 27-29. The organization voted to send representatives to the M. P. T. O. convention in Milwaukee, also to make the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri virtually a closed organization.

Although the future action of the Kansas-Missouri body regarding affiliation with the M. P. T. O. A., depends entirely upon what transpires at the Milwaukee convention, the action in sending representatives to the national convention is taken to mean eventual affiliation with that body. A strong sentiment favoring affiliation with the national body prevailed at the convention, the belief that the sooner all exhibitor organizations are united the better for the industry, being strongly voiced on the floor of the convention.

R. R. Biechele, who for the last two years has led the Kansas organization, was re-elected president of the merged body by acclamation. Biechele, with two men whom he will name, will attend the Milwaukee convention.

A resolution was adopted which bars assistance to non-members of the organization and provides that an exhibitor be asked only once to join the association.

Others officers elected were: James Means, Murray Theatre, Kansas City, first vice-president; Harry McClue, Strand, Emporia, second vice-president; Charles Bull, Novelty, Wichita, Kansas, third vice-president; R. Finklestein, Gillham, Kansas City, fourth vice-president; R. G. Liggett, Gauntier, Kansas City, Kans., recording secretary; Fred Meyn, Pershing, Kansas City, Kans., treasurer. Board of Directors: Barney Dubinsky, Tootle, St. Joseph, Mo.; Jack Truitt, Sedalia Theatre, Sedalia, Mo.; Charles Sears, Sears Circuit, Nevada, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit, Jefferson,, Springfield, Mo.; W. P. Cuff, Strand, Chillicothe, Mo.; Ben Levy, Hippodrome, Joplin, Mo.; C. R. Wilson, Liberty Theatre, Liberty, Mo.; A. F. Baker, Electric, Kansas City, Kansas; L. M. Miller, Miller and Wichita, Wichita, Kans.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kans.; R. G. Liggett, Gauntier, Kansas City, Kans.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kans.; E. E. Grazier, Empress, Pittsburg, Kansas.; M. B. Shanberg, Midland Circuit, Hutchinson, Kans.

It was under the administration of R. G. Liggett of Kansas City, Kansas, that the old M. P. T. O., Kansas, broke away from the national organization. Today it was Liggett who battled the hardest in favoring the sending of representatives to the national meeting, the complete minutes of which will be brought to Kansas City for consideration by the M. P. T. O. K-M directors in determining a possible affiliation.

It was decided to allow the present basis for membership dues 1½ cents per capita for towns less than 50,000 and 1 cent for towns larger than that—to remain intact.

At the closing banquet Tuesday night, April 28, the speaking was limited, Mrs. Eleanore C. Walton, chairman of the better films committee of the Women's Club of Kansas City; Mrs. Henry N. Ess, one of the Kansas City leading civic workers, and E. C. Rhoden, president of the Film Board of Trade and manager of Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., being the principal speakers.

"I am strongly opposed to political censorship," Mrs. Walton said. "I am convinced that pictures are getting better all the time and that the job of censoring belongs to the public."

"The growth and future outlook for the motion picture is unlimited," declares Mrs. Ess. "Today we have one of the greatest educational mediums in the screen." "Compared to two years ago, the harmony which now exists between exhibitors and the exchanges is wonderful," Mr. Rhoden said. "I predict that in the near future we will all be working shoulder to shoulder together. Not until we reach that stage can we hope to accomplish much."

Resolutions pertaining to the following subjects were adopted:

That bulletins would be issued notifying all exhibitor members of exchanges renting films to non-theatrical institutions; that in the future members would be given thirty days' notice only to meet payment of dues and that non-members would be asked only once to join; to aid in the support of American Forest Week; an appreciation of Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, of the Linwood Christian Church, for his special service for film men recently; condolence to the family of late James W. Watson, former first vice-president; condolence to the family of the late Mrs. James Liggett, condolence to the family of the late James Meyn and the late H. B. Varner, who was president of the North Carolina exhibitors body.

Telegrams of congratulation from S. R. Kent, general manager of Paramount, and Carl Laemmle of Universal, were read. The following committees were named:

Exhibitor Units in N. Y., N. J., and Pa. Keep Play Dates Open

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey met in the Hotel Astor, New York City, April 29, and adopted a resolution urging the members of the M. P. T. O., N. J., not to contract for pictures nor give any play dates on 1925-26 product, but to take their play dates to Milwaukee for final decision as to what method to follow.

This action is also in accord with that taken this week by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City, and by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania.

Exhibitors attended the meeting from Hudson, Essex, Union, Passaic, Bergen and Sussex Counties in New Jersey, and a general discussion prevailed.

Sydney S. Cohen addressed the meeting, called for the purpose of instructing delegates to the Milwaukee convention on May 12, 13 and 14, as authorized by the Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O., N. J., at last Thursday's meeting.

U. S. Seizes Detroit's Orpheum Alleging $60,000 Tax Arrears

THE sensation of the week in Detroit film circles prove to be the closing of the Orpheum Theatre and its retention by United States Government officials until the payment of alleged over-due tax returns.

The Orpheum is one of the largest of the downtown second run motion picture theatres and is a member of the string of four houses operated by Charles H. Miles. The amount due the Government is approximately $60,000. The action of Detroit officials of the office of the collector of internal revenue came on instructions from Washington, the claim being that lessees of the Wayne County Amusement Company, under which the theatre is operated, had not made a full disclosure of income for the years 1917, 1920 and 1921.

According to the commissioners the Company owes $4,144 for 1917, $36,471 for 1920 and $18,709 for 1921, a total of nearly $60,000. Hearing that the company had closed the theatre for several weeks "to undergo repairs," an investigation followed and admissions were made that the house was not paying expenses. The owners of the Orpheum, known as the Orpheum Theatre Company, were taking action to cancel the lease, it is said, and the Government, acting on this information, took steps immediately to protect its claim.

Two field deputies demanded the amount of the claim from George E. Guise, who is secretary for Mr. Miles and upon his declaration that the firm was unable to pay, the seizure of the theatre was made. The officers then started inventory of the company's assets and will be in possession of the theatre until the inventory is completed. When this is completed the Government will advertise the assets of the Wayne Amusement Co. for sale at public auction.

"The Government has a claim aggregating $60,000 against the Wayne Amusement Co.," said Mr. Guise, "but Mr. Miles, as the 75 per cent. holder of stock, does not feel like paying the other stockholders' pro rata share of the claim. For that reason he has decided to abandon the lease."

Stars in Wreck

In a train wreck near San Diego the engineer was killed, four motion picture players and a property man were injured, Moving Picture World was advised just before this issue went to press. The accident happened on the night of April 28. A party of twenty-two film people were on the train at the time and $10,000 of motion picture equipment was destroyed, the coast dispatches credited Warner Brothers' studio with announcing. The screen players injured, according to the report are Marie Prevost, Kenneth Harlan, Louis Fazenda and Walter Long while the name of the property man is given as Bob Webb.

Bill Hart Finally Corralled to Talk About New Westerns

By SUMNER SMITH

INTERVIEWING William S. Hart is neither like taking a shower bath under Niagara Falls nor opening a can of sardines with a penknife. He will talk for publication, but he does it rather as a good-natured concession to your wish than out of any desire of his to use the personal pronoun.

Bill Hart arrived in New York City last Sunday to take part in the Lambs Gambol, and left for the home ranch on Thursday. Charlie Moyer, who dispenses publicity for United Artists, finally coralled the two-gun man at the Waldorf on Wednesday afternoon and hurriedly advised writers to put in an appearance if they wanted any copy. The writers responded on the qui vive and Bill was kept busy all afternoon answering questions as to this and that.

Here are the facts of the most interest to the trade:

Hart is under contract with United Artists to make two pictures. The first, to be started soon for release on October 15, will be 'Tumbleweeds," from Hal E. Evarts' Saturday Evening Post story. The director and cast haven't been signed as yet, but an announcement will be forthcoming shortly.

Just a word or two more about the personality of the two-gun man. Bill was chiefly interested in telling about the quick draw he made with his guns at the Frolic. He's been so long away from the stage that an audience rather unnerves him. But in the emergency —and Bill took a keen delight in recalling it— he made the quickest draw of all.

Hart has the gift of talking about himself, when he has to, in the coolest and most dispassionate way. Somebody said something about scars and Moyer made him show a knife scar on his arm, inflicted by an Indian boy. In telling the story he made the Indian the central character, and the moral he pointed—for Hart, one imagines, wants to see the brighter side of life—was that the Indian boy and he became the best of friends.

Bill Hart is an entertaining chap when he has congenial company, an out-of-doors man who dares to say he dislikes New York and, withal, a good showman when somebody like Charlie Moyer makes him cool his heels and chew the rag with newspapermen.

Notwithstanding all rumors to the contrary—this ad is published to advise all exhibitors that

B. P. Schulberg Offers Entertaining Story of Romance Between Banker and Reformed Girl Thief

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In his newest production, "Go Straight," based on a story by Ewart Adamson, B. P. Schulberg offers a picture that should prove entertaining to patrons who like romantic crook stories.

The plot concerns a girl thief who breaks away from the gang and gets a job with a banker, who falls in love with her. The gang follows her and, believing she intends to pull the job alone, endeavors to get ahead of her. She outwits them and saves the cash and finds happiness in the banker's love.

While there is no hint of the motive that actuated the girl in giving up her criminal career or explanation as to why she picked Hollywood as her new field, or why she was so determined to obtain a position in a bank, this turn of events given to the story, while weakening its dramatic qualities, does furnish opportunities for considerable exciting action and melodrama and chances to utilize some "inside" stuff on picture making, that should hold the interest, for the story moves along smoothly and at a good pace.

The sympathy is nicely placed, and conflict provided in the attempts of the gang to persuade the girl to work with them, while she is just as determined to save her new employer. This leads to a situation which serves to bring about the happy ending by vindicating the girl and revealing her past which has kept her from marrying the banker.

Although it has no bearing on the story proper, scenes have been introduced which show Anita Stewart and Larry Semon at work in the studios which will interest patrons who like to get a peep behind the scenes.

Gladys Hulette and Owen Moore are satisfactory in the leading roles and there is a good supporting cast composed of well-known players. Frank O'Connor has capably directed the production.

Story

Gilda Hart, a crook, eludes the detective but informs the gang she is going straight. Taunted as being yellow, she turns one more job securing valuable jewels which she sends back to the owner. With her aunt, Gilda goes to Hollywood where the aunt meets Mamie and tries to break into the movies but only manages to get into the studios and worry the actors at work. Gilda finally lands a job in a bank and so pleases the president, John Rhodes, when she detects counterfeit money that he makes her his secretary. Finally he falls in love with her and proposes but she says that she cannot marry him. The Dove, one of the gang, who loves her, follows her and then brings the whole gang to the coast. They try to get Gilda to rob the bank but she refuses, and believing she is to rob it alone they plan to to beat her to it. She goes to the bank, gets the money and takes it to Rhodes' home. In the meantime the gang rob the bank and capture Rhodes who interferes. Gilda goes to the gang to find out about Rhodes. The detective follows with police and capture the crowd. The Dove tells Gilda, Rhodes is in the next room. She confesses she was a member of the gang, but has him call his mother who reveals the fact that Gilda saved the money. Gilda is forgiven and she and Rhodes go straight to a minister.

"The Open Trail"

Jack Hoxie Stars in Universal Adventure-Romance of Pioneer Days

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Again it can be said of a Universal Blue Streak Western that it possesses some of the most marvelously beautiful backgrounds that any picture has ever shown. This holds true in "The Open Trail," starring Jack Hoxie, which details a romance and adventures of pioneer and Indian days. The long distance shots are wonders because of the towering mountains, the picturesque rocks and the formations of the galloping riders, each with its trail of dust behind it.

However, the picture does not depend upon scenic effects to get over. Its story has two chief appeals, the ever-present threat of an Indian attack upon the covered wagons and the love of an Indian chief for a white girl. This latter phase is solved by the usual convenient method—the discovery that Jack Hoxie is an adopted son and of white parentage.

While the players seem to have difficulties in playing Indian roles—these parts are taken by well known actors—and while some of the flash-backs and preparatory episodes are a little lengthy, still the action progresses in a fairly satisfactory manner throughout and at times speeds up to climaxes of real intensity.

The many scenes devoted to Indian camps and rites make this picture somewhat different from the ordinary run of westerns and this variation in color from the approved personnel should be welcomed. Minor faults can be found—where, for instance, Indians fail to manifest their famous stoicism, and where the film waxes too flowery in sentiment—but, all in all, it ought to supply good entertainment to audiences liking westerns. One good touch is the selection of a band of white horses for Hoxie's tribe of Indians and dark steeds for another tribe. This is a distinctive pictorial touch and makes the characters and the action easier to follow.

Story

Pioneers are crossing the plains, among them John Cavanaugh and daughter, Lucille. A threatened Indian attack is averted by the friendly chief, White Elk, at about the time of his betrothal to Silver Waters. White Elk is strangely attracted to Lucille, and Black Panther, his rival, begins plans to himself win Silver Waters. Cavanaugh tricks the Indians into signing away their lands. The Panther learns this and White Elk is bound to the stake. A heavy downpour of rain quenches the fire. The hostile Indians attack the white settlers. White Elk goes to their assistance and saves them. It developes that he is white, having been adopted by the Indians after a massacre of settlers. Lucille is captured by Black Panther, tied in a canoe and pushed toward the falls. Silver Waters and White Elk save her, and the latter declares his love, which is reciprocated.

"Chickie"

First National Adaptation of Popular Newspaper Serial Looks Like a Good Box-Office Bet

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With Dorothy Mackaill in the title role, First National is offering a film version of "Chickie," Elenore Meherin's novel that attracted wide attention as a newspaper serial syndicated throughout the country.

The same angles which made the novel appeal to the masses should make this picture a big box-office attraction. In the first place, it deals with a sympathetic and familiar type of character, the working girl who longs to enjoy life and marry wealth. The story succeeds in developing more than the usual interest due to the fact that it gets somewhat away from familiar lines.

Contrary to expectations, there is no jazz in the picture, but on the other hand it introduces some interesting scenes into what is supposed to represent the foibles of the millionaire set; also, there is the unusual situation of having the man of great wealth shown as apparently honorable in his attentions toward the girl, while the struggling law clerk is the one who seduces her, although he retrieves himself by eventually returning and marrying her.

The picture has been well directed by John Francis Dillon, and the continuity is good. The attitude of the wealthy set toward the poor stenographer, shown without any evidence of snobbery; the romance of the law clerk and the jealous scheming of his employer's daughter hold the interest and keep up the suspense.

The latter portion of the picture, with the girl, who has become a mother, apparently deserted by her lover, has good pathos and plays upon audience sympathy and leads to a particularly well handled and stirring melodramatic scene, which comes somewhat as a surprise.

Miss Mackaill was a good selection for the title role and she is given fine support by a cast of well known players, including Hobart Bosworth and Myrtle Stedman in minor roles. John Bowers is entirely satisfactory in the role opposite Miss Mackaill, and Paul Nicholson is particularly effective as the millionaire.

"Chickie" should provide pleasing entertainment for the masses and, aided by the wide popularity of the newspaper serial, it looks like a first-rate box-office attraction for the average house.

Chickie Bryce, a stenographer, longs to meet a real millionaire, but flirts with a law clerk in the office just across the court. Her opportunity comes when Jake Munson invites another girl in the office, Janina, and tells her to bring a new girl with her. Disgruntled because she has seen the clerk Barry with another woman she goes and meets him at the party. They become great friends and plan to spend their vacation together. Jake invites Chickie to dinner and takes her to his apartment. Barry, and Ila who is trying to win him, come and misunderstand the situation. Barry accepts an offer from London but makes up with Chickie and they become engaged. Ila also goes to London and Chickie is jealous. Later, she writes Barry that she needs him. Ila gets the letter and cables he has already married her. Soon after, Chickie becomes a mother and her father is enraged as he did not want her flying around with millionaires while her mother has encouraged her. Chickie names Barry. Later Barry suddenly appears and Chickie's father is about to shoot him. Chickie saves him, he tells her he is not married and that he has given up everything to come back and marry her.

Fast Moving Richard Talmadge Stunt Melodrama for F. B. O. is Replete With Thrills

Reviewed by Tom Waller

"Tearing Through," although a melodrama, interspersed with comic incidents, and possessing a crooked district attorney and society man, is essentially a stunt vehicle for Richard Talmadge. That F. B. O. star, in breaking up a drug ring and sensationally disclosing the identities of its chieftains, masquerades as a Chinaman, outwits and single-handedly thrashes a mob of Orientals, leaps from one racing auto to another, jumps from tenement roof to roof, saves a young man from degredation, rescues a girl and then marries her. These are a few of the things which keep Talmadge moving at top speed and make of "Tearing Through" a picture that should unquestionably go over with audiences that like to sit back and be thrilled.

Because of Talmadge's rapid fire essay of the role of Richard Jones, versatile and vivacious assistant to the district attorney, one has little time to look for plausibility, or the fact that the story is of a familiar brand as are many of the stunts.

The story, nevertheless, is of a type which has proven its magnitude in many box offices. This fact, together with Talmadge's popularity for he-manishness and a devil-may-care attitude—a good supporting cast and directorial touches by Art Rosson, makes "Tearing Through" take a front row position in its class. The picture appeals to us as being well worthy of consideration by exhibitors to whose patrons action and stunts are primary requisites.

Story by Frederick Stowers.
Directed by Art Rosson.
Length, 4,714 feet.

Story

Richard Jones, live-wire assistant to District Attorney Johnson, sets out unaided to break up a drug ring which his boss has been seemingly unable to combat. He finds Bob Madison, the son of a sincere reformer, vicitimzed by opiates. He also discovers Mr. Greer, his rival for the hand of Constance Madison, to be the proprietor of the hop joint. Jones rescues Constance from the clutches of Greer and at the same time ascertains that the district attorney is in league with the drug runner. Everything winds up happily with Jones as the new D. A. and the winner of Constance.

William Fox Offers Version of David Belasco Stage Play With Alma Rubens and Jack Mulhall

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under the title of "She Wolves," with Alma Rubens and Jack Mulhall in the leading roles, William Fox is presenting a screen version of the David Belasco stage play, "The Man in Evening Clothes."

A woman's mistaken idea that clothes really make the man furnishes the keynote of the plot. A young French girl for financial reasons is forced by her family to marry a wealthy man who disgusts her because he does not dress like the polished gentleman of her imagination. Trying to please her, he steals away to Paris, acquires a faultless wardrobe and an elegance of manner, only to have her inform him she loves another and wishes a divorce. He squanders his fortune on the "she wolves" of Paris and it is only then that the wife, seeing him in evening clothes and learning how he threw himself away when she turned him down, realizes the error of her ways and a reconciliation occurs.

Emphasis is laid on the human interest angle and the appeal to the emotions in the pathos of the situation in which the hero finds himself. The story is filmed without much action, dependence being placed largely on its emotional appeal. As a consequence, the interest is inclined to lag and give the impression that it could have been told in much less footage.

Alma Ruben's work is very effective, but her role is an unsympathetic one. Bertram Grassby does good work as a snob and Judy King as a little dancing girl scores as the only member of the Paris set who is really true blue. Harry Myers contributes some effective comedy touches. While Jack Mulhall does good work, his role does not seem entirely suited to him, for his portrayal never strikes the deep note that is necessary to take hold of the emotions and give full force to the husband's plight.

Patrons who demand punch and action will not find them in "She Wolves." However, its human interest, pathos and characterization will probably appeal to a number of patrons.

Based on the David Belasco play "The Man in Evening Clothes."
Directed by Maurice Elvey.
Length, 5,783 feet.

Story

Filled with the romantic dreams of youth, Germaine is disillusioned when she finds that her parents for financial reasons have arranged for her marriage with Lucien, a crude mannered individual who loves his horses and dogs and cares nothing for appearances. Finally Germaine rebels and censures Lucien, who determined to make himself over according to Germaine's ideas goes to Paris and finally becomes a regular dandy. Thrilled at the prospect of returning to Germaine he receives a letter from her stating happiness with him is impossible. Disheartened, he goes in for reckless gayety and finally dissipates his entire fortune. Delandel having won Germaine's friendship feeds her with tales of Lucien's escapades until she finally comes to Paris to ask her freedom, which Lucien, hiding his sorrow, agrees to. Germaine sees him later and finds he is a polished gentleman, but has accepted a menial position. Delandel's slurs on Lucien, finally anger her, and realizing her mistake, Germaine goes to Lucien's home. There she meets a dancing girl who tells her that Lucien loves only his wife. Thoroughly chastened, Germaine declares her love for Lucien and he takes her in his arms.

"The Crowded Hour"

Bebe Daniels Does Much to Save an Unsympathetic Role in This Paramount Presentation

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Written for the stage by two past masters of dramatic construction, it seems strange that in "The Crowded Hour" they should have planned a plot in which it is impossible for the heroine to gain the sympathy of her audience. Bebe Daniels, as Peggy Laurence, does her best to perform this task, and few are as well suited to such a part, but the fact remains that she is trying to win another woman's husband, and the play shows nothing in the conduct of the wife to justify the action, and so the interest is not fully gained and a fine production does not wholly save it.

It is probable that many clienteles will overlook the moral action and consider only the physical. To these the play will make a strong appeal, for there is a wealth of war material that should stir the coldest blood, and the staged scenes in these sequences are really more convincing than the authentic war pictures cut in to give color.

Miss Daniels shows moments of intensity that make her love seem so real that you almost overlook the fact that no good reason is shown why Billy Laidlaw should have preferred her to his wife. It might almost be said that the play is too true to life to make good dramatic material. Kenneth Harlan makes a good Laidlaw, but more interest falls to Frank Morgan as his friend, while T. Roy Barnes makes the song and dance man the most likable of the male characters. Helen Lee Worthing makes the most of her small opportunities. There is a commendable absence of flag waving and other hokum in the war stuff. It belongs and does not tire, and it adds immensely to the color because it is so well done, and quite the finest moment in the play comes when Alice Chapin, as the French mother, tells Peggy why she does not weep for her three dead sons. It is a splendid piece of pure sentiment, well directed. The scenarist plays too far beyond the climax with his falling action.

Story

Billy Laidlaw, seeking new sensations, attends a Bowery amateur night. Sensing the real ability of Peggy Laurence, who with her partner, Matt Wilde, has tempted fate, he gets them a chance on Broadway, and they more than make good. Laidlaw becomes so interested in Peggy that he does not enlist when the country enters the World War, but he does go when his younger brother is killed. Peggy follows as a "Y" entertainer, and Grace Laidlaw joins the Red Cross. Peggy meets Laidlaw just behind the front lines. The "Y" show is interrupted by an air raid, which heralds a German advance. There is danger that an ammunition dump will fall into the hands of the enemy and Laidlaw volunteers to destroy it. The colonel orders Laidlaw recalled. The telephone lines are down and Peggy makes after Laidlaw in a side car. She wins through to another telephone station, but when given her choice between saving the life of the man she loves or saving an entire battalion, she gets the battalion out of the trenches. Laidlaw destroys the dump but is captured by the Germans. Grace nurses Peggy, who is temporarily blinded, and so wins her sympathy that the girl sends Laidlaw back to his wife.

Jesse J. Goldburg Presents Franklyn Farnum in First of a New Series of Western Features

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As the first of a new series of Western starring Franklyn Farnum, which will be distributed through Independent Pictures Corporation, Jesse J. Goldburg offers "The Gambling Fool."

The title described the type of character that Farnum is called on to portray, that is a western chap who is always ready to bet on anything or join in a game. In this way he wins a ranch that is needed for a big power project and incurs the enmity of a crooked capitalist. With the ranch he "inherits" an infant when its father is killed and the baby becomes the centre of interest furnishing the comedy and the reason for melodramatic action.

Franklyn Farnum has a congenial role and handles it in a manner that will please his admirers. There is no dearth of action and considerable human interest in the plight of the baby as well as some obvious but rather amusing comedy. The continuity, however, is jumpy and the action considerably involved. The scenes shift from the town to the country and from the West to New York and back with such rapidity and so few explanatory titles that it is difficult to follow the story. The baby is kidnapped and rekidnapped until you are apt to wonder what it is all about.

There is an amusing scene of a poker game in which Farnum outwits the crooks by means which while clever would hardly seem possible with experienced players. Ruth Dwyer is attractive and pleasing as the girl and others in the cast are satisfactory, although Harry Northrup overacts.

There is an abundance of shooting, riding, fighting, etc., to appeal to action lovers, but the picture would be considerably improved by re-editing so as to clarify the confusing points of the story.

Story

Morgan, who has sunk pretty low in the social scale, has only his baby daughter and his home left, and his home is desired by Cass as it is along the right of way of a waterpower project. Notified that he must pay his taxes by six o'clock, he comes to town to gamble and win enough money to pay. Cass' man Fitzroy plans to cheat him, but a stranger, Jack Stanford, learns of this and wins the ranch. Mary, the baby's aunt, comes to town and Cass, who has murdered Morgan, makes her believe that Stanford is the murderer. Cass has his men steal the baby from Stanford and he and his pals "steal" it back. Stanford shows Mary how he has made the ranch over to the baby and convinces her of his innocence. In a row with Fitzroy over Mary, Cass kills him and reveals his true character. Mary goes to Stanford's ranch, which Cass attacks. The sheriff comes and arrests Cass for the two murders. In New York, Stanford appears at Ruth's home and when her father learns he is a member of an old New York family and went west to make his fortune, he is glad to accept him as a son-in-law.

Fox Offers Entertaining Story of How a Clever Mother Cured Her Daughters of the Jazz Craze

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under the title of "The Wings of Youth," with the descriptive subtitle, "And How They Were Clipped," William Fox is offering a story of modern life featuring Ethel Clayton and Madge Bellamy, directed by Emmett Flynn.

The keynote of the story is the fact that a modern mother suddenly discovers that her grown daughters whom she thought immersed in their studies are devotees of jazz and determined to marry their dancing partners. They consider her old-fashioned and will pay no attention to her pleas of advice. So she proceeds to shake off her old-fashioned ways and apparently goes much further than the girls along the hectic pathway of wild chase after pleasure. It turns out as she expected, for the girls become disgusted when they see their mother doing things they thought perfectly proper for themselves. The mother also has the added satisfaction of proving that one of the prospective fiances is unworthy, while the other one proves true blue. A third daughter who appears to be more settled but is engaged in writing a book on advanced thinking is not so impressed, but she too finally learns her lesson.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Looking for Sally"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

There is a lot of genuine fun in "Looking for Sally," a two-reel comedy which Charlie Chase has turned out for Hal Roach. It is one of the best things in which we have seen Chase in a long time. Returning from Europe, Charlie is met at the pier by his parents and the girl they have selected to be his bride. Through coincidence Charlie mistakes an ungainly maiden for his handpicked bride while the latter comprehends the wavings from an unhealthy individual on shipboard to be from her husband "to be." Charlie falls in love with the intended one and runs all over the town, inspecting the face of every maiden in his pathway, until he locates her in a mission. There, in order to kill time, Chase fakes a history of his life. This gives the comedy a chance to review some of the frothy places of bright brass days.—T. W.

"King Cotton"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this Lloyd Hamilton Comedy, distributed by Educational, a mother has high hopes of her son, who is born on a Southern farm, becoming a cotton king. He grows up to be a handy man on the plantation. In hunting rabbits he captures a skunk and everyone gives him a wide berth. He saves the plantation owner, incurs the enmity of the foreman, as both love the same girl. Deciding to take a bath, he and the villain are washed down-stream when the floodgates are opened and, escaping without clothes, disguises as an old negro woman and becomes the girl's personal maid. The black starts to wash off and the other negroes are scared. Hamilton gives one of his inimitable characterizations which are always good for a number of laughs. He has not on the whole been provided with as good situations as usual and as a result, while it should prove an amusing two-reeler for the majority of patrons, it is not as snappy or quite as funny as the majority of his previous films.—C. S. S.

"The Great Decide"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

"The Great Decide" is listed as No. 4 of "The Pacemakers," by H. C. Witwer, a series released by F. B. O., the cast of which is headed by Alberta Vaughn, George O'Hara, Albert Cooke, Kit Guard and Stanley Taylor. The series has to do with life at Pomeroy College and the latest presentation is of a highly entertaining tilt between the sophomores and freshmen. The principals enact the roles of two rivals in love and athletics, one a sophomore and the other a freshman. Both are the leaders of their respective classes and both aspire for the hand of Nita O'Neill, essayed by Alberta. The freshmen are giving a party when some of the sophomores, representing themselves as policemen, "raid" the place. The freshmen return in time to recover their girls and a battle royal, in which a miniature lake plays an important part, affords plenty of fun. Real thrills are provided by a contest for the boxing championship of the college between the rivals.—T. W.

"Neptune's Stepdaughter"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

As implied by the title, this two-reel comedy, in which Oliver Hardy plays one of the leading roles, is a burlesque on the under-water-mermaid type of spectacular productions. A director takes a bunch of beauties to the shore to film scenes which include their being kidnapped by pirates. A real gang of rough seamen overpower the pirates, don their regalia and really kidnap the girls, taking them aboard ship, the director yelling "great" all the time. Then follows considerable rough-and-tumble comedy on board. The comedy ends with an under-water sequence in which the villain chases the would-be hero and a swordfish joins in. The latter part is cleverly handled and some of the effects are quite mystifying. There are quite a number of amusing moments, the action moves fast and this subject should prove satisfactory for the slap-stick fan.—C. S. S.

"Dragon Alley"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

The bunch of kids which have been appearing in recent Juvenile comedies distributed by Educational invade Chinatown in this issue and create havoc in a big laundry. They pull regular Peck's Bad Boy stuff, feeding a Chinaman's cue to a duck, knocking down a cop, hiding in laundry bags and scaring the Chinese and a negro customer, tie two "pigtails" together and end by being chased out by a negro and a Chinese cop. They help the freckled lad wash dishes and then assist the Chinese kid to deliver laundry at the home of the wealthy chap. Here they do some very "fancy" dancing and turn things upside-down generally. The picture is fast-moving slapstick at all times, but the best part of the comedy is contributed by an exceedingly clever baby who has appeared in some of the earlier issues. This kidlet not only enters into the fun but seems to enjoy it and certainly goes over big. It is one of the very best of this series and should prove a big laugh-getter in the majority of houses of all classes.—C. S. S.

"Ko-Ko Trains 'Em"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

Max Fleisher's cartoon clown Ko-Ko proceeds to show his boss how to make a dog do tricks in this "Out of the Inkwell" cartoon. This is one of the cleverest and most amusing of this series. A friend visits Fleisher's office, bringing a young pup; he tries to draw a picture of the dog, but it turns into the little clown and insists on occupying the limelight and training the dog. There are a number of laughs in the way the clown makes the cartoon dog express various emotions. Finally he unlooses trained fleas that rout the audience. There is unusually good animation and combined photography and cartoon work in the way the clown plays with the real dog, even riding on his back and tickling him on the nose.—C. S. S.

"Grief in Bagdad"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

"Grief in Bagdad" partly burlesques a well known feature in which Bagdad is the locale. It is a Hal Roach product with Earl Mohan, Billy Engle, Dolores Johnston and others in the cast. A harem, a mysterious rope, a pie-eating native, much sword play and much gambling about in a marble swimming pool, comprise the action which is all of the familiar and entertaining type.—T. W.

"Pathe Review No. 18"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"Pathe Review No. 18" is composed of three interesting subjects. One is titled "Northpole Cowboys," which shows flocks of reindeer in and out of the harness. "Jack the Giant Killer" is a pen version of the legend by that title. The Pathecolor is of Baltimore in the "Visiting Our Own America" series.—T. W.

"Tourists DeLuxe"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Hilliard Karr and William Hayes are featured in this Century Comedy distributed by Universal. They are cast as two chaps who start out in a flivver on a de luxe tour. All sorts of mishaps befall them, the engine spouts like a geyser. One fellow climbs a pole to read the sign and finds out it says "Wet Paint." A stuffed lion in the road causes excitement. The flivver becomes overbalanced and runs along on the rear wheels. Finally the pair reach an auto colony and the car runs amuck tearing down the tents. More things go wrong and finally the owner's daughter is kidnapped and rescued and an explosion blows the party up in the air. There is plenty of rough-and-tumble action; some of the stunts are ingenious and all are amusing. It should prove a satisfactory attraction where slapstick comedies are liked for it is one of the fastest moving of the recent Centurys.—C. S. S.

"The River Conway"

(Red Seal—Scenic—One Reel)

This reel, distributed by Red Seal, is a scenic which traces the course of a picturesque river in Wales. Starting as a small stream that flows down a rugged mountainside, it exhibits varying moods, now placid as it flows by the foot of mountains and again turbulent. Its course leads through meadow land and rocky glen, past the stately old feudal castle of King Edward I, and finally widens out until it furnishes an avenue for shipping. This reel contains some very pretty photographic shots in which the distance or "stereoscopic" effect is particularly noticeable.—C. S. S.

"Concerning Cheese"

(Fox—Varieties—One Reel)

This issue of Fox Varieties is devoted entirely to scenes showing in detail the manufacture of the ordinary store cheese, or cheddar cheese as it is technically known, from the time the cows are milked until the completed product is stored away for ageing. This process includes the souring of the milk in large vats by addition of a small quantity of lactic acid, squeezing out the whey, drying and pressing into forms, etc. The point is also brought out that "cheese" is derived from a word that means "perfect." This reel should prove of average interest because of the fact that this commodity is so well known and widely used.—C. S. S.

"The Fast Male"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

"The Fast Male" is No. 5 of "The Pacemaker" series, with Alberta Vaughn, George O'Hara, Albert Cooke, Kit Guard and Stanley Taylor. This presentation of the F. B. O. series, from the story by H. C. Witwer, based upon college life, shows how Tom Granger, the poor and practical student, overcomes all odds and frame-ups and wins a marathon race, defeating his rival, Merton Randolph, the snobbish underhanded rival for the hand of Nita O'Neil. The cross country race holds the interest although the general theme may seem to contain not quite the same abundance of action as its predecessor.—T. W.

"Here's Your Hat"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Here is another of the series of Universal comedies featuring Arthur Lake and Olive Hasbrouck in stories dealing with boys and girls who are just at the age when they feel they are grown-up. The action concerns Arthur and his rival Eddie who call on Olive, each trying to get rid of the other. Arthur finally finds a hole in his sock and inks it, getting ink on his hand. He hides it in a sling and gets mixed up and puts the wrong arm in the sling. It is fairly amusing, and the young people will probably enjoy it, for it contains considerable humor typical of this period of life, but is not quite as peppy as some of the others in the series.—C. S. S.

"Rock Bottom"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

In this Cameo Comedy, distributed through Educational, Cliff Bowes appears as a dull-witted chap working for a company that is building a big dam; Virginia Vance is the boss's daughter and Ruth Hiatt is Cliff's country sweetheart. Cliff manages to do everything wrong, and in greasing a cable lets the grease pot fall on the boss's head. He is sent for the payroll and the foreman and his gang try to capture him and take it away. He gets out of the machine but falls back in again. After considerable rough-and-tumble action he finally falls through the roof of the shack and safely delivers the payroll money. There are several laughs for the slapstick fan and it is up to the Cameo average.—C. S. S.

"The Line Runners"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

A plot of a gang of smugglers to bring contraband goods over the Mexican border, which is thwarted by a supposed tramp who turns out to be the new ranger, furnishes the theme for this Universal reissue. The action which follows this familiar line includes an attempt on the part of the criminals to charge the "tramp" with an attempted murder, and a romance between the tramp and a restaurant waitress who aids him. The cast is composed of little-known players and no one is featured. There is nothing novel or particularly exciting about this picture, but for audiences that like films of this type there is enough action to make it a fair offering.—C. S. S.

"Little Annie Rooney" (Mary Pickford) and "Don Q" (Douglas Fairbanks) take a few minutes from work on their respective United Artists' productions to pose

"Darkest Africa"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Cartoonist Terry gives his version of how animals divert themselves in "Darkest Africa." A monkey manufactures a metal elephant and goes flivvering through jungle and plain. Other monkeys are seen engaged in a game of quoits, using the tusk of a hippo for the receiving peg of their horse shoes. The cartoon is up to Terry's standard—in other words, highly worthwhile from the standpoint of amusement.—T. W.

"Wings of Youth"

Emmett Flynn has given the picture good direction and the action moves forward at a peppy pace. Naturally there are a number of jazz scenes, and while there is little suspense as you can easily discern how the story will turn out, the interest is well sustained.

While Ethel Clayton and Madge Bellamy are both featured, Miss Clayton as the clever mother has by far the most prominent role and gives a fine performance. Not only is she attractive and wears some gorgeous gowns, but acts with the sincerity for which she is noted. As one of the daughters, Madge Bellamy has not much to do, but is entirely satisfactory. The work of the entire cast is creditable, especially Freeman Wood as a cad and Robert Cain as the mother's supposed second husband.

While the story is light, there are several interesting and amusing situations that make this pleasing entertainment.

Story

Mrs. Manners loves her three grown daughters and considers herself a successful mother. She arranged a party for her youngest, Betty, but the girls at the boarding school phone they are too busy with their studies to come home. Hearing what sounds like a party, Mrs. Manners goes to the school and finds a wild party in progress. Betty and Madeline declare they are going to marry their partners. Gwendolyn, the studious one and an advanced thinker along sex lines says she is to marry Dobbs when he secures a divorce. Mrs. Manners begs them to wait awhile, goes abroad and returns with a man, takes a swell apartment and dresses lavishly and finally becomes notorious. Madelyne's friend Lucian tries to make love to her. Madelyne learns this and becomes disgusted. Betty's friend Jimmie proves true blue. Finally Mrs. Manners gives an extra wild party which disgusts Betty and Madelyn. The latter upbraids her for being drunk. Mrs. Manners then reveals the fact that she has been only acting, that the man is their cousin and she simply wanted to show them the error of their ways. Gwendolyn is not impressed, but she finally returns home having learned her lesson.

Utica Showman Europe-Bound to Claim Golden Inheritance

With a golden background assured for the years to come by a fortune left by a relative in Austria, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Elias, the former owner of the Cornhill Theatre in Utica, N. Y., will observe their silver wedding anniversary by a trip to Europe early in June to claim the pot of gold. Mr. Elias is one of the oldest exhibitors in point of service in New York State, and likewise as square as they come. When Mr. and Mrs. Elias sail out of the New York harbor on June 8, bound for Europe, they will enjoy a honeymoon a quarter of a century after the first, and one that will take them back to home scenes and with the knowledge that thousands of dollars await them. They will be absent about eight weeks.

Howard Richardson of Chestertown hasn't been doing any of the kind of celebrating he indulged in a couple of years ago, when twins arrived one day and he blew the whole village to a free show from noon until midnight. Mr. Richardson was along Film Row during the past week, stopping off on his way to New York. He admitted that there was little chance of repeating the celebration of two years ago.

It must be that the Schine brothers of Gloversville are after more houses and that the chain of fifty-four or fifty-five theatres will run up to sixty. Bob Bendell, who has been handling various exchanges in Albany for several years, is now engaged in scouting for theatres for the Schines.

Jake Rosenthal of Troy is the latest to fall for the amateur night idea along with his present picture program. Mr. Rosenthal started with amateur nights last week, boosting his admission to 15 cents, and incidentally packing his house to the doors shortly after 7 o'clock. Mr. Rosenthal declares that the crowds of today want amateur acts. He will do his own announcing. That won't be a hard matter, for in the days gone by Jake used to sell song books in burlesque houses and has a voice that can be heard a block away.

The Albany Zone continues to grow and now all but two houses in Utica are members. No date has yet been fixed for the next meeting, some of the officers preferring to wait until after the national convention, while others want it before.

Papayanakos brothers, old-time exhibitors, who first made their money in Watertown but left there to open houses in Gouverneur, Potsdam and Canton, bought the Star in Potsdam last week from O. P. Benson. The Star was built about ten years ago and has been leased by H. E. Flack for some time past.

Ben Apple of the King in Troy figures out that 10 per cent. of the people in that city go to the movies every night and that the same ratio holds true with the outlying districts. There are twelve houses in Troy and some of the managers are rather inclined to differ with Ben.

The Avon in Watertown, a Nate Robbins house, announces a change of policy, splitting its week with vaudeville, the policy of the Olympic, also owned by Mr. Robbins, remaining unchanged.

Remarking that "all work and no play made Mike a sick boy," Mike Kallet of Oneida is planning to take a vacation this summer. It's quite possible, now that his brother, Joe, who runs the Strand in Rome, has bought a new car, that the two will tour the country together.

Lawrence Carkey of the Strand in Carthage entertained Civil War veterans of the village one day last week when "Abraham Lincoln" was shown.

Harry Kron, who runs the Casino at Fleischmanns, doesn't have to depend upon his picture theatre either as a source of revenue or as a means of entertainment. He is running six bowling alleys and between the two his bank book is as fat as the proverbial calf.

When William Benton of Ballston Spa, with theatres in Saratoga Springs and Plattsburg, wants another house he simply makes up his mind to that effect and goes out and builds one. He just completed one last fall in Plattsburg, and now announces that he will build one in Mechanicsville this summer that will cost $140,000 and will be ready to open on October 1. The house will be 61 feet in width and 146 feet deep, with a main floor seating 754 and a balcony seating 376 persons.

Meyer Freedman of Schenectady smokes good cigars now that he is in the real estate business. How do we know? Just finished one, a "Corona."

Mrs. Francis McGraw, owner of the Gem Theatre in Little Falls, lost her sister by death last Tuesday. Herman Stern, local manager for F. B. O., arrived in Little Falls that day and proved a friend indeed. Upon learning that Mrs. McGraw wanted to go to Utica to make certain arrangements, Mr. Stern transported her there and back all within two hours' time.

When Oscar Perrin, manager of the Leland in Albany, discovers that the majority of his patrons don't like a picture being shown, he doesn't hesitate for a moment. This fact was plainly shown last week when Mr. Perrin started off the week with a certain well known picture and pulled it that same night after hearing the crowds protesting as they left during the afternoon and evening. "Why prolong the agony?" said Mr. Perrin, "If a picture doesn't suit on Monday, it certainly won't on Friday."

What's all this we hear about W. W. Farley and Jacob Tarsches, both wealthy residents of Albany, getting together and erecting a new theatre in the Capital City? Mr. Farley already has three or four in Schenectady, as well as a number in Yonkers, while Mr. Tarsches was former part owner of the Leland.

Out in Schaghticoke, the business men of the village figure out that a picture show for Saturday helps to get the crowd in from the country districts and at the same time offers excellent entertainment. So the business men are running a theatre there, co-operating with Mr. Sample and securing excellent results.

Every night last week was as good as a Sunday night at the Lincoln in Troy, according to Tony Veiller, the manager. With "New Lives for Old" he stood them up five nights out of seven, and the funny part of it all was that a one legged individual whose name wasn't even in the cast scored the hit with the crowd.

Buffalo, N. Y.

"We do not know whether or not we are going to succeed in one year but we're going to keep right on trying," said Al Beckerich, manager of Loew's State and president of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association, in commenting on Buffalo's Go to Theatre Week. "We are after those people who have dropped away from the theatres. We're going to get them back. Maybe we can do it in one year, maybe not. But we'll have a Go to Theatre Week every year."

Vincent R. McFaul, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, said: "Spring weather is the chief enemy of the theatre at this time. We've never made an effort to fight it before. But it was always true—at least for a good many years—that as soon as the warm days came and the autos were out from their winter naps, everyone went for a ride. Outdoor sports are a great foe of the theatre. But during Go to Theatre week we put an extra attractions to show the folks what they were missing in letting the shows slide all summer." Incidentally Buffalo's Go to Theatre Week was a huge success and houses were packed all week."

Pittsburgh

The completely rebuilt Homewood Theatre on Homewood Avenue, Pittsburgh, was opened on April 18 by its new owner, H. R. Worthington, who has erected one of the finest of the smaller picture theatres to be found anywhere. Much money has been invested in the new house, which seats 300; the best of everything has gone into its construction, and any exhibitor contemplating making over a small house or building a new one would fine it well worth his while to visit the Homewood. John Cassidy is manager.

The papers have been signed whereby Nate Friedberg continues to operate the Alhambra Theatre in East Liberty. The property was bought over a year ago by the Silverman Brothers of Altoona, and several theatrical interests were after the lease, but Friedberg landed the house finally. Milwaukee

An unusually early hot spell, coming on the heels of several nights of rain, played havoc with the attendance at most Milwaukee theatres last week. Downtown houses, as well as the outskirts, felt the slump. The hot weather jammed the highways with motor cars for the first time this season, giving exhibitors a taste of what they may expect during the coming summer. Fred Seegert, president of the M. P. T. O. in Wisconsin, declared reports reaching him were to the effect that the falling off in theatre attendance was general throughout the state.

A. J. Meininger, who had announced that he had signed up with the Silliman circuit in Milwaukee in an executive capacity, has decided at the last minute not to join the organization and instead once more has returned to the fold of Ascher Bros. for whom he managed the Merrill until it was taken over by Saxe several weeks ago. J. H. Silliman and Jack Grauman, of the Silliman chain, have not yet decided upon someone for the job which Meininger was scheduled to fill. Several other additions have been made to the Silliman staff, however, including Eddie Leidolf, formerly assistant manager of the Merrill.

With the return to Milwaukee of Mrs. Ann McMurdy from the West Coast, indications are that a new publicity system will be inaugurated for the Saxe chain of houses. Heretofore a special publicity expert has been engaged to handle the work for the Wisconsin Theatre, but the managers of the other twenty-three Saxe houses have had to handle the publicity work as best they could. Now, however, in addition to Mrs. McMurdy, Oliver E. Remey, a veteran newspaperman and formerly secretary of the Wisconsin state fair, is on the publicity staff and the two, it is believed, will direct the press work for the entire chain.

O. J. Wooden, manager of Uihlein's Alhambra and Garden theatres, has just employed James Williamson, Milwaukee newspaper man, to handle his publicity.

News of the Seattle Territory

Charles R. Rodiger has returned to the Moore Amusement Company organization in Tacoma after an absence of almost a year, spent with the West Coast-Langley Company. Mr. Rodiger was formerly with the Moore company for five and one-half years. He is handling newspaper publicity for the company's Tacoma houses.

D. S. Kimberly, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, is sprucing up the house and is offering more artistic stage presentations than under previous management.

L. J. Gray has purchased the Rose Theatre in suburban Portland from J. S. Langhorn.

With the opening of L. Barlow's new Kootenai Theatre, Libby, Montana, the town will have opposition. The house is an old one and has been completely remodeled, refurnished and re-decorated by B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle.

The Armory Theatre, Genesee, Idaho, now has opposition, with the opening of a new house by W. C. Ericson.

"Doc" Johnson, who owns the Lois Theatre, Toppenish, Wash., has purchased a new transverter to add to his booth equipment, and has ordered the equipment for his newly acquired house in Zillah, Wash., from B. F. Shearer, Inc.

After the deal between Warner Brothers and the Clemmer Theatre, Spokane, was all set it was called off, according to later report. Warners withdrew when Universal began bidding up the house, and the latest report states that the latter will take possession May 1.

The Keeler Grand in Walla Walla, Wash., recently opened with a high-class stock company which cut in on the receipts of motion pictures. Blaine Geer has therefore started an opposition stock company, meeting the prices of the other company, in addition to his regular picture program. The new plan has not yet had time for a thorough tryout, but Mr. Geer feels that he can hold his patronage with what he is offering.

Mr. Gwinn, former manager of the Neptune Theatre, Jensen & Von Herber's Seattle suburban house, has gone to Olympia as manager of the Liberty during the absence of E. A. Zabel, on vacation in the South. Bob Murray, formerly of the Coliseum staff, has succeeded Gwinn as manager of the Neptune.

G. F. Bessenger opens his new Madrona Garden Theatre in suburban Seattle on May 2. The house seats 750 and is a modern, beautiful structure. No expense has been spared to give it all the comforts and luxurious appointments of a downtown house. For the opening performances Mr. Bessenger has secured the services of Chas. W. Hawley, noted organist, who will occupy the console of the big Smith organ, giving vocal and instrumental selections. "The Speed Spook" will be the opener.

Miss Irma Carstens is building a new house in the Green Lake district. Miss Carstens operates the Green Lake and Fremont theatres at the present time.

When the major portion of the little town of Hamilton, Wash., was destroyed by fire last week, Frank Jacobi's theatre was in the path of the flames. It has been announced that no effort will be made to rebuild the town.

A verdict in favor of Danz and Strauss, owners of the Hollywood Theatre in suburban Seattle, was rendered in their suit against L. R. Steele, owner of the Queen Ann Theatre. Steele, who, it is said, had agreed to sell his house to these men, refused to go through with the transaction after deeds were signed, cash paid and arrangements completed for taking over the house. The court awarded Danz and Strauss $1,500 and costs.

Detroit

The police have in custody several men who are suspected of guilt in connection with the recent attempt to blow up the Harper Theatre on Harper avenue. The house manager arrived just in time to prevent the explosion of the safe.

The Rotary Club of Manistee has decided to go into the exhibiting business. The club has erected a new community theatre in the Salt City and will operate it with first run film as the attraction.

Frank Lorenzen, an exhibitor in Detroit for many years, has retired from the film field to open a flower shop in the fashionable La Salle Garden district of the city.

Denver

The Colorado Legislature has adjourned and the censorship and Sunday closing bills have died in the committees. One of the most radical censorship bills ever introduced was in the hands of the judiciary committee of the House of Representatives this year.

Denver will soon have three new suburban theatres, all of which will be up to date in every sense of the word. Fred P. Brown and J. B. Michilletti are building a large new house on South Pearl street which they will call the Mission Theatre. The Western Enterprises have under construction a magnificent theatre on South Gaylord street. On the north side of the city a new theatre is under construction at Thirty-second and Lowell boulevard.

With the adjourning of the Legislature, Senator Frank R. Kelly returned to his home in Salida, Col. Senator Kelly is one of the most popular exhibitors in Colorado, having operated theatres in Salida and Alimosa for a number of years. While he was busy in the Senate Mrs. Kelly spent most of her time visiting exchanges and arranging her bookings for the coming season.

P. H. Hoppen, well known both in the Omaha and Denver territories, is remodeling the America Theatre at Longmont, Col. He recently bought this place and conceived the idea of lowering the floor and moving back the screen, which will result in increasing the capacity over 100 seats. It is a sure bet that when Mr. Hoppen gets through Longmont will have another high-class theatre.

GRETA NISSEN

Leading lady in Paramount's "In the Name of Love" will later have an important role in "The Wanderer"

Fred W. Bronte, owner and manager of the Gem Theatre, Yuma, Col., is back home after spending considerable time at the hospital at Rochester, Minn. His many friends are pleased to know that his condition is very much improved. Mr. Bronte, however, announces that he will return to Minnesota in about ninety days and submit to an operation which he expects will put him in first-class condition.

There are rumors that many important changes will soon take place at the Ogden Theatre, one of the most popular suburban houses of Denver. It is a known fact that Jacob Eppler, for many years manager, will sever his connections about June 1. Other important changes are expected. Mr. Eppler expects to leave for California to enter into other business fields. As a result of his withdrawal, the M. P. T. O. of Colorado and the Denver Joint Board of Arbitration will suffer a real loss.

Out-of-town exhibitors in Denver last week were Russell Hardwick of Clovis, N. M.; Gus Kohn of the Kohn & Fairchild Amusement Company, which operates a chain of theatres in this territory; P. H. Hoppen, Longmont, Col., and William Menagh of Greeley, Col.

Connecticut

An appeal has been entered in the supreme court of errors in Hartford by Ernest W. Michelfelder of New Rochelle, N. Y., against the decision of Judge Isaac Wolfe of the superior court, which set aside the jury verdict of $2,127.50 against Abraham D. and Isadore E. Goldberg and Charles Finberg. The three were sued by Michelfelder on the charge that the Goldbergs had misrepresented to him a lease on the Grand Theatre in Hartford which they owned, and that Finberg had misrepresented to him the ownership of the theatre's equipment. Michelfelder advanced the sum of $2,000 on the transaction, took over the Grand for eleven days in February, 1923, and then vacated and asked for his money back.

Excavations have been started for the new Strand Theatre in Winsted. The directors of the Strand Theatre Corporation at a meeting on April 20 voted to place stock certificates on sale. Abe Davidson, well-known exhibitor of Willimantic, has deeded the property for the theatre to the company. According to the revenue stamps and mortgages on the property filed in the town hall, $31,000 was paid for the land.

San Francisco

The Strand Theatre at Stockton, Cal., has been purchased by M. J. Rubino, who with James Lima and John Peters has also taken over the Spot Theatre of that city. A picture theatre is being erected at Battle Mountain, Nev., by Dan Shovelin.

A Big Press Book

In this day of big pictures, both in footage and box office appeal, a press book gotten out by Chadwick Pictures Corporation on "The Wizard of Oz" seems appropriate. This compendium of information useful to an exhibitor measures twenty-two inches high by fourteen inches wide. Its size and bright coloring, an orange and blue, command instant attention. Within are found the usual exhibitor aids, treated with an eye to helping the exhibitor exploit this Larry Semon picture. The book is not only attractively gotten up by meaty from c ver to cover.

NEVER SAY DIE. (6 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. A very good comedy drama but drew only a fair business. Not as good as "Going Up" in my estimation which drew good and pleased them. Tone, good. Special, 25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit, (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

NEVER SAY DIE. (6 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. It is a dandy comedy but did not please as good as "The Hottentot." Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 900. Admission 10-25-30. Charles L. Nott, Opera House (400 seats), Sutherland, Iowa.

RACING LUCK. (5 reels). Star, Monte Banks. A good comedy drama for those who like speed and laughter. Went over very good and brought many hearty laughs. Tone, good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

WHEN A GIRL LOVES. (5,867 feet). Star cast. A heavy drama which is good if they like that kind. Not the class of picture to please a small town house. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. Farmers and town class town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

F. B. O.

ALIMONY. (7 reels). Star cast. A good picture for those that like this kind of stuff. Good acting, put it over. Failed to draw. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Farm class town of 175. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. A very good western. Thomson always goes good here and his horse does some good acts. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Fred shows that he is handy with his fists, in this one. Seemed to go over pretty well, although I heard some ladies remark that there was a little too much fighting, for we showed this with Round 6 of the "Fighting Blood" series. Would not advise this combination. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. General audience appeal. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30, special, 15-40, 25-50. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

LET'S GO. Star, Richard Talmadge. A fast picture with good story and one most of them will like. I would call it a good small town picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Farmers and town people town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

MASK OF LOPEZ. (4,900 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. This is the first one of the series and if it is a fair sample of the balance coming I'll pat myself on the back as he has surely made a hit, a sure comer. Tone, good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

TRIGGER FINGERS. (4,775 feet). Star, Bob Custer. Very good western. Lots of action. Had fine house. Custer is okay. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idle Hour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

UNTAMED YOUTH. (5 reels). Star cast. Only a fair program picture. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star cast. Picture did not go here. I do not think that this picture is a drawing card for the South. Nothing objectionable but "Abraham Lincoln" did not pay half the rental for me. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, twenty-five per cent. College class, town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

CIRCUS DAYS. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Easily superior to all of Jackie's previous releases. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Village and rural class town of 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Drew well on account of star's drawing power here as well as the good line of paper on it and its connection with West Point. In my opinion his weakest picture. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (7,700 feet). Star, Alexander Carr. A good program picture that failed to draw very well in this place. The title is unknown to the average small town theatre goer therefore advertising helped very little. For cities and large towns this picture should make a hit. It is full of comedy as well as pathos and is brim full of good acting. Very small profit. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SANDRA. (7,905 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. The weakest picture I have ever played with Barbara LaMarr in. There was absolutely no action in the picture at all. Business rotten. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ten per cent. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

SELF MADE FAILURE. (8 reels). Star, Ben Alexander. This one gave me a surprise. Ran it on Good Friday, one of the poorest nights in the year and pulled a fairly good house when I expected an awful poor house. I ran a trailer on it and it seemed to get them. A good little program offering. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star, Roy Stewart. Too much cattle driving and my rental in proportion to the cattle. Lost a great deal on it. Okay if bought for cheap program. No drawing power and gets weaker after each showing. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

TARNISH. (6,821 feet). Star, May McAvoy. Much adverse criticism. Picture conveys idea that decent girls find all men unclean before marriage, otherwise tarnished. According to the picture woman must clean and polish her tarnished man after marriage. Picture overdrawn and leaves bad impression of all men folks. Acting and star is fine. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

THIEF IN PARADISE. (7,231 feet). Star, Doris Kenyon. Picture did great business in spite of opposition. The kind of picture that will bring you a good house after your matinee. All parts well played, and no complaints from any. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

THIEF IN PARADISE. (7,031 feet). Star cast. Here is a real right smart attraction for any theatre anywhere. It has action, class, beautiful settings and an exceptional cast. Go after this one boys. It's a knockout. Tone, okay. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

WHITE MOTH. (6,550 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. A pleasing program picture that was somewhat long drawn out but it pleased a majority and registered well at the box office so can't kick. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Fox

CHAMPION LOST CAUSES. Star, Edmund Lowe. Very nice little picture. I think everyone was satisfied. Mystery story that will hold your attention. R. L. Nowell, Idle Hour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

DANCERS. (6,656 feet). Star cast. Fair special, but by no means a big super as Mr. Fox would have you believe. Only pleased fifty per cent. here. Tone, not much. Sunday, no. Might please some. Fair audience appeal. Pastime Theatre, Sandersville, Georgia.

DANTE'S INFERNO. (5,680 feet). Star cast. This picture will please most of the people and there will be a few who will tire of the scenes of Hades. It is a great picture and will draw if properly handled. Was up against a free Santa Fe entertainment and did not do as well as expected. Railroad class and miners town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

DAUGHTERS OF THE NIGHT. (5,470 feet). Star cast. A fair production that pleased very well but didn't draw any extra business. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

DEADWOOD COACH. (6,346 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Fine Tom Mix special. Pleased all. Don't be afraid to boost this one. In seven reels and should go alone or just with Aesop's Fables. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Pastime Theatre, Sandersville, Georgia.

ELEVENTH HOUR. (6,819 feet). Star, Charles Jones. This one is a very good picture with plenty of action in it, and a little bit of everything. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers town of 500. Admission 10-25. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

END OF THE TRAIL. Star, William Farnum. They certainly picked the rotten Farnums to re-issue. "Drag Harlan" is the only picture in the series. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Saying—"this dependable tip department"—may not make it such:

But—

Exhibitors of the fine type you find generous enough to send tips, are men—and women—of the sort who MAKE it "this dependable tip department."

My part is simply to watch unexpected senders of reports, to write and make certain that the reports are bonafide exhibitor contributions before admitting them to these columns.

The exhibitor's part is to bury all personal feelings toward producers as regards their treatment of the individual, to provide, in reports, honest statements of the performance of the pictures in question.

As an example of the strict honesty with which these reports are written, I want you all to read friend G. W. Pettengill, Jr.'s letter on the next page.

With all our contributors of the type of Mr. Pettengill, it is easy, and safe!—to say "this dependable tip department."—VAN.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. A race horse story well done. Didn't draw for us but no fault of the picture. Get them in and it will please. No tone. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

GREAT DIAMOND MYSTERY. (5,056 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. A little under standard of some of Mason's past productions but pleased fairly well. Special, no. Average audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

GUN FIGHTER. (5 reels). Star, William Farnum. While just an ordinary program picture it went over nicely and seemed to please everybody. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

IT IS THE LAW. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Pretty good. Nothing to rave over; but will get by if you can get them in. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

LADIES TO BOARD. (6,112 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This is one of the best Mix pictures I have shown yet. It contains so much humor that even those that are not Mix fans complimented it. Special, yes. Good appeal. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

LAST MAN ON EARTH. Star cast. These kind of pictures are killing business more than anything else in the small towns. Some of my best patrons left before it finished. I had to hide to keep from getting a black eye from some father or girl's brother. All naked women awful for any small town. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Pastime Theatre, Sandersville, Georgia.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. As good as any he has ever made. Mix gets the "Jack," matters not how good or bad. My patrons eat him up. No tone. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Here is without a doubt the best picture that Mix ever made and one that is suited to him and much better than the picture that Fox had with Farnum in. With the combination of Zane Grey and Tom Mix you can put this picture over in good shape. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

MAN WHO PLAYED SQUARE. (6,700 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Best Jones picture I ever played. Some real comedy and the usual Jones action. Went over fine here. Even got a write-up in the local paper. Tone, okay. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

OH YOU TONY. (6,802 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Has everything that a good picture needs. I always rely on Tom for a good picture and a good house and am never disappointed. Tone, okay. Special, yes. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star cast. Would call this one fair program picture with very little drawing power. Not a special. Poor audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

ROUGHNECK. (7,619 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Good picture of its kind but many complaints from the better class. Too much fine leg shaking for small towns. Complaints. Personally like it myself. Tone, not much. Not suitable for Sunday. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Pastime Theatre, Sandersville, Georgia.

TROUBLE SHOOTER. (5,702 feet). Star, Tom Mix. I would rank this high up among all of his five reelers. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Village and rural class town of 400. Admission 15-25, 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

VILLAGE BLACKSMITH. Star cast. A picture like the many of which "Way Down East" stands representative. I didn't expect much of it but stepped on it quite strongly just for fun. I was agreeably surprised at the result. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Good audience appeal. Village and rural class town of 400. Admission 25-15, 30-15. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

WESTERN LUCK. (5,020 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A No. 1 Western with a good Friend Pettengill Explains a Report

"Dear Van and 'Gang'—I have not sent any reports for some time but I will try to send in one more bunch before we close for the season.

"The reason that I have for writing is to straighten out a little misunderstanding that I think has come up over a report that I sent in some time ago and that was printed in the April 18th issue of the World.

"You will note that the report was about the Chronicles of America which are being produced by the Yale University. In my report I said that I had the entire series booked and that every time I thought of it I cursed myself.

"I have just received a letter from the producers of these pictures asking just why I made that 'attack' on their product.

"I did not mean any attack against anybody or anything but in reading over the report I guess one might get that impression, so I will do my best to explain myself...I meant that the pictures did not fit in well with my program owing to conditions here, but I did not mean to criticise the pictures themselves.

"I wish to say that I think the Chronicles to be the best pictures from an educational standpoint that have ever been produced, and if run as a short subject they will go over fine. I made my mistake in booking a lot of short subjects with them and I only wish to warn others not to do as I did, but to run the Chronicles with a good snappy feature and leave out the other short subjects.

"I hope you will pass this on to the readers of your department because I did not mean to say anything that would harm the producers of the Chronicles, and I want to fix up any misunderstanding that may have come up."—George W. Pettengill, Jr., Mirror Lake Theatre, St. Petersburg, Florida.

deal of action and with Buck, not "Chawles," in the saddle once more. Hope Fox's new ones will come up to this one. Buck Jones one of best Western stars on screen and he is all man, to the top of his head. Everybody likes Buck in this kind. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Strong audience appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Aumse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WINNER TAKE ALL. (5,949 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A little different from the other Jones pictures, however, it is a good one. This is a prize fight story and will certainly please Jones fans. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Metro-Goldwyn

ALONG CAME RUTH. (5,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A great big five reel entertainment that pleased our crowd, and with "The Go-Getters" made a pleasing program. William A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

BEAUTY PRIZE. (5,759 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Splendid. One of the most satisfying pictures we have had from Miss Dana. Will please and the posters and photos will draw. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

BOY OF FLANDERS. (7,018 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Run this with a good comedy and you will have a real program. It is a little sad but wonderful story, acting and photography. Tone, good. Sunday, extra good. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers and people town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

BROKEN BARRIERS. (6,717 feet). Star, Norma Shearer. Very fine picture depicting fast life, wine, women, and song, with the inevitable crash and the moral "don't do it." Little spicy but not to offend. The best people here seemed to like it very much. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

BROKEN BARRIERS. (6,717 feet). Star cast. While picture has no special appeal and didn't do much for us it is well cast and well finished. The Metro-Goldwyn's good or bad have a tone that shows care and not cheapness. They are built for good houses. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

DON'T DOUBT YOUR HUSBAND. (5,510 feet). Star, Viola Dana. An old show and a rotten print. Did not finish the engagement. No adjustment was made by the exchange. Small town class town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

FASHION ROW. (7,300 feet). Star, Mae Murray. This picture went over big for the one night we ran it, mostly because Lincoln comes from this town. An old, but good picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This is a great picture. It should get you business. Chaney is better in this than as the Hunchback, however, it is not a special. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

MAD LOVE. Star, Pola Negri. Pola Negri has few friends here and "Mad Love" gave me an average crowd. Even if it is an old picture I had a good print. Tone, fair. Special, no. Medium audience appeal. Miners town of 2,500. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

ONE NIGHT IN ROME. (8,885 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. Not much. The title counts for naught as far as the people are concerned. Print good. Photoplay bum. Run it if you have it bought but don't boost it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Factory class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ONE NIGHT IN ROME. (8,885 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. Good program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Kreigbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

PLEASURE MAD. (7,547 feet). Star cast. This one is real to life. All who saw it had high praise for it. Good for a special. If you can get them in they will like it. Tone, very good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety-eight per cent. Factory class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Jackie's latest and it made his followers come out, even when it was trying to rain. A pleasing picture for the kiddies and some of the grownups. Have a few here that don't care for his pictures. Good appeal. Sunday, yes. Print, new. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. If you are looking for an honest to goodness clean-up get this sure. We packed 'em in two nights to audiences; pleased one hundred per cent. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

RED LILY. (6,975 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. Lay off this one, brothers. It is certainly not there. The acting is fine but the theme of the picture is rather morbid and distasteful to decent people. Would not recommend it to anyone. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, never. Poor audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

RED LILY. (6,975 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. This picture is good for a program offering only. Where Novarro is popular it will please his following. Will go better in the larger places. No tone. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, sixty-eight per cent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, regular, 15-30, special. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SILENT ACCUSER. (6 reels). Star, Peter. The Great. A really good picture, had to substitute this one for the "White Sister" but people well satisfied; in just enough reels to make it interesting without boring. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. Factory class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE. (6,300 feet). Star cast. I ran this as a program picture and drew a good business on account of it being so new and I played it ahead of K. C. and told them so. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. L. H. Griefe, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

WHITE SISTER. (10,400 feet). Star, Lillian Gish. Wonderful production. Four reels too long. Didn't go over here at all. Didn't make film rental. Catholics said it was overdrawn. Protestants panned it fearfully. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, hard to tell. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

WIFE OF THE CENTAUR. (6,586 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Will please the jazz time ladies and men. Aileen Pringle and E. Boardman play opposite Gilbert. This picture not as good as Glyn's "His Hour" with the same stars. Appeals to young people. Tone, good. Good for Sundays in big towns. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WOMEN WHO GIVE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A very good picture, better than most specials can be shown a week. Don't be afraid to advertise it. Has everything combined in this one. Comedy, pathos, and deep sea fishing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety-eight per cent. Factory class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Paramount

ALASKAN. (6,758 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Was awfully disappointed in this one. The book has it beaten a mile. Meighan doesn't belong here. Most everyone pleased, however and darn satisfied. Tone, okay. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 4,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,970 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A good program picture but no good for a special. Don't see why they don't put these stars in American stories with American atmosphere. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

BEDROOM WINDOW. (4,550 feet). Star, May McAvoy. Very good program. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-15, 20-25, 30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gloria still going at usual fast clip. Picture very pleasing. Would say a lavish, interesting, one hundred per cent program picture, but a little weak for a special. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Higher and rural class town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

BLUFF. (6 reels). Star, Agnes Ayres. My crowd will be glad when Agnes dies of old age or fat or something. Fair program. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Small town class town of 1,369. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. Good clean picture and well acted. It rather advocated divorce so perhaps would not go with some audiences, but some said fine. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. Good comedy drama. Pleased my audience and were satisfied. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes city of 12,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre (500 seats), Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. This is a dandy six reel show made into an eight reel feature. It is not immoral but deals with immoral people so that it is questionable whether it should be shown on Sunday or not but the lesson is good and it has an interesting story. Wallace Beery does some fine work in this. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Here's a picture boys, that will please your pocket book and your patrons. Betty Compson is always good and in this one she equals her great role in "The Miracle Man." A tremendously interesting plot directed by James Cruze and a cast which includes Huntley Gordon, Percy Marmont and Kathlyn Williams. Grab it. City and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. A Lubitsch production is always well above the general run and this is no exception, but somehow with Pola Negri starring we can't get them in. Ran it at a loss. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

GARDEN OF WEEDS. (6,250 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Another good one for Paramount. Just a little spicy. Rockcliffe Fellowes makes a wonderful villain, and Betty Compson does good work in the lead. Good crowd and comments. Tone only fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy-five per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. An emotional romance drama of mother love. Although the story is rather weak, it is interesting and should

Friend Kennedy Talks About Thin Slides

"Dear Van and 'Gang'—May I take just a few minutes of your valuable time to make a suggestion which I think should be given a little space in your magazine?

"It's all about these new single glass slides the producing companies have gotten up.

"The old time slide and the one used up to some time last year, had two sides. One side was emulsion and the other side was a plain glass to protect the emulsion and keep the slide from breaking.

"In a theatre where it is necessary to pull from fifty to seventy amperes, the new slides will break before they have been shown five times. No wonder, they are made up of a very thin piece of glass and the minute they are exposed to a hot light, they break in several places...

"I realize the fact that most theatres, big theatres, have done away with slides. That is quite so, but there are ten times as many little theatres that will continue to use slides and our six little theatres can be numbered among them.

"They say that slides are becoming old fashioned. It may be the case but I find that they are bigger business boosters than trailers. That is, of course, considering the expense.

"I would like for you to use a little power in showing the producers where the single slide is impractical and getting the exhibitors to put up a kick on this new idea."—R. M. Kennedy, Capitol, Odeon, Royal Theatres, Birmingham, Alabama.

Clara Bow and Monte Blue, in the Lubitsch-Warner Bros. picture, "Kiss Me Again."

please the majority. The comments I heard were favorable. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. A great picture, with the star showing her ability and talents to the fullest. Ben Lyon is the lover and all the girls will flop for him and Noah Beery in a great characterization. Dimitri Buchowetzki is the director; none better than he. The sets are beautiful, with elaborate backgrounds and lavish interiors, and the plot is full of tense situations. It's a high-brow production, good as "Men." City and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 ft.). Star, Gloria Swanson. Would recommend this one as just an average program picture, although Gloria acted her part. Don't see why they put her in a picture like this. A very weak story, and word action was forgotten in this picture. Subway scene very good; the only thing worth mentioning. Tone, okay. Doubtful for Sunday. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Mixed class town of 7,000. Edgar Delahunty, Family Theatre (300 seats), Forest City, Pennsylvania.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,867 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Nothing to it. It's a pity we have to run such trash. Paramount ruining Viola with a picture like this. All classes, town of 4,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. This is a good show in my opinion; a decided change, that's what we need. It drew the children and pleased them. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. All classes, city of 12,000. Admission 10-20, 15-25. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre (500 seats), Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

PURPLE HIGHWAY. (6,574 feet). Star, Madge Kennedy. A fair picture that will get by the average audience. No kicks on this one and no extra boosts. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. Higher and rural class, town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. This is not so much. Personally I did not care for it at all and it seemed that most of the crowd were disappointed in it. Too long, too much Valentino and too little story. Nita Naldi has no following and didn't help this picture. I have an idea this is the real reason Paramount lost the sheik. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

SILENT PARTNER. (5,866 feet) Star, Leatrice Joy. Leatrice Joy in a picture suited to her talents as an actress. A good program picture that will please average audience. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Higher and rural class, town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). Star, Richard Dix. One of the best of the so-called Famous Forty as to drawing power. It must have been title. A fair program show full of South Sea stuff. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (7,912 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. Very interesting and surely up to date. Nothing big but seemed to please. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal seventy-five per cent. Small town class, town of 1,369. Admission 10-15, 20-25, 30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa

SWAN. (5,889 feet). Star cast. The paper killed it here. People looked at it and said, "Oh, it's just another of those old foreign costume pictures. Let's not go in." Those who did go in said that the people on the screen just fooled around and fooled around and never did do anything. I didn't see the picture. The box-office receipts were light. Special, no. No audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star cast. One of the best pictures depicting the early history of the west it has been our pleasure to run. Got the money at the box-office too. You can't make a mistake in looking them over. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 5,000. Admission 25-50. C. E. Matlock, Rivoli Theatre (815 seats), Pendleton, Oregon.

TONGUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. One of Tommy's poor ones. Story contains lots of action but is unconvincing and does not ring true. Very improbable. If they don't give him some decent stories he will be a dead one. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,167 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. Everyone seemed to enjoy this feature. Kirkwood always good and this type story appeals to nearly everyone. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Where do they get all that stuff about outbidding for Gloria's services? Maybe she draws them in on "big time" but not here in the sticks, and this one is just a little "poorer" than her latest "poor" ones. No, I have no axe to grind, simply a case of glorious Gloria not pleasing and certainly not drawing. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

Ruth Dwyer, one of the prettiest and most talented girls in screen work, will soon be seen in "White Fang," the F. B. O. Special

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A good picture. The technicolor did not help much. I expected more of it. Paid too much for it. No fault of the picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners town of 2,500. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Something different due to the color work. It is not as good as the other Zane Grey pictures. Film was very dirty. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WILD BILL HICKOK. Star, Bill Hart. It seems as if this stacks right up with the best of Bill's previous productions as regards action. It also has a strong historical grounding, which lends the production dignity. This is in seven reels; a few years ago Bill might have put this same amount of action into five. The extra "atmosphere" probably is what has caused the picture to disappoint some, but I consider it very good. Village and rural class, town of 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

WILD BILL HICKOK. (6,892 feet). Star, William S. Hart. Saw this some time before I bought it, and can't understand why I signed on the dotted line, unless I was carried away by the environment. Bill's heroics and hysterics are painful to watch; the kids found a good deal to snicker at, and that's a sure indication that it didn't appeal to them. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, limited. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30, special, 15-40, 25-50. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

WILD BILL HICKOK. (6,892 feet). Star, William S. Hart. The story is interesting and one that is pleasing. Hart is very good and he has some wonderful scenes which are gripping. Plenty of action. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

WORLDLY GOODS. (6,085 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Only a fair program offering which will not cause much discussion one way or the other. Passable and that's about all. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

ZAZA. (7,076 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This is an extra good show. We heard no kicks and lots of praise. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Small town class town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

Pathe

BATTLING ORIOLES. (5 reels). This picture gave very good satisfaction. A few came to see this that do not come regularly and all were pleased. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 900. Admission 10-25-30. Charles L. Nott, Opera House (400 seats), Sutherland, Iowa.

CALL OF THE WILD. (5 reels). Star, Buck (dog). This picture went over okay, but it isn't worth much. There is too much dog in it. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Miners and farmers town of 500. Admission 10-25. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

KING OF WILD HORSES. (5 reels). Star, Rex (horse). Best buy I made in 1924. A real drawing card for me. Wish I could get a few more that would pull like it did. Tone, okay. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

Schulberg Prod.

BREATH OF SCANDAL. (6,940 feet). Star cast. This picture will please most any audience. Settings and acting fine. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SHADOWS. Star, Lon Chaney. About two years old. Print fair. Acting good. Would be considered good, two years ago. People remarked that it was different than they expected. Pleased in a way. Tone, not so good. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, regular, 15-30, special. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

Principal

MINE WITH IRON DOOR. Star cast. A very good picture which will do good business for any exhibitor anywhere. I think Harold Bell Wright is the only reason. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers and town people town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE. (7,179 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. A good war picture. Pleased all who saw it. Doesn't follow narrative very closely. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

BELOND THE BORDER. Star, Harry Carey. One of the best that he ever made and went over good here. Has plenty of good comedy in it. Several fights and everything that makes a real snappy picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

HIS DARKER SELF. (5 reels). Star cast.

ON HER WAY TO STARDOM

Joan Meredith, a baby starlet of 1925, who has been signed on a long term contract by the Chadwick Pictures' Corporation for grooming as a full-fledged screen star. With only eighteen summers to her credit, the rise of this piquant young lady, who promises to add much to the glory of her birthplace, Hot Springs, Ark., has been meteoric. Her first appearance on the screen occurred less than a year ago as a result of her having won a Los Angeles beauty contest.

Beware. The picture and story is darker than the actors. I'm glad it was short. It pleased only a few, mostly the children. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Coal miners town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo and Kopuster, Livingston, Illinois.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star, Dorothy Devore. This is a corker, as good as "Safety Last." In fact, some thought it better. Folks still gasping and wondering how it was done. Can be exploited to the limit. Little slow in the beginning but all dynamite in the last three reels. You can throw out your chest after running this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank W. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

MIAMI. (6,317 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A snappy program that was much liked here. Our patrons like snappy up to date pictures. Action by good looking young people and less heavy dramatic stuff are what we want. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

WANDERING HUSBANDS. (6 reels). Star, Lila Lee. Ran this one day to a pleased audience. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

United Artists

AMERICA. (14,000 feet). Star cast. Great picture. Tied up with schools and did fine. Advise any exhibitor to book this, and get busy and tieup with women's clubs and schools. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Pastime Theatre, Sandersville, Georgia.

THROUGH THE BACK DOOR. Star, Mary Pickford. This is an old picture but it bears up well. It went over big and the audience enjoyed it. Many good remarks were made as the audience went out. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

BOBBY VERNON
In Educational-Bobby Vernon comedies.

THROUGH THE BACK DOOR. Star, Mary Pickford. A little old but Mary always goes over. No other star seems to be able to popularize her face and little mannerisms like Mary. She pulls out the young and the old. Like all her pictures, this one is fine. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Universal

EXCITEMENT. (4,912 feet). Star, Laura LaPlante. Only fair program picture. Comedy situations went over nice. Drawing power, not so good. Print okay. Tone, okay. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Coal miners town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo and Kopuster, Livingston, Illinois.

FAMILY SECRET. (5,076 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. I don't think much of Miss Peggy as an actress and judging by remarks, my audience shares my opinion. She may be pretty but as an actress she is not there. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

FIGHTING AMERICAN. (5,251 feet). Star, Pat O'Malley. A fast moving action picture whose initial sub-title informs that the picture is for entertainment only and its story highly improbable. Raymond Hatton supplies some good comedy. Audience seemed well plased with this picture. Rural class town of 200. Admission 10-25. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

HOOK AND LADDER. (6 reels). Star, Hoot Gibson. While not a western will get by with Hoot fans and is good entertainment. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per -cent. Farmers and town people town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

HURRICANE KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. A good western but identically the same story as Tom Mix in "Just Tony" and Bill Hart in "The Narrow Trail," we're tired of this same story. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

RAMBLIN' KID. (6,395 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Very good picture with some real action. Patrons said it was the best western we ever had. Tone, fine. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers town of 500. Admission 10-25. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

SAWDUST TRAIL. (5,500 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This was a good picture. Hoot did well but he had support. Josie Sedgwick added much to the picture. Direction and story good. Showed no "chiceness." Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

SIGN OF THE CACTUS. Star, Jack Hoxie. A little better than the average Jack Hoxie picture. They never give him good stories. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

WILD PARTY. (5,024 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. Not as good as the general run of Walton's. Leave it alone. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. Farmers and town class town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

Vitagraph

BEHOLD THIS WOMAN. .(6,425 feet). Star, Irene Rich. A Blackton production much on the order of story and direction of his other pictures. Male birds poorly selected, too old. Charles Post, as lover, is better in a rough house affair. Just any old man or any old woman doesn't make a pleasing photograph to look at if miscast. Select good looking young folks. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

BELOVED BRUTE. (6,710 fet). Star, William Russell. We got by with this one all right on Saturday. The women were not strong for it, but most men liked the work of the strong man. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Low audience appeal. Small town class town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

BETWEEN FRIENDS. (6,900 feet). Star. Lou Tellegen. Would class as a fair program for some houses but didn't do much for us. Blackton's direction and selection of stories are growing very weak here. He will have to make a change if we are able to put his pictures over satisfactorily. Tone, yes. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

LET NOT MAN PUT ASUNDER. (8 reels). Star cast. Purely a society picture and not suitable for the small town exhibitor. Depicts a whirl of divorces and remarriages of which the average small town knows of or cares for little. Fair tone. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No audience appeal. Rural class town of 200. Admission 10-25. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

MAN FROM BRODNEY'S. (7,100 feet). Star, J.Warren Kerrigan. This is one of the best pictures we have played from Vitagraph, those who have played them regularly know they have good pictures and this is a top notcher. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Audience appeal, 95 per cent. Small otwn class, town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

PAMPERED YOUTH. (6,640 feet). Star cast. A real good production with only one drawback, and that is antiquated costumes. If it could have been made more modern it would have been a dandy for small towns. Average audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

REDEEMING SIN. (6,227 feet). Star Nazimova. Displeased all. More walkouts than any picture yet. Mr. Harrison, of Harrison's Reports, slipped up on this one. It was all wrong with everybody. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Pastime Theatre, Sandersville, Georgia.

A lot of you boys say "Oh, let George do it" when it comes to sending tips.

Warner Bros.

AGE OF INNOCENCE. Star, Beverly Bayne. Fair program picture. Nothing unusual to attract extra business. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

BABBITT. (8 reels). Star cast. We had read several adverse criticisms on this, but after witnessing the picture found it to be okay in every respect. Good entertainment. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

DARK SWAN. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Another good one by Warner Brothers. Didn't draw so well, but sure pleased. Fine print and reasonable rental price. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal 85 per cent. Coal miners, town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo and Kopuster, Livingston, Illinois.

Comedies

ABOUT FACE. (Educational). Star, Johnny Fox, Jr. A few laughs. A juvenile boy scout picture. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

BACK STAGE. (Pathe). "Our Gang." A mighty good "Our Gang" comedy. Don't be afraid of it. It will please them all. General class, town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit Theatre (700 seats), Union, Maine.

BLACKSMITH. (First National). Star, Buster Keaton. One of his best. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Village and rural class, town of 400. Admission 15-30, 15-25. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

BRIGHT LIGHTS. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. Here's a comedy that made 'em whoop like Indians. It's a real comedy from start to finish and Bobby surely did his stuff to perfection. Clean comedy, as is all of Bobby's, and the situations were amusing to young and old, highbrow and lowbrow. Book this one, boys, and laugh with your audience when it is shown. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

"CAVE IN SHEIK." (F. B. O.). Star, Jimmy Aubrey. Worse than nothing. People went out of their way to tell me how rotten it was. No tone. Sunday, no, nor any other day. No audience appeal. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25. regular, 15-30 special. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

DRIVING FOOL. (Fox). One of Fox's supposed to be funny comics. It has quite a few laughs but nothing else. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

EASTER BONNETS. (Educational). A good comedy, but too high class for our patrons. Fair audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

EAST OF THE WATER PLUG. (Pathe). Great. If your patrons like good comedies give them this one. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

RENO OR BUST. (Educational). Very poor indeed. No one laughed at this one. No audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

ROUGHEST AFRICA. (Pathe). Star, Stan Laurel. A good two-reel comedy that seemed to go over nicely. Good audience appeal. Neighborhood class, town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SPRING OF 1964. (Universal). Star, Hal Roach. A bit below the average of these one-reelers. Village and rural class, town of 400. Admission 15-30, 15-25. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

SUNDOWN LIMITED. (Pathe). "Our Gang." This comedy will make the old folks think of their kid days. It is a scream. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

WHEN NIGHTS WERE COLD. (Metro-Goldwyn). Star, Stan Laurel. Only average. I like Stan. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Village and rural class, town of 400. Admission 15-25, 30-15. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

Serials

EAGLE'S TALONS. (Universal). No complaint on the serial except that it failed to draw. Lost money every night. Serials seem to be through here. Something wrong. Tone okay. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Star cast. This serial did a great business for us. It pleased all who followed it. Started rather slow but it soon livened up. Coal miners, town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo and Kopuster, Livingston, Illinois.

RIDDLE RIDER. (Universal). Star, William Desmond. Each chapter is better than the last. Eileen Sedgwick is wonderful. She is better than a great many of our western stars. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

TEN SCARS MAKE A MAN. (Pathe). Star, Aileen Ray. This is terrible. Male star slow and clumsy. Girls do nothing but pose. In twelve years of business this is the worst serial (so called) I have ever run. Attendance dropped bad every episode. Patrons shake their heads after seeing this. Take a tip, friends, and lay off this lemon. Tone, none. Sunday, no. No audience appeal. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Short Subjects

DESERT SHEIK. (Pathe). A fine cartoon subject as one could ask for; we find them all good. Tone good. Audience appeal good. General class, town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. M. Prescott, Prescott Circuit Theatre (700 seats), Union, Maine.

GO-GETTERS, CHAPTER 9. (F. B. O.). Star, Alberta Vaughn. "Go-Getters" are getting them going and that's what counts in this business. They pull the young people. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal eighty per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25 regular, 15-30 special. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

PATHE NEWS 15. (Pathe). Consistently good. News reel always interesting. General class, town of 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit Theatre (700 seats), Union Maine.

TOILERS OF THE EQUATOR. (Fox). A bit below the average of these one-reelers. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Village and rural class, town of 400. Admission 15-25, 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

Independents

ACE OF THE LAW. (State Right). Star, Bill Patton. A very ordinary western production that drew average business but brought no favorable comments. Special, no. Average audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

DO IT NOW. (State Right). William Fairbanks. A fair little picture; better than some of this kind. Will not last more than two days in any house. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy per cent. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

EARLY BIRD. (C. C. Burr). (7,000 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. A great comedy feature. One of Hines' best. Should please as a program picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

FIGHTING HEART. (State Right). Star, Frank Merrill. Here's a dandy little picture, full of action and introducing a new star on the style of Dick Talmadge. The action is good, picture well directed and the audience is kept keenly interested up to a satisfactory climax. Great bet for Saturday. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal eighty per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

FIGHTING IN FRANCE. (U. S. War Film). Heavy advertising packed 'em in. Did not come up to the people's expectations, so don't encourage them too much. No story, just scenery. Sunday, no. Special, no. Coal miners, town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo and Kopuster, Livingston, Illinois.

MIDNIGHT EXPRESS. (Columbia). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Brothers, here is a safe bet for nearly any house. Book it and boost it and your patrons will thank you for giving them something worth while. It draws like a mustard plaster. More power to the independents. If the other companies had it they would want a first mortgage on your theatre. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25 regular, 15-30 special. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

RAINBOW RANGERS. (Arrow). Star, Pete Morrison. Good comedy western that will please everyone and much better than the ordinary program picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

Moe Mark cuts himself a piece of cake. The president and general manager of the Mark Strand theatres posed with the knife during the eleventh anniversary week at the Mark Strand, Broadway and Forty-Seventh street. Joe Plunkett, managing director just six years, is shown with hands apart for his chunk of the birthday cake, and Carl Edouarde, musical conductor for eleven years, stands solemnly in the foreground. Atop the cake is Mlle. Klemova, premiere danseuse of the ballet corps.

Baltimore Critics Enthuse Over Miss Gish in "Romola"

"ROMOLA," starring Lillian Gish, has proved popular in Baltimore where this spectacular production opened last week at the Lyceum for an engagement at advanced prices.

"If there is one director today," said the Baltimore Evening Sun, "who understands, to an almost ravishing degree, the creation of a genuinely 'moving' picture, that director is Henry King. In his latest production, 'Romola,' he has composed a steady succession of scenes that makes a visit to the lyceum, where this picture opened an engagement last evening, a veritable exposition of the pictorial beauties possible, but so seldom seen, upon the silver sheet of the present day. It was this same Henry King who, without warning, went abroad with sensitive camera and fragile Lillian Gish and brought back the superbly beautiful 'The White Sister.' 'Romola' is the only picture to cross our vision worthy of compare with this former production, and there are moments when the current attraction uncorks a brand of beauty that dims somewhat the brightest lights of the initial King-Gish collaboration.

"Lillian Gish's appearance in a film play," writes Norman Clark in the Baltimore News, "is always an event to me, as in my opinion she is far and away one of the best actresses on the screen. And now she comes in 'Romola,' based on George Eliot's famous novel of life in Florence during the Italian Renaissance. In 'Romola' you will find drama and beauty and, above all—the exquisite Lillian Gish."

"This week's movies are bigger, better and brighter," Robert Garland stated in the Baltimore American, "Well, then, most of them are. 'Romola,' which brings Lillian Gish to the New Lyceum, is certainly bigger and better. 'Romola' is a touching story, as every reader of George Eliot knows. And let me add that Lillian Gish, as Romola, is more beautiful than ever. Dorothy Gish, as the simple country girl whose foot has a habit of going to sleep, is alive, human, lovable. You'll enjoy sister Dorothy. And you'll enjoy the energetic villain played energetically by William Powell. 'Romola' is a beautiful and faithful transcription of a classic tale."

Completing "Keep Smiling"

Spectacular Water Scenes to Conclude Camera Work on Monty Banks Picture for Associated Exhibitors

The Monty Banks producing unit starts on the last lap of its production schedule for "Keep Smiling," the first of a series of feature-comedies that Monty Banks will make this year for release by Associated Exhibitors.

"Keep Smiling" is based upon an original script written and "gagged" by Monty Banks and his staff.

With the completion of all interior camera activity at the Cecil DeMille Studios, Culver City, last week, the Banks' company have shifted to San Diego. There they will establish headquarters while the concluding scenes for "Keep Smiling" are being filmed aboard speed boats in and around Los Angeles harbor. This water sequence is expected to prove far more exciting than anything ever attempted before in a comedy-drama.

Monty Banks, Anne Cornwall, Robert Edeson, David Torrence and Stanhope Wheatcroft head the splendid east engaged for the production, which also includes such prominent players as Martha Franklin, Sid Crossley, Glen Cavender, Ruth Holly and Mrs. Tom Forman.

Verschleiser's Program

Ben Verschleiser has launched one of the most extensive programs of any of the independent producers for the current season. Production is now well under way on "The Love Gamble," first of a series of six feature pictures for Banner Productions to be distributed by the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation.

According to George Davis and Sam Briskin, president and treasurer respectively of the Banner Productions, who made a special trip to the West Coast to consummate the deal with Verschleiser, all of their productions will henceforth be made in Hollywood. Over $1,000,000 will be spent during the coming year by this releasing organization in the independent market.

Hickey in Charge at Boston

George A. Hickey, well known in Middle West Film circles as District Manager of Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation in the Kansas City territory, has been promoted to the Boston territory. In New England Mr. Hickey succeeds E. A. Golden, who is retiring from the Metro-Goldwyn organization.

"His Supreme Moment" Scores As Big Box-office Smash

FIRST NATIONAL'S new Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice production, "His Supreme Moment," from May Edginton's novel, "World Without End," had its pre-release showing last week at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York. The business which it did for the week and the exceptional reviews accorded it, prove that this production is going to rank right along with the previous Goldwyn-Fitzmaurice production, "A Thief in Paradise," as a box-office attraction. It has all the elements that make for popularity in story, cast and production.

It will be released on May 3, and during that week will be played by many important first run theatres throughout the country.

Joseph Plunkett selected "His Supreme Moment" out of a number of available attractions as the one especially adapted to be the feature picture for the anniversary week program of the Mark Strand Theatre. The big receipts proved the correctness of his judgment.

Not only did the story meet with the approval of his patrons, but the remarkably fine acting of Blanche Sweet and Ronald Colman scored a hit of unusual proportion —with the newspaper and trade reviewers as well as with the public.

The color photography introduced in two sequences, showing the action on the stage of a musical comedy, was a novelty that intrigued interest and satisfied the eye with its visual beauty. Beauty of scene, setting and photography mark "His Supreme Moment" throughout its entire action.

"Oz" Held Over

The Chadwick picture, "The Wizard of Oz," featuring Larry Semon, was continued for a second week at the Colony Theatre, New York City, because of exceptional business.

"Zander's" Premiere

Marion Davies to Attend It Next Sunday at Capitol Theatre

The premiere of Marion Davies in the new Cosmopolitan Production, "Zander the Great," will take place on Sunday, May 3, at the Capitol Theatre, New York. This engagement is one of the most important ever held at the Broadway theatre, as it represents the first time, in recent years, that a Marion Davies picture has had its initial showing in New York at popular prices.

The premiere will be attended by Miss Davies, who has made a special trip from California to be present at the opening. It represents the first time that she has attended a New York premiere of her productions since "Yolanda" was presented, at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, more than a year ago. Miss Davies' visit will be brief, as she begins work at the Metro-Goldwyn studio, on the West Coast, the latter part of May in her next production, "The Merry Wives of Gotham."

F. B. O. Changes Titles

New Names Picked for Three Important Productions

With an eye ever on the box-office, the officials of Film Booking Offices have recently changed the titles of three F. B. O. productions. The pictures which have undergone a change of name follow:

"The Woman Accused" is the new title selected for the Associated Arts Corporation production of Elizabeth Cooper's famous novel, "Drusilla With a Million." Mary Carr, Priscilla Bonner and Kenneth Harlan are features, and F. Harmon Weight directed.

"Smooth as Satin" was formerly known as "The Chatterbox," an F. B. O. production based on the famous stage play by Bayard Veiller. Evelyn Brent stars in this play which concerns a young lady Raffles who gives herself away by incessantly chattering to herself when on a "job."

"Three Bases East" is the intriguing title of Episode No. 8 of F. B. O.'s new series by H. C. Witwer, "The Pacemakers." This episode was formerly called "April's Fools." Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara are co-starred in this series, with Al Cooke, Kit Guard and Stanley Taylor prominent in support.

Pauline Garon Signs

Columbia Obtains Her to Play Opposite William Fairbanks

Harry Cohn has signed the well-known star, Pauline Garon, to play opposite William Fairbanks in the first of his action stories of the Perfection series. Miss Garon is very well known to exhibitors, playing independent pictures. Her playing with Fairbanks will without a doubt do much to popularize this action star's first picture in the new series of six which he will head this season.

It is further announced that William Fairbanks will make no more western pictures. He came to the Columbia forces last year and became so popular with exhibitors in the eight Perfection Pictures, that Columbia signed him for a long time contract after he had conclusively proven that he was a straight actor of no mean capabilities. Action is the forte of Mr. Fairbanks and as such he will continue, but in the parts of everyday life, and no longer in the chaps and other furnishings of the two-gun man.

Crandall Theatres Handle Chronicles From Another Very Successful Angle

(NOTE—This contribution from Washington offers another angle for the handling of the Chronicles of America series. We give it space because we believe that properly handled this series can do any theatre—and the cause of pictures in general, immeasurable good. Only the larger cities have Yale Clubs to look to for cooperation, but Yale graduates can be found everywhere and any University man will be glad to cooperate in such a movement. We have stressed Mrs. Locher's plea for the uncut version because we believe that many managers have ruined their chances of success by cutting to fit a program hole. As a concrete example, this writer saw, on two successive evenings, one of these features. One version had been cut to eight minutes and the result was merely a succession of historical scenes with the human interest left out. It was tiresome. Naturally that house gained no credit from the film. To get your money out of the Chronicles you must play them "as is" and offer them with praise instead of an apology.—E. W. S.)

By HARRIET HAWLEY LOCHER,

Director of Public Service and Educational Department, Crandall Theatres, Washington, D. C.

THE account given by Mr. Rice, Manager of the Majestic Theatre, Pueblo, Colorado, of his handling of the Chronicles of America series was of special interest to me because we are at the present time engaged in showing the series of fifteen pictures in Washington, D. C. As ours is an entirely different angle, I think it may be of interest and possibly from it others may derive some workable suggestions.

The Chronicles are being presented under the direction of the Crandall Theatres' Public Service and Educational Department. Mr. Crandall established this department in connection with his theatres in June 1922, its purpose being to develop the usefulness and educational value of his neighborhood theatres.

Has Functioned Well

During the three years of its existence the department has been cooperating with the public schools, through the free use of our neighborhood theatres as class rooms for visual instruction.

Americanization classes for the foreign born are running weekly in the projection room of our down town Metropolitan Theatre. Specially selected and edited programs for children have been successfully demonstrated at our Tivoli theatre. This work has won the confidence of the public so that our plans for showing the Yale Chronicles of America was a guarantee of success.

A Pioneer Series

I look upon these photoplays as the vanguard of big things coming in the future. I do not agree with Mr. Rice that "the titles are a weak point." There should be no effort to camouflage these pictures. Their strength lies in what they stand for. They are the pioneers in opening the way for the industry to take its part in this new field which is bound to hold its place in the motion picture world. Those who have given attention to the work of "public service" realize there is a big field yet untouched and those who have the vision and courage to take up this work are bound to be ahead of the others.

I would very much deplore any exhibitor's cutting these pictures in order to fit them to their usual program. If they are to be shortened for theatrical use it should be done in the studios of the Yale University Press. They must either stand for what they are, or they are useless. There is no half way field for them. The dramatic events in the making of our country, equal any fiction ever put upon the screen and ways and means must be found to get these pictures out to the public because of their usefulness in molding American citizenship.

Yale Clubs Help

Wherever there is a Yale Club you have the background for presenting the Yale Chronicles of America. Yale men are loyal to their alma mater and you will always find them proud to stand as sponsors. The Daughters of the American Revolution are especially interested in promoting American history and American ideals, and you will rarely meet with a refusal from them to stand as sponsors.

Our plan was to show the entire series chronologically showing two subjects on each program with no other films. In booking however we were not able to show them chronologically; I want to emphasize, the importance of so doing, as those interested in these pictures want to see them in their proper sequence. We showed them at the Ambassador, one of our finest neighborhood theatres, with a seating capacity of nearly 1,500, Tuesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock from March 10 to April 28th. Doors open at 3:30. We sold what we called student tickets at $2.00 for the course of eight programs, with no single tickets on sale until the opening day. Single admissions, adults 50 cents and children 25 cents. On the day of opening we were close to $1,200 on the advance sale of series tickets.

Went Over Big

Washington has never had a more representative audience for any kind of entertainment, even Grand Opera. They have been coming regularly every Tuesday, in fact, the showings have become real functions. Several of the private schools attend in large groups. The applause is spontaneous and frequent. We are receiving the highest commendation for showing these pictures in this way, with constant publicity coming to us, not alone from the press but from many other sources.

The Chronicles must necessarily be handled differently from other pictures; but, their strength lies in this very difference. With our opening program we had Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, a prominent member of the Yale Club of Washington to open the series with a brief resume of the ideals of the Yale University Press.

These pictures offer great opportunity for special exploitation with organizations based upon the various periods. On April 14th when we are showing "Columbus" we have with us the Sons of the American Revolution who are promoting the observance April 19th of the 150th anniversary of the Battle of Lexington. For this special occasion we are repeating "The Eve of the Revolution" covering that particular period of history. Mr. Selden M. Ely, prominent in the Sons of the American Revolution will give a sort foreward to the presentation of the picture while members of the organization will act as a reception committee in the lobby.

ONE OF GEORGE J. SCHADE'S BUSINESS BUILDING STANDS

This is in front of the Citizens' Bank of Sandusky, showing for Frivolous Sal and The Only Woman, but the Ohio hustler has arranged for permanent displays on other important buildings. The owners like the attention value of the posters.

Helps the Papers

Edgar Hart, of the Opera House, Augusta, Maine, has found another new one. This is purely a good-will stunt, but it packs a powerful wallop. He offers ten double passes for the ten best news stories used by the local paper during the period of one week. The stories are to be addressed to the Contest Editor, be fully verified, and must carry the name and address of the sender. The newspaper decides upon the news value of the stories.

It not only brings interest, but it gives the paper a lot of good tips, which the paper very naturally appreciates. This beats the classified ad scheme as a good-will getter, and it certainly is not going to hurt Edgar with the Kenebeck Journal.

Noonday Matinee New Development

Lots of years ago Ezra Rhodes, who used to operate, if we remember, in South Bend, Ind., developed the idea of a noonday passout check. You could drop into his house during the noon hour, and if you liked the show get a return check and see the rest of it in the evening. He had a "downtown" house and figured that those who came back would bring their friends with them.

The idea seems to have been dropped, though it is still valuable, but C. W. Diebel, of the Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, comes to the fore with a variant. Prices have gone up since the Rhodes return-check days, so he has instituted a special ten cent show to run from 11 to 1. This is run through twice and consists of a news reel, a two reel comedy and a two-part serial.

It was the serial, The Great Circus Mystery, that gave him the idea. He has a downtown house and he wanted to put the serial over. He sold three large department stores and a number of manufacturing plants on the idea that their employees would be better off in the Liberty than on the streets.

The result was that the Saturday pay envelope of a score or more concerns contained a complimentary ticket to the first showing of The Great Circus Mystery, and most of these are used.

A time table is posted and strictly adhered to, so that the noonday shopper can get lunch first and then see the serial, or see the comedy and then have lunch, or switch for two days and see the entire show, or bring his lunch and get it all at one sitting.

It's a great idea, for serials or anything else in short form, and the extra advertising is all velvet, especially if you run a trailer for your current feature.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

With "I Want My Man," featuring Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon, there was room for a twenty-minute comedy, the Topical Review, and five stage presentations. This brought the show up to two hours and seven minutes, of which time the feature photoplay required one hour and eight minutes. The Review was eight minutes long, and the musical incidents took up thirty-one minutes. The comedy used was Mack Sennett's "Remember When," with Harry Langdon.

The overture at each of the four deluxe performances of the day was "Masaniello" (Auber), played for the first time at this theatre. Lights for this were as follows: One green Mestrum flood of 160 amperes from the dome hitting the hedge row in front of the musicians; one steel blue Mestrum flood from the dome on the orchestra; color blend spots reflecting on the blossom trees in the transparent windows at either side of the stage; green foots large stage, blue borders large stage. Gold draw curtains closed over the production stage and lighted by two arch spots of moonlight blue and two of orange.

Redferne Hollinshead, Canadian tenor, sang "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life," from Victor Herbert's "The Fortune Teller," appearing on the apron of the large stage. He was under the amber spot from the dome. Other lights included: Two purple Mestrum floods on orchestra from the booth; large stage in purple; antique gold draw curtains over small stage lighted by arch spots of moonlight blue and orange.

Madeline MacGuigan, violinist, appeared in a presentation with the Duo Art Reproducing Piano. Black cyclorama was used as a back drop, with the piano to the left. A floor lamp, wicker chairs and settee were the properties used. Two steel blue overhead spots were focused on the keyboard of the piano; lemon bridge lights used in spotting the artists; foots and borders orange. Two selections were used, the first being Fritz Kreisler's "Caprice Viennois" and the second "Herji Kati," by Hubay. The piano played the accompaniment for both selections, the incident running eight minutes.

Following the Topical Review came Estelle Carey, referred to as Brooklyn's favorite soprano. She sang on the apron of the large stage, her number being "Sweetheart of Mine," by Walker. The beaded silver draw curtains were closed over the production stage, lighted by the same arch spots as above. A light amber spot picked out the singer, from the dome. In the transparent windows at either side the blossom trees were lighted the same as for the overture. The booth had two medium blue floods on the orchestra.

A Neapolitan Episode preceded the feature picture, being a typical Italian presentation. For this one of the transparent windows had been taken out and set center stage, masked in by gold draw curtains to form a back drop. There were two metaline Venetian columns. Strings of lanterns gave a carnival effect. The opening showed members of the ballet in various poses, as baritone came on and sang "Carmela." Then the dancers did Tarantela, followed by a soprano in Toselli's "Serenade." The incident came to a close with "Caruli," by baritone and soprano, assisted by ballet. Seven minutes for this presentation. Large stage was in blue, light blue Mestrum flood on orchestra from booth.

A FASHION SHOW THAT BROUGHT EXTRA ADVERTISING AND NO EXPENSE BILLS

A store in Crawfordsville, Ind., supplied the Strand Theatre with ten models, each with three changes, a soloist and a dancing team, gave newspaper advertising and a specially decorated window and then thanked the house for the business it got from the hook-in to Fifth Avenue Models. Only eight of the models are shown; perhaps the others are changing. Wait a minute and see if they come on.

HAWKING THE SEA HAWK IN PHILADELPHIA THEATRES

Made Ton of Coal a Meighan Exploit

Ten blocks of coal, each weighing about 200 pounds, were lettered and placed on prominent street corners to advertise Coming Through at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn. No one is reported to have gotten away with these advertisements, though perhaps a different story might have been told last fall.

C. B. Stiff tied up all of the local coal dealers on this picture of coal, and all of them gave him a window display, one of the best including considerable toy train trackage on which were placed loaded coal cars running through the papier mache tunnels sold by the toy dealers. The display was not animated because the window was too shallow, but it offers a suggestion to others as to how the ever productive toy train can be worked into a miniature.

Upside Down Got Topside Figures

Perhaps it isn't new, but an upside down campaign helped put over The Last Laugh at the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

Charles Lowenberg, out of Universal's Cincinnati office, helped with the campaign, and his biggest noise was a 24-sheet posted upside down except for the dating strips. A dozen people with stiff necks came in to tell John Schwalm that the poster was not on the job.

But they all had read the bill. That was the important part.

To help along ten one inch singles were scattered through the paper upside down, and if the circus had come along and posted that paper head down it would have run for The Last Laugh, too. You can't do it too often, but now and then it works strong.

Another good stunt was getting some extra sheets from the local paper. Hamilton does not bring out an extra every half hour, but the Bulletin will run off a special sheet which is posted in store windows if something big happens after the paper is off the press. It has a standard form 22 by 16 inches with a special heading, and when the populace see these they know that something has happened since the paper was run off.

Lowenberg got fifty of these from the paper, printed them up with a wire from Carl Laemmle and shot them into the stores half an hour after the edition was out, and got a wonderful circulation.

It got a very nice business for very little money.

Insurance Policy Big Help to Allan

Jack Allan, of the Capitol Theatre, Kitchener, Ont., pulled up the insurance stunt to put over Forty Winks, which is going under its original title of Lord Chumley in Canada.

The Ontario Equitable Life and Accident Insurance Company, of Waterloo, Ont., gave him a policy insuring "Every man, woman and child against death by laughter during the showing of Lord Chumley" at the house on the dates mentioned.

They supplied a regulation policy without charge and also paid for 5,000 special four-page heralds. The stunt worked so well that it is being extended to other houses on the Paramount Canadian chain. The insurance was in the sum of $1,000, but contained a proviso that death must occur during the performance.

Mr. Allan had a 4 by 6 foot enlargement made for the lobby and then laid off the original for a window show in a store, with an ample exhibit of stills and lettered cards.

He handled the idea to get the most out of it, and as the stunt was new it brought a limit business to the house, which not only means an immediate profit but additional business on other pictures from those who have had their interest revived. They enjoyed this picture, so they come again.

Mr. Allan seems to be the first to use the stunt on Forty Winks, and his handling will need a lot of beating.

Got a Page

Hooking in to The Tornado, the Alhambra Theatre, Shelbyville, Ind., got eight local firms to come in on a co-op page. The best hook in is with an insurance concern which insures "everything but tomorrow." This is much better than the advice to prepare for the Tornado by stocking up with canned goods. That might help some poor family over in the next county more than the original purchaser.

Gets Seven Widths from a Single Cut

Vincent Trotta, of the Art Department of Famous Players-Lasky, had an interesting display in the last issue of The Close Up, showing numerous uses possible with a single full page cut supplied on Mme. Sans Gene.

As the Close-Up is the house organ of the Theatres Department and does not go to managers in general, the Theatres Department has been good enough to loan the cut that others may benefit from the idea: an idea, by the way, which this department has been advocating for the past dozen years.

This is not a trick cut, specially designed to be elastic. Most, if not all, cuts supplied in mat form by Paramount and most of the other companies can be worked over to suit a manager's immediate demands. No cut MUST be used in the precise form in which it is sent out. Even this cut is capable of many other adaptations. For example, the staircase may be cut to form not only the two column advertisement, but to make into a three or four. The combinations are endless. Mr. Trotta has merely sought to be suggestive, not exhaustive.

Most of the lettering is taken from this or other mats better sized to the width used.

In spite of its material, the plan book cut is as elastic as a rubber band, and the manager who feels that he must use it or leave it is losing the real help that such a department seeks to give. It does not matter whether you have a routing machine or a hacksaw and a file. You can change any good press book cut to suit your personal needs, and that with less trouble than many managers realize.

Study this carefully and let the idea sink in. It is worth a lot of money to you.

Gilded Lobby

E. E. Collins used a rough surfaceed gold paper for his one and three sheets on The Golden Bed in the lobby of the Queen Theatre, Galveston, and even the banner over the box office was of the same material, all lettered in a strong black. It made a very striking display because it was so far removed from the usual.

MAKING A PLAN BOOK CUT ON SANS GENE FIT ALL SPACES FROM ONE TO SEVEN COLUMNS

Vincent Trotta, of the Art Department of Famous Players-Lasky, offers a set of displays to show how a single full page cut may be sliced to any width. He might have added that it can be cut to almost any length within reason. This is not a trick cut. He plans to do the same thing with other plan book cuts. This cut is from The Close Up, the organ of the Theatres Department.

Pantheon Spaces Show Good Ideas

The pressman of the Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, sends in a batch of his work for criticism, but he forgets to sign his name, so we cannot give him personal credit for a very good collection of layouts, though they are all pretty much the same as to proportion. A square advertisement would be a real novelty for almost any Toledo picture house. This seems to be because most plan book cuts run to the three column width and they use these, so drop the extra space down instead of using a little white side space now and then. We have selected two examples for reproduction as being generally typical. Most of them are more along the lines of the first cut, for Her Husband's Secret, though this one uses a nice adaptation of the cross word to get initial attention. It is typical,

The other example might be called the portrait style and is seen at its best in this layout on Love's Wilderness. This is used not more often that once in about ten weeks, and always when there is a photograph of sufficient merit to make it worth while to take a chance. Just in passing it might be noted that the head of Miss Griffith is over to the left and not in the exact centre of the space. It's a small matter, but it makes this really artistic instead of just a picture. Distributing the black ground on both sides of the head would have lessened the value of the cut fully fifty per cent. It's in these little things that the Pantheon examples show up. lettered "Ladies beware of this love thief" just below, though very little hand lettering is used beyond the titles. A second space on the same title gives only a line drawing of the same players in a kiss with plenty of type talk to put over the sensational items. For New Toys he plays up the plan book idea by listing five titles and as many different leading women and winding up with the suggestion that you see Barthelmess make love to his real-life wife in this production. But in speaking of two general models of layouts it must not be supposed that there are two types rigidly followed. In some twenty odd examples no two are exactly alike. The cut placement is never the same, the type is set in differently, and only the general proportion remains the same. But the ads are further alike in that he uses plenty of well-considered talk, well set, and hand lettering is mostly absent. Now and then he knows when to stop talking, as when he puts over Milton Sills in As Man Desires with a large "Need we say more?" across the top of the space. Then comes a curtain design with the head of Sills set in and a reverse panel at the bottom for title, star and Viola Dana. This is the single instance of all hand lettering, and one of the least successful of the series other than the idea of playing largely on Sills' personality. The set offers a very good average, better than usual, but it would take several pages to get them all in.

done with the cut; so far as this space is concerned, and the cut has come up very nicely. The layout is simple, yet is has real strength and sells better than would a great deal more talk and a less appealing cut. Maloney knew this, so he gave the cut all the chance it needed, but the cut would not have been as good without the routing. Set against a tint ground it would have lost most of its strength. From all angeles it is very well done.

Plan Book Talk is Source of Fillers

In this 145 by 3 from the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee,' the press book seems to have supplied most of the material. About the only straight house stuff is found in the two panels which are very neatly attached the plan book cut. It looks like a whole design, but the edges of the cut have been trimmed and the rule work set close against the edge, linking the smaller features to the title. The comedy is nicely hooked to the main title with "This is funny, too." That's no real argument and yet it exercises a powerful suggestion of an all comedy bill. The press book copy is all well done, and the Merrill has picked about the best of it, but we do not like the display it is given. The same text in smaller type, would let in some white space and give both cut and copy a better chance. Here it seems to have been used to keep the cut from rattling around in its space. Setting in a ten point italic would have made them smaller, but they would have been easier to read and the space would have been more inviting with the white background. Here even the breaks between the banks have been stuffed with dash rules, as though the printer feared to leave any white space. And upper and lower for that line just below the signature would have helped. But you naturally would expect all caps from a compositor who is so alarmed at the idea of any white space showing. It is a nice utilization of the cut. Putting it to one side or the other would not have worked as well.

Takes Extra Space for a Double Run

Putting Charley's Aunt into both the Century and Parkway Theatres, Baltimore, gave more than double the space for the announcement, since this five thirteens is more than double the usual house allotments. Doubling up is a good thing for this attraction where it can be done because the double showing in itself suggests something out of the ordinary. The double space permits a big smash to be made, and here the advertisement dominates the theatrical section. It is rather a choppy layout, in which a selling line appears to have been dumped in wherever opportunity offered without regard for an orderly layout, but in a way this somewhat hysterical selling will help along. Most of the lines are good and you are almost certain to read one or two, and it does not much matter which you read. As a matter of fact the play itself does not require much selling. It has been sold for more than a third of a century and the only thing to be stressed is the fact that you have it, though you need to tell that in the film the ability to move around gives it even more of an appeal. A better use of the space would have been to stress the fact that it could be shown for only one week. That should have been given all of the space below the title and above the smaller cut. Next to the fact of the engagement, it is the most important point, and could have been played up with profit.

Lovett Spaces Are Pretty Much Alike

About every three or four months J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal Theatre, Providence, R. I., sends in a batch of his displays. Some years ago we gave considerable space to his experiments, for he was working out a scheme for a weekly program in a comparatively small space. But in the past couple of years he has practically standardized his weekly announcement and one example will give the general idea. This does not mean that Mr. Lovett uses one set form. No one knows better than he that variety is essential, and he never runs two spaces alike, but he has hit upon a general display idea as suggested in this published example, and he gets his variation from the placement of the cut material. The one shown gives cuts in the upper left and lower right. Sometimes he has his cuts in the upper right and lower left, again he may have a larger figure cut either right or left, or a single cut in any one of the four corners. Sometimes he has to double up his column, particularly when he uses one corner cut, when one title goes on the side with the cut and the other three run in the clearer space, but generally he works to get this general type effect, and we have selected this cut because of a couple of hundred experiments he has sent in during the past five or six years this seems to offer the best results. All of the spaces are three cloumns wide, but this is the wide column instead of the modern 12 em width, so he gets six and a half inches. The spaces are all five inches deep, and this four fives gives him ample room in which to display four titles, which form his weekly change. It might be explained that Mr. Lovett, while he has Providence for a post office address is virtually in a small town, for his section is not in Providence proper, but in Olneyville, which is practically a town in itself, with its own page in the Providence Sunday papers. Mr. Lovett has to come in only on the Sunday issue. The rest of his drive is done through a nice house program with an occasional throwaway. If you live in a town with only a weekly paper, you should be interested in this display, for Mr. Lovett has arrived at this form only after innumerable experiments and you can profit by the results of his work. He virtually handles five titles since his Wednesday-Thursday offering is a double feature, and we do not think you can get a better display than this in twenty inches. If you are interested, we think that Mr. Lovett will be glad to send you a couple of samples if you will supply the return envelope.

A Universal Release

MR. LOVETT'S DISPLAY

Had Candy Bed for Golden One

Howard Waugh hit several new notes in his campaign for The Golden Bed at Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis. Candy hook-ups have been common on this title, but Waugh persuaded a local concern to make a candy bed for show window display to tie into the candy effects in the picture, the bed later being presented to a store patron.

Another idea was placing a toy brass bedstead in the foyer where the patrons simply had to see it, though it was not even knee high to the average visitor.

His lobby display was a cutout from the 24-sheet; rather too much for some lobbies, but just about right for the Palace's spacious standout parlor.

Waugh has recently developed a permanent idea. He has boards made about one sheet size. The top portion is painted with the usual data as to house and address with "Next week." In the other half of the space is a special half sheet, giving a one sheet effect at half sheet cost. We gather that the idea is to hold these for specials and put them out about widweek.

THE FIRST RUN

PRESENTATIONS – PROLOGUES – MUSIC

Edited by Colby Harriman

Your Idea and Ours—

THE enthusiastic response given this department by exhibitors throughout the United States and in other countries is most gratifying.

The success of such an undertaking can only be ascertained through direct contact with the men who are in the field. The prime factor has been to render The First Run as a source of authoritative and necessary information, emphasizing the constant interchange of ideas rather than having it appear as a medium of instruction.

Of greatest importance is not the editor's comment alone, but the reaction in the form of suggestions and advice given by those exhibitors and producers who are actively engaged in production work. In reviewing the work of the past few weeks we have been able to ascertain those elements which constitute a benefit to our readers. We have observed that the discussion of personalities, editorial comment, etc., proved of great interest, but the demand for the working plans of the various Moving Picture World Presentations, the interest in the various reviews of what the other producer is doing together with an increasing number of queries relative to production work, etc., indicates which way the wind blows.

It is our idea that this department should serve as a clearing house in production matters, therefore it is most essential that all producers contribute to it. The stages of your theatres are laboratories out of which good ideas are evolved, and these ideas may be the very things desired by a producer in a metropolitan theatre or by one in a smaller town. In other words, The First Run should be the medium through which producers the world over may express themselves in a manner to render a real service to their fellow producers as well as to themselves. This is a new field of endeavor in the theatre, and those who are actually engaged in production work can, because of their daily and practical contact with production problems assist the other producer who may be facing the stone wall which you have already surmounted. This is not only true co-operation, but enables this department to attain the goal it has set.

Big Sets on Small Stages—

CREATING an effect of space on a small stage may be called a "keyhole" trick.

In a certain theatre in New York City where the stage is only 18 ft. by 25 ft. a resourceful producer has solved the problem working on the theory that a hall bedroom looks larger if you peep into it through a keyhole, and by similarly tricking the eye the effect of boundless space can be accomplished within a small stage area. In one production this producer tried the illusion of an English park by silhouetting the trees around the proscenium and placing on the back drop a row of tiny houses drawn in reduced perspective as may be seen in English prints or in many of the canvasses of Zuloaga. In a rural setting depicting a farmyard he placed a set house against the proscenium on one side and a tree on the other, thereby emphasizing the small size of the opening through which the audience was looking. A shed, fence and benches were placed as far forward as possible, all constructed smaller than usual yet not so reduced that they were out of proportion to the players. They were all painted in a subdued grey, no bright colors or details detracting the eye, which was thus drawn irresistibly past them by the strong lights thrown on the cyclorama. The cyc was spattered or stippled in soft shades of gray and tan. The separate spots did not show but blended with a vibrating effect which was characteristic of air seen over distant prairies.

To illustrate further the extent of this trickery the gate which stood ajar, was a foot wider than the opening it was supposed to fit. The difficulties usually encountered make the problems more interesting, and the sense of victory is felt when they have been overcome and the effects achieved. All designs for small stages must be simple, but that does not mean that the work of designing them is correspondingly simple. Because one cannot use much or many of anything, what is used must be perfectly placed. Like the Japanese this art is that of elimination.

Lawton Discusses Short Subject Music—

"Though the importance of appropriate music for the feature picture is generally realized both in theory and practice, the lesser film subjects such as cartoon subjects, news, etc., are neglected by the leaders."

This is the opinion of S. W. Lawton, general musical director of the Colony Theatre, New York, and also of the Keith-Albee and Moss Circuit.

"These subjects are lesser only in length; as entertainment they are as important as that of the feature picture, deserving of a specially designed musical accompaniment. Some leaders do not play for these particular subjects, or when they do, present noisy, popular music which distracts the patrons' attention and kills the entertainment value of the picture.

"For subjects where titles predominate, such as Topics, it is essential that the musical accompaniment be of string only and to be an Allegretto or Moderato tempo. The music must be unfamiliar and not of a singable nature. The strings should be muted, but the music is to play Fortissimo. The bass is to play all short notes Pizzicato, and the piano is to use the soft pedal throughout. The entire orchestra, however, should play the final appropriate chord so as to terminate the musical selection when the subject ends.

"Jazz and popular melodies for these subjects disturb the audience, leading some to hum in unison with the orchestra or to stamp their feet, resulting in annoyance to others. Imagine trying to read a book or newspaper with some one playing the piano at your elbows; a jumble of confused impressions results.

"If the music is played according to the above instructions, the audience can focus its undivided attention upon the subject while the orchestra adds the necessary atmosphere, filling any lulls in the laughter, and at the same time permitting the laughter to spread contagiously through the theatre.

"But it must be noted that a different type of accompaniment should be used with cartoon subjects, the story or plot should be worked up just as that of a feature picture and synchronized correctly and accurately. Since this is action and not titles the music may be louder, more popular and a livelier note in order to bring out the desired effects."

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Complete working plans of the presentation suggested herewith, including blueprints, color charts, costume plates, music cue sheets, and other necessary information, are prepared for each subject. "A KNIGHTLY REVEL"

Music, Dance, Color and Story

"Moving Picture World" Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

The days when "Knighthood was in Flower" have suggested much of the colorful subject matter for various musical and dramatic productions. For romance and the love song, a medieval background is necessary to secure the suggestion of the ideal. For generations the armoured knights of King Arthur's time, together with their "ladyes faeire" have been idelibly stamped with the mark of chivalry, possessors of those elements which popularize the characters in romantic fiction.

This presentation is offered as a contrast to the usual subject produced at this time of the season. The ease with which the narrative of the feature unfolds renders it available for an offering that will attract and carry the necessary elements which the spring season suggests.

The setting is simple in design, but the suggestion of massiveness and the sweeping lines of the archway present an effective background. The principal requirements are three columns, a sectional arch, a painted arch border hung on a batten, a boxed row, and a cyclorama.

The centre or main column is set at right center about two. Adjoining it at extreme right is a smaller column which is masked with the painted arch border. At extreme left is another column, set on about half. The sectional arch adjoins the main column and this unit. The set is obliqued, the column units running from right in two across to extreme left down at the curtain line.

Up stage, are three sections of boxed rows set on angles to suggest the railed section of a balcony over a courtyard. These rows can be constructed to set in one piece, the various sections being hinged together.

At extreme left, a large doorway can be set, with a wall backing, but this is not essential if the stage space is limited as the adjoining interior can be suggested with the lights.

A cyclorama is used for the backing.

The color scheme for the set should embrace gray-browns on the columns and boxed rows. The lighting treatment furnishes the color effects which are necessary.

The action opens with the sound of the revelers off stage at right, the strains of distant music punctuates the merry making, shadows of characters flicker on the pillars which are highlighted from the doorway right with amber and canary. The shadows are tinged with a deep blue haze, the edges of the boxed row are tipped with blue and canary, and the sky is a deep blue with here and there a brilliant star being pointed. A love song follows the introductory action of a jester and a friar, which is sung by a lady dressed in the shimmering costume of that period, assisted by a man dressed in the silk garb of a courtier. A beautiful effect can be achieved, with a large moon box, set to form a background for the faces of the two singers as they stand up stage at the center of the boxed row.

Ladies of the Court, dressed in the flowing robes, jeweled headgear and accompanied by courtiers enter for a spectacular dance number. The colorful costumes against the drab background of the set and highlighted with the lighting treatment present a very attractive picture. After the comedy business of the jester and friar, trumpeters enter and proceeding to the wall, sound out the call to all in the court. The signal creates excitement, as a singer dressed in the full armour of a Knight ready for battle, enters and sings the spirited number "The King Goes Forth to War." The first shafts of dawn tinge the cyc and the horizon takes on a roseate glow. The finale moves on, with the tops of gaily ornamented banners and trappings visible over the boxed row as the supposed army march away, the flags fluttering in a breeze. The set cleared, the knight sings the "love song" theme with the lady, as the drums in the courtyard gradually die away, the Knight pledging his love on his shield and sword as the lady gives him her token, bidding him on his way.

The presentation can be easily adapted to a small stage and the number of characters used in the production depends entirely on the space available.

All in Favor of "World" Presentations

"I would be very much pleased to receive from week to week your blueprints and instructions of the prologues and presentations you are preparing. We are opening a wonderful new house in two weeks and expect to stage same."
N. E. Mitchell, Chapman's Theatre, Fullerton, Calif.

"Will you kindly place my name on the list of producers and exhibitors eligible to receive the folios containing complete working plans of the presentations and prologues as described in the 'World.' They are going to be an invaluable help in my work, I know."
Cliff Lewis, Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y.

"We are very much interested in your presentation, prologue and music department, and we would appreciate receiving regularly the blue prints and other descriptive matter regarding same. Mr. Colby Harriman will be rendering a very valuable service with this department and we are anxious to benefit thereby."
A. N. Gonsio, Virginia and Rialto Theatres, Champaign, Ill.

PRODUCERS' FORUM

Mr. Harriman desires to hear from all producers and will appreciate their opinions, ideas and suggestions on all matters appertaining to general production work, publishing same in this section with credit to the author.

Costume plate illustrating dress and head-gear worn by a member of the Mexican National Ballet Company introducing the walking cane chorus. The head-dress is made of a hat frame covered with "Chair cane," a fan shaped back of the hat from which short canes or bamboo points are fastened. The upper part of the dress is of cane, with the bamboo points hanging from it. The points are painted or stained brown and can be shellaced. When the chorus enacted the spirited steps of the dance, the canes rattled rhythmically, a staccato beating of the walking sticks which were carried added to the number. The blouse of the costume was white with large red flowers embroidered upon it.

The accompanying drawing illustrates a novel idea for a panel which can be used as a backing for a singer or instrumentalist. The panel should run full height and be comparatively narrow. Draperies used on either side to carry off. Use a single width of muslin in painting it. The tree should be outlined by the sky "fill-in" as suggested, the sky being done in a deep blue on the face of the flat, permitting a reflected light to catch the color. The sky area should be opaque from the back so that lights used to tone the tree would not penetrate. The lighting effect back of the frame can be achieved with two floods or a spot bank placed right and left. The lower part of the tree should be toned in a dark amber, with green thrown in at the base. The top of the tree can open with light green, changing to deeper green, then a variation of orange amber and canary, with a suggestion of green. The effect will be that of a large stained glass window, the colors changing gradually and the light diffused to the point of "richness."

Improvising a Rubber Mallet

There are many times when a rubber mallet is required to do a certain job back stage and a regulation one is not at hand. Secure a rubber tip such as used on chair legs or crutches and place over the end of a standard hammer. The rubber must usually be stretched when placing the tip on the hammer but this tension will hold the tip in position.

Driving Screw

Where it is found difficult to place a screw, especially at heights where the fingers cannot conveniently hold it, it is suggested that a small piece of newspaper be folded and placed over edge of the screw driver as it is placed in the slot of the screw. The screw will be held to the driver until it is placed.

Here is a good suggestion for the paint boy on the frame or in the studio. When paint brushes are left standing in water the weight of the handle presses the bristles out of shape. If holes are drilled in the handles, the brushes may be protected by the water and the bristles kept straight by suspending from a rod as shown. A quarter inch rod, flattened on one end, and soldered or riveted to the side of the bucket, will do the work.

The use of the "Theme" in motion pictures is neither more or less than applying to the film drama a principle Wagner introdueed in opera. Wagner in his scores associates a certain theme, motive or air with the appearance of his leading characters. When they take the stage the melody with which they are identified is heard. This effective musical device has great possibilities in the picture drama, and is valuable in giving unity to music and dramatic action. The musical director has wide freedom in the choice of his "theme" material. Most important to remember, however, is that the first requisite is a genuinely melodious theme, one which will bear repetition. A theme of pleasing outline, suave, graceful and pronouncedly melodic in type, is sufficient to establish clearly the identity of the character whose appearance it accompanies. A theme such as that may be varied in tempo and played either ff or pp, as the varying of the screen or stage action may demand—the effect will be the same. It will make the role with which it is identified "stand out." The use of the "leading" theme is naturally best adapted for larger and more elaborate picture productions, in which the appearance and action of principals is broken up to some degree by minor incident. Yet the idea may, on occasion, if the picture conditions are favorable, be employed in smaller pictures as well. At all events the use of the theme is an idea on which the intelligent musical director can ring his own variations.

Divertissements

S. L. Rothafel has again offered a scenic gem in the first part of his two number presentation. The lighting treatment is one of rare beauty and the correct progressive stages achieved evidence a well-devised lighting plot.

1.—(a) "The Rising Sun" (A Zuni Indian Chant), (Troyer). Enda Watkins, soprano.
(b) A Zuni Dance. Doris Niles and Capitol Ballet Corps.

The two numbers above are presented in one setting which depicts a mountainous exterior, on the edge of a cliff overlooking the wooded valleys of the Arizona and New Mexico country. A cut drop is hung in two which represents a brush strewn incline. The right end of the drop runs on to centre as a narrow row, and left of center the ground line shoots up to about twelve feet and then gradually ascends off to left. The cliff effect is accentuated with a trunk of a large tree visible at the top of the cliff left center. Back of the drop is a platform about twelve feet in height upon which the singer stands. Three set pine trees are back of the drop up right, the sky drop tinged green and mixed with canary is hung back.

The story enacted is at dawn of day, accompanied by the whirr of vibrating chime plates and drums, the Zuni Sun priest mounts to the top of the highest cliff dwelling and there gives forth his cry to awake, arise and greet the Mother of Life, the Sun. Characteristic of the Indian belief is his patient waiting for the answering echo sent back to him from the surrounding mesas. He then exhorts the people to worship of "Mighty-Sun-God" and prays for help and guidance from the Great Spirit.

At rise, green floods were used. High on the cliff, stood the singer, dressed in Indian costume silhouetted against the green toned sky, which was faintly flushed in the center with orange amber, on a suggested horizon. As the song progressed the orange amber glow intensified indicating the rising sun, as canary mixed with the green on the drop gave it an ivory tint. The cut drop was highlighted from the left with red, green and amber, defining the ground, bushes, and a dead tree trunk fallen on the hillside. Purple was brought in from right on the pine trees set up right, the mixture of blue and red lending a good effect of distance. Dancers, dressed as Zuni Indians, came in couples and knelt at the foot of the hill. As the song finished a large red sun appeared over the edge of the cliff. The foreground dancers, one beating a massive tom-tom down center, did a wild fantastic dance. The sun ascended slowly and at the finale the singer was silhouetted against the large orb, the dancers grouped in the foreground with Miss Niles posing on the Indian drum.

2.—"Valse Caprice" Rubinstein. Maria Yurieva and Veselaff Svoboda.

These two artists of the Imperial Ballet of Petrograd and Moscow make a second week appearance with an artistic dance rendition of the well known musical composition above noted. A purple drop, hung in heavy folds in two, highlighted with rose and blue from the sides. The dancers dressed in court dancing costumes of a late nineteenth century period work in violet spots. The lady wore a white ballet costume with purple figures in flowered design. The man, the white gaitered trousers, and black velvet jacket.

THE MARK STRAND
New York City

Featured Picture: "Chickie"

Music

Excerpts from "The Prince of Pilsen" by Luders is rendered by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra with Carl Edouarde conducting. After the first part of the overture, the curtains are drawn revealing the suggestion of a "college hall," a large arched drop in one with a maroon tinged fabric drop hung in two. In the center is a large antique designed table, surmounted in the center with a brass standard candelabra and several steins, etc. scattered about the top. Several German bar chairs are grouped around the table at the sides and back. Two metal framed chandeliers with candles are suspended at right and left center with chains. A dull bronze medallion hangs on the drop at center. Harry Kelly, baritone, dressed in a Heidelberg student's costume stands at left end of table and sings "The Message of the Violet." Eleven members of the male chorus, dressed in the student uniform, file in and sing "The Heidelberg Song." Amber spots from sides and flood from front, lend a warm glow to the scene.

"The Piano Ensemble"

A very effective musical number with three pianists and a simple setting. Gold fabric drop hung in one, three mahogany grand pianos set right of center, left center and left. Amber and pink from sides on the lower part of drop, white from the top. Canary to highlight. The following program is rendered by Sergei Barsukoff, Lula Mayer, and Alexander Semmles. (a) "Blue Danube", (b) "Rachmaninoff Prelude in G Minor", (c) "Nola."

"In A Garden"

A very conventional garden design well mounted. The front elevation of a small set house is placed at center up stage, the set piece designed fantastically, green body tone and pink trimmings with a scrolled gable. Green vines and pink flowers twine from the lower right corner of the piece up over the split doorway, to the roof and around the window above. A flowering tree is set at left center, with a circular bench around it. Rows of vividly colored hollyhocks run on from both sides up stage to the house. Blue cyc to back. The colors in the pigments are highlighted correspondingly from off stage with an artistic setting as the result. Kitty McLaughlin is discovered sitting on the bench beneath the tree at left center and sings "Love's Everlasting" by Friml. At the conclusion of her song, Mlle. Klemova, dressed in a quaint yellow costume and poke type of hat, appears at the doorway of the house, enters and is met by M. Dakes dressed in gray gaitered trousers and maroon toned coat. They present a dance number to "The Glow-Worm" by Lincke.

COLONY THEATRE

Featured Picture: "Playing with Souls"

Music

The Colony Orchestra present a third "Symphonojazz" arranged and directed by the guest conductor, Louis Katzman. It is a special blending of "Hymn to the Sun" (Rimsky-Korsakoff), "Mexicana," and "The Indian Love Call" (Friml). John Priest renders an organ solo.

A Musical Fantasy

A novelty introducing a reproducing piano. A large grand piano, gilded with a flowered design upon it, is at center. Gold curtains are hung back of it in one. At right is a draped pedestal with a gilt tapestried chair, and extreme left is an urn shaped pedestal surmounted by a vase with silver leaves. A clever dancer, dressed in a gold and yellow dancing costume, dances on the top of the piano as the instrument reproduces a popular melody. Two singers, dressed in 1870 costumes, are right and left to dress during the dance number, and after the dancer disappears through the curtains at center, the two singers, one seated at the piano render a selection to close. Rose and purple are brought in from the sides, with amber to tone. Blue is used to highlight, and canary spots to work.

"Tia Juana"

An excellent demonstraction of what can be done with a good vaudeville act in dressing it for a presentation offering. Fowler and Tamara, together with their South American Troubadours, held over from last week, are given a colorful ensemble which is about the best recently seen in a Broadway motion picture theatre. The setting depicts a Spanish type courtyard, a large tiled gateway at center, with high walls on either side, running to set houses at extreme sides. A cactus tree is visible outside the wall up right, and a mountainous stretch of country is visible through the center arch. This set piece is backed with a sky drop. Tables, chairs, benches, etc., are used to dress both right and left. A striped awning is over a window in the set house right, and vines are used to tone the buffgray walls of the set. The characters are dressed in the colorful costumes of Spain, with the Mexican and South American influence added. The following program is rendered; (a) "Danza Del Sombrero" (Jarabe Tapitio), the Troubadours with dance by Anita Nori, (b) "En Cuba," sung by Frederick Brindley, tenor, (c) "Valse" Cielito Lindo (Beautiful Heaven), Miss Tamara and Mr. Fowler, (d) "Danza Espanola" (Malaguena), Anita and Alberto, (e) "Serafina" by the Troubadours, (f) "Baile Del Manton" (Dance of the Shawl), Miss Tamara, Mr. Fowler and the Ensemble. The scenery was executed by Willy Pogany, and the action and sustained tempo of the entire number marks it as one of the best presentations of its kind.

Music

The music program for the Ninth Anniversary Program of the theatre includes "Capriccio Italien" (Tschaikowsky) as the overture feature played by the Rialto Orchestra with Willy Stahl conducting, and followed with another cleverly arranged "Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz."

"Japanese Lullaby"

Jazz Divertissement

This number is about the peppiest that has ever been seen in a motion picture theatre. It is a real Jazz number which should be spelled with capital letters. Prior to the introduction of the dancers, a subject is shown on the screen illustrating various dances in other countries. The musical accompaniment is particularly good. At the conclusion the title is flashed that the dance of the day "The Charleston" will be introduced. Lights come up, and seven girls, in glistening costumes of minor proportions, come from left and down to a platform which is erected over the rail of the orchestra pit. The fast stepping of the chorus ends, the girls exit right and left up the runways. The curtains are drawn, and a jeweled set is revealed, with two large panels made of small mirrors right and left up the runways. The curtains show strands of silver tinsel hung in the folds. Dolores Farris, dressed in a pink dancing costume, appears and presents a clever number, with the seven girls appearing in silver trunk and bodice costumes and dance to a spirited finale. A color wheel plays upon the mirrored panels, and the vari-colored floodlights from the balcony rail lend an effective lighting treatment.

CAPITOL THEATRE
Chicago

Francis A. Mangan offers a diversified program to surround the features picture of Jackie Coogan in "The Rag Man."

The Capitol Grand Orchestra with Albert E. Short conducting, render the descriptive fantasia "A Day With A Circus" (Lamp). This is followed with two presentation numbers, the first entitled "In Front of the Big Top" introducing the smallest horse "in the world" and an educated duck. Four girls do a "Clown Dance" followed by the introduction of "Barkers." The second number is "Inside the Big Top," with five units comprising it, (a) "Three Caswell Sisters," wonders of the trapeze, (b) "Thomas Trio," clowns, (c) "Fisher's Animals," (d) "Dead or Alive," a clown fantasy, (e) "The Six Tip Tops," a sensational acrobatic finale.

Banks Kennedy, at the organ, plays "A Radio Nightmare."

Featured Picture: "Sally" (First National)

The Eastman Theatre Orchestra, conducted by Frank Waller, present "The Beautiful Blue Danube," by Johann Strauss, as the overture feature. The organ recital, with Harold Osborn Smith at the console, plays the Suppe composition, "Morning, Noon and Night." A song car-tune, "Swanee River," is also on the program. For the special musical feature Mary Bell, soprano, sings "Look for the Silver Lining," from "Sally," by Kern.

Carl Edouarde Says—

MUSIC WEEK should emphasize the works of American composers, and, in particular, encourage the American composers who now are struggling along with little or no recognition and reward.

This is the suggestion of Carl Edouarde, conductor of the Mark Strand Sympony Orchestra for eleven years, and credited with being the first man to introduce good music to the millions of motion picture fans.

Mr. Edouarde was asked to give his ideas of a Music Week program.

"It is very difficult," Mr. Edouarde explained, "to arrange a Music Week program adaptable to motion picture theatres everywhere. Of course, they all have fine organs, even in neighborhood houses, and a great majority of the big theatres have worth-while orchestras. But there are many limitations because of the variety of programs and presentations.

"The overture is of course a recognized part of the motion picture program, and I hasten to urge every musical conductor now to give thought to the American composer and his work. The conductor cannot do a more constructive bit for Music Week than by playing the composition of an American composer.

"I've often wondered if the average musical conductor of the movie theatre realizes what a power he can be in educating the great American public to an understanding and appreciation of good music," continued Mr. Edouarde. "Why, until the radio came along just before the phonograph, the only place one could get good music was in the concert field, dominated by the rich and aristocratic.

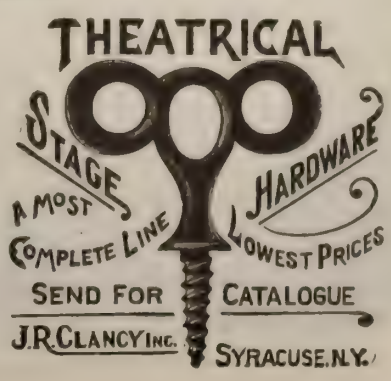
"Now, in the movie—the great American amusement field—the rich and the poor alike can be served a musical program with their films that is really helpful to the cause of good music."

Carl Edouarde, incidentally, practices what he preaches. Through his efforts Orem's "American Indian Rhapsody" was introduced to New York as an overture for one of the Mark Strand's programs.

Mr. Edouarde has been credited by no less an authority than Walter Damrosch with having "done more to educate the masses to better music than any individual I know."

Besides being the pioneer in moving picture orchestral work, Mr. Edouarde and the Mark Strand Orchestra gave concerts at Lewisohn Stadium and at Columbia University.

Mr. Edouarde is an American by birth, received his musical education in the Royal Conservatory of Music at Leipsig, Germany, and was graduated with highest honors at 21 after studying under such masters as Robert Bolland, Friedrich Hermann and Hans Sitt.



United Artists Corporation Announces Details of Releases for New Season

THE biggest announcement that has ever come from the United Artists Corporation at any single time during the six years of this organization, was made this week, when Hiram Abrams, President of the Corporation issued a statement regarding the first six productions, together with their release dates, they will issue to the exhibitors of this country during the coming season.

The pictures announced and their release dates are as follows:

Mary Pickford in "Little Annie Rooney," to be released September 13th.

Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush," to be released August 16th.

Douglas Fairbanks in "Don Q, Son of Zorro," to be released August 30th.

David W. Griffith's production, "Sally of the Sawdust," to be released October 11th.

Rudolph Valentino in "The Bronze Collar," to be released September 27th.

William S. Hart in a spectacular western story, the title to be announced later, to be released October 25th.

Hiram Abrams, President of United Artists' Corporation (left), and Joseph M. Schenck, Chairman of the Board of Directors, who have approved programmes for their stars

Never in all the six years of the phenomenal history of the United Artists Corporation has any such announcement been made. Their history has been phenomenal because of the pre-eminence its product has maintained. Rarely has its product been equalled. Never have they been surpassed, yet with their announcement they state that United Artists Corporation is now thinking primarily of tomorrow and not of the record it has made in the past.

The statement issued by Hiram Abrams, President of the Corporation was as follows:

"Not yesterday, but tomorrow is what the exhibitors of this country are primarily interested in, for all past performances, with their records, are now but history. There is but one thing in the mind of every theatre owner and every theatre manager, 'What will the morrow bring?'

"From the United Artists Corporation the tomorrow in the history of the motion picture industry will bring no idle promises, no camouflaged assurances, no sugar-coated announcement of what this Corporation HOPES TO DO.

"We know what we will do. We will present the productions of the greatest stars in the world, the production of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, David W. Griffith, Rudolph Valentino, William S. Hart and others, and we will adhere absolutely to the original purpose of the Corporation of concentrating upon the superlative type of motion picture produced by its members. The Corporation plans a strictly limited output, but at the same time a definite volume of material. The minimum of pictures for the coming season will be twelve, while on the other hand the maximum will be fifteen.

Stronger Than Ever

"This year finds United Artists in its sixth season as a world-wide distributor of important motion picture product — enviably situated, stronger than ever, and far more firmly committed to its original plan of conduct.

"The recent augmentation of its make-up with the addition of other stars, whose productions it will distribute, and the election of Joseph M. Schenck, as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Corporation, are undoubtedly the greatest steps forward that has been made in the industry for many years. It is well known that with Mr. Schenck's alliance with this Corporation, it is more firmly grounded as the leading independent motion picture distributing organization in the world.

"We are announcing but six pictures at this time and each separate picture will be offered and sold on its own merit. There is not even any pooling of proceeds from the sales of different pictures in the United Artists Corporation. All of this has been pretty well understood and appreciated in the motion picture trade, for it has been the policy of the United Artists Corporation from its very inception, and it has never been changed and it never will be changed. That is why it bears repetition, for this is the one organization in all the industry that has never changed, in a single degree, its original purposes and policies. Especially is this so as a reminder of the encouragement the United Artists Corporation system has given and will continue to give an open market in the industry. Seeking neither to bind the exhibitor to product he may not prefer nor to interfere with his free choice of anything that is elsewhere on the market, this organization provides him an object lesson of independence.

Plan Has Remained Unchanged

"The original United Artists Corporation plan has remained unchanged and steadfast from the beginning. For six years it has been so. At that time the principals of the Corporation knew that this idea and this sales policy was the right idea and the right policy. Knowing that it was right they knew that it was bound to succeed. Resisting every temptation of every kind whatsoever that would lead to any modification of the original idea and policy, the Corporation has kept steadily on its way.

"That is why with our present early announcement we repeat most emphatically that this season we will sell every picture singly—each sold on an individual basis—each offered only on its merit. No program or block bookings. No grouping for the purpose of a single contract—thus giving to the industry the greatest and most meritorious productions, upon an absolutely independent and open market."

The statement closed by saying that all the six productions now announced would be sold immediately and that bookings would be made in accordance with the release dates.

Mary Pickford in scenes in her forthcoming United Artists' production "Little Annie Rooney"

Douglas Fairbanks in scenes in "Don Q, Son of Zorro"

Mary Pickford in "Annie Rooney"

"LITTLE ANNIE ROONEY," Mary Pickford's next production for United Artists Corporation, which will be released September 13th, marks the return of "the world's sweetheart" to a character, the type of which has always been her most popular role. She has deserted the fussy furbelows of the costume drama and the golden slippers of the fairy tales, and will again, in this picture portray the saucy, golden-haired imp that has endeared her to millions of picture fans.

Miss Pickford is right at home in this story of New York's "East Side" for the characterization of little Annie fits here like the proverbial glove. The story deals with a twelve-year-old daughter of a well-known policeman, who leads a gang of dirty faced youngsters in kid battles against a rival gang, and secretly adores Joe Kelly, a truck driver, the best friend of her brother, Tim Rooney.

Tony, another youth who aspires to be a gunman, kills Officer Rooney in a dance hall. Tim thinks that Joe Kelly has committed the crime and he in turn wounds Joe, in a fight that occurs on the street. Annie submits to a blood transfusion to save Joe's life, knowing in her heart that he is innocent. She thinks that blood transfusion is fatal to the one giving the blood, and prepares to die, making a crude will while lying on the hospital cot.

"True to Life" Details

Joe's life is saved and Annie learns with great glee that she will not "croak." When Joe has fully recovered from his injuries, he takes Annie and her gang, together with the members of the rival gang, on a picnic in his new truck. A battle royal breaks out aboard the truck and Annie wades in to stop the brawl. Her fists fly right and left and quell the small riot. Naturally, there is the ever needed ultimate justification and everything ends happily.

MARY PICKFORD DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS

With such a theme, and in such an environment, Mary finds herself perfectly at home. Such characterizations made her famous, and she will resume them in a series of modern, up-to-date stories of which "Little Annie Rooney" is the first. In fact, Miss Pickford expects to make three pictures this year, breaking all production records for her since she has been with United Artists Corporation.

William Beaudine is directing the picture, the story of which was written by Jack Cunningham. The association of Mr. Beaudine with Miss Pickford is the climax of an interesting story, for they first became acquainted with each other when the present director was the second assistant property boy at the old Biograph Studio, and Mary was just beginning her career.

Tom McNamara Assisting

Tom McNamara, the famous creator of children's comic pictures, is providing the same brand of infectious humor for Miss Pickford that he puts in his comics. He assisted from the beginning in the developing of the story and the "gags" that he has injected into the production are said to be without precedent in motion pictures. There are kids galore in this picture, most of them never before having played before the camera. They are of all types and nationalities, in fact, ten different races are represented. Dogs, goats, monkeys and horses are also included in the "cast of characters."

Most remarkable of all, and something that has set all Hollywood talking, is the marvelous sets that Miss Pickford has built for this picture. They are conceded by everyone to be the most unique that were ever constructed, faithfully depicting the East Side district of New York City. Mary herself has been transformed into a twelve year old child, and she portrays the part of "Annie" in a manner that surpasses anything she has ever done.

Miss Pickford feels, without fear of contradiction, that this will be the greatest box-office attraction she has ever had to offer the exhibitors of the country.

D. W. Griffith presents "Sally of the Sawdust," with Carol Dempster

"Doug" Fairbanks in Sequel to "Zorro"

THE glory that was Spain's now belongs to Douglas Fairbanks, who put this glory into his latest production, "Don Q, Son of Zorro," which he finished recently. There will probably be pre-showings of the production shortly before the summer season sets in.

This production is a remarkably colorful adventure-romance, set in a Spanish locale. It is virtually a sequel to "The Mark of Zorro," in that the adventures of Zorro are carried on. However, in this latest story, he is taken from the picturesque California of the middle nineteenth century and transplanted to the even more picturesque Spain of the same period, in which there will be all of the Latin fire and dash in the story and in the picture that was is the original Zorro production, which everyone agrees was the greatest romantic melodrama ever presented on the screen.

The story of "Don Q" tells of how Don Cesar, the son of Zorro, goes to Spain to complete his education, and is wrongfully accused of murdering a visiting Archduke. Immediately after this accusation he pretends to commit suicide and thereafter becomes the dashing and mysterious "Don Q." He writes to his father who comes to his aid, and together they go through many fights and thrilling events and adventures until the real murderer is disclosed and Don Q is restored to his original standing and becomes re-united with the charming senorita whom he had wooed before the accusation of the murder had blasted his hopes.

In this new offering, Doug will play a dual role, even as he did in "The Mark of Zorro." In this instance, however, he will play Zorro, the father, and Don Q, the son, which means that the new story transpires at a later time than that set forth in "The Mark of Zorro." The dashing Zorro of the first picture, grown older, but still the sword-slashing demon, is replaced by his adventurous, romantic son who inherits all of the father's courage, wit and charm.

There will be a greater variety of the well-known Fairbanks' stunts in this production than in anything that Doug has heretofore done, for he will dance, fence, fight bulls and for the first time in pictures use a whip-popper. This will be his first fling at tripping the light fantastic, and for more than a month prior to the starting of the picture he was given instructions by some of the most expert tangoists in the country. In the picture he does the tango and the fandango with Miss Juliette Belanger as his partner.

Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush"

BUBBLING over with enthusiasm regarding the gigantic epic comedy that Charlie Chaplin is soon to deliver to the exhibitors of the country, in the form of his latest production, "The Gold Rush," the executives of the United Artists Corporation, who recently saw the production, issued a statement that will undoubtedly be received by theatre owners and fans alike with a great deal of joy.

"This production, 'The Gold Rush'," says the statement, "is the most gigantic thing in Charlie Chaplin's career, the most wonderful thing he has ever accomplished in all his life. What will interest exhibitors most undoubtedly is the fact that he has made an absolutely one hundred per cent audience picture, not having forgotten for a second, the millions of children fans that have loved him for so long, and in doing so has given them a type of comedy picture that will make every man, woman and child jump out of their seats and yell with glee.

"The picture is an epic in comedy, and this 'Gold Rush of 1925' will surpass the gold rush to the Klondike of years ago. It has absolutely everything in it that a spectacular motion picture should have, for there are thrills galore, a great deal of heart interest, much pathos, plenty of romance, drama and a large amount of suspense. He certainly has written another page in the history of his comedy career, and it will be the most brilliant page in the comedy history of the industry, besides.

"Everyone knows perfectly well that there is only one Charlie Chaplin and he has proven it in this production beyond any doubt. Here is a production that will live for years and years, for the 'comedy' Charlie, who can bring tears to the eyes of his audience as easily as he can make them scream with laughter, has accomplished the things he has striven to do for years. He will make his audiences weep at his pathos, shudder at his thrills, become chilled at the suspense of his drama and actually yell and cheer at his comedy.

"The picture will be ready for pre-release this summer."

The statement also said that Mr. Chaplin had discovered a really wonderful actress in Gloria Hale, who plays the leading feminine role in the picture, and that she will have a tremendous appeal with audiences everywhere. He also stated that Mack Swain, for years one of the leading actors in comedies, portrays a dramatic part that is conceded the greatest thing he has ever done.

D. W. Griffith Next, Big Circus Story

D. W. GRIFFITH has stepped out again and has made the biggest production he has attempted in many years, in "Sally of the Sawdust." Bigger sets than ever, beautiful women and oodels of comedy are to be found in this production, based on a twisting, scampering story, full of laughable surprises and merry drama.

"Sally of the Sawdust" is based upon one of the most successful musical comedies of recent years; but due to provisions in the contract regarding the title, no mention of the stage show can be made, more than that it is based on a play by Dorothy Donnelly.

Before Mr. Griffith started this picture, he made a little trip among exhibitors, visiting forty theatres. This trip was accomplished without his identifying himself. It was to study what the people wanted from their exhibitors and what the exhibitors wanted from the producers.

As a result of that trip, he decided to make "Sally of the Sawdust," which he believes is the best audience picture he has made since "Way Down East."

The title role is carried by Carol Dempster, who received national recognition as one of the best of the younger screen actresses.

The leading man's role goes to W. C. Fields, the star of the Ziegfeld Follies and one of the most popular comedians of the day. Erville Alderson, who has become famous in character parts under Mr. Griffith's direction; Effie Shannon, the stage celebrity; Mrs. Harriman, of Park Avenue society; Glenn Anders, as the trapeze performer in a role of genial villainy; Miss Shotwell, and a cast including at least two thousand others.

Gigantic Picture, Valentino's First

RUDOLPH VALENTINO was the first star to be added to the original "Big Four" a few weeks ago, when the United Artists Corporation finally decided to enlarge its releasing arrangements and add more products to their list for next season.

Immediately after the acquisition of Mr. Valentino, Joseph M. Schenck, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Corporation, who will present this star hereafter on the screen, started to search for the biggest vehicle possible for his first production under the United Artists banner.

After having searched practically everywhere for a story that would be suitable in accordance with the magnitude of the production as it was being planned, there came to the forefront the latest novel of John Frederick, "The Bronze Collar," which the critics declare will be one of the best sellers of the coming season.

The story is a stirring romance of early California in the days of Spannish rule, filled with all the glamour and beauty that typifies that country in the days when the Spaniards held sway in that magnificently colorful country. The title, "The Bronze Collar" signifies a badge of slavery which the hero is compelled to wear during the trials and tribulations he is forced to go through in the course of the earlier parts of the story.

RUDOLPH VALENTINO — WILLIAM S. HART

In this heroic role, Mr. Valentino plays a devil-may-care fellow who fights, rides and loves in a manner that he has never before had the opportunity of doing in his motion pictures.

Mr. Schenck has selected Clarence Brown, one of the best known directors of the day to take charge of the directorial end of the production. He recently entered upon a long term contract with Mr. Schenck to direct his important productions for a number of years.

W. S. ("Bill") Hart in New Type Western

THE recent announcement that William S. Hart is to return to the screen, after a retirement of a number of years, was greeted everywhere by exhibitors and motion picture fans alike, with great glee. And his alliance with the United Artists Corporation, through which organization his future product will be released, made this joyous feeling even more pleasurable, for it was an absolute assurance that he would now be enabled to make the gigantic and spectacular Western pictures that had always been his desire.

Despite the fact that the first production he will make for United Artists Corporation is still without a working title, the production is being prepared.

This Western story will be based on a theme that has never before been touched on by the popular "two-gun" man, Hart, or any other player who has appeared in Westerners. The story, because of that fact, is being carefully guarded, but exhibitors are given the assurance that the picture will be the most stupendous Western production that has ever been made, and will be an outstanding feature among all fall pictures. Sets are being prepared on a most lavish scale and Mr. Hart promises to give the exhibitors a picture that will be an epic among all Western productions that have ever been produced.

Mr. Hart, who is spending some time in the east at present is spending a portion of this time in choosing the cast that will support him in the production. Definite announcement of the story and the cast will be made in the very near future.

On and "off stage" shots in Mary Pickford's forthcoming United Artists' release, "Little Annie Rooney." Mary has the role of a 12-year-old New York "East Side" kid, and she has a lot of kids with her in the picture. The tall man with the little megaphone is William Beaudine, Mary's director. Mary is using the big megaphone. In the lower left corner Miss Pickford is seen with her dog, "Zorro."

Century Announces Ambitions of Comedies for Next Season

THE Century Film Corporation, makers of two-reel Century Comedies, released through Universal, has projected the most ambitious program of comedies for the 1925-1926 season ever contemplated by that corporation. As announced this week by Abe Stern, vice-president of the Century Company, who has just returned East from the coast, there will be 52 Century Comedies, one a week, released during the period from August 5, 1925, and July 29, 1926.

This weekly release schedule, which has been budgeted to cost more than $500,000 will include a series of twelve comedies starring Century's leading comedienne, Wanda Wiley; twelve starring another top-notch Century star, Edna Marian, and a series of twelve Buster Brown Comedies. There also will be two series of six each with Eddie Gordon and Al Alt, and a series of four featuring Charles King.

The feature section of the forthcoming Century program is expected to be the Buster Brown Comedies. These comedies will be made by special arrangement with R. F. Outcault, the cartoonist creator of the popular boy character. Buster Brown will be played by young Arthur Trimble, a boy actor of exceptional talent. The Buster Brown comedies will be released one a month. Charles Lamont, one of Century's most trusted directors, will make them. George McWilliams has been engaged to put the comics into story and continuity form.

Concerning the Wanda Wiley and Edna Marian comedies for next season, Abe Stern comments as follows:

"In making twelve comedies starring Wanda Wiley, we are endeavoring to give to the exhibitor a continual supply of first-rate two-reelers with this young comedienne, who has built herself up, during the past six months, into a real box-office asset. Reports from the Universal exchanges indicate that she has definitely established herself as a comedy star. Her comedies are in demand.

"The same is true of Edna Marian. We regard her as a find. Her comedies this winter and spring have been eye-openers to us."

The six Eddie Gordon comedies will be clean, wholesome comedies of the slap-stick variety. The same will be true of the Al Alt two-reelers. These two men have proved their worth in this type of comedy, for which, by the way, there is a widespread and a surprisingly large demand.

"The four Charles King comedies will be special two-reelers of high box-office drawing power. King is a newcomer to Century ranks, but he is well known in the film world and has proved to us that he is as good in comedy roles as he is in leading man parts in dramatic pictures."

Next for Talmadge

"Twenty Years After" is the working title of Richard Talmadge's next action melodrama for F. B. O., work on which began at the F. B. O. Studios this week. The story by James Bell Smith, is based on Dr. Samuel Johnson's story "The History of Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia."

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, and Charles Puffy, who has just signed a contract to make a series of comedies for Universal

Laemmle Returns from West with Plans for Fall Season

WHEN Carl Laemmle left New York in January to set the fall and winter season pictures, to procure the necessary vehicles and the artists to make them and to reorganize the production staff at Universal City, he undertook a big job in a characteristic way. On Saturday, April 18, he returned to New York.

The thirty Jewels contemplated for next year are all purchased and the great majority of them have been placed in production at Universal City. Twenty-three directors are busily at work completing the tremendous schedule, fully 30 per cent. greater than any other schedule ever contemplated by the Universal. With thirty Jewels, twenty-six Blue Streak westerns, six Adventure stories in fifteen to eighteen episodes each, twelve two-reel Gump comedies, fifty-two Century comedies, fifty-two Bulls Eye comedies, fifty-two Mustang westerns, two International News releases a week, Universal will have a total releasing power of between 700 and 800 reels of pictures.

Among the directors on Universal's list are Rupert Julian, Dimitri Buchowetski, Clarence Brown, Charles Brabin, Edward Sedgwick, Svend Gade, King Baggot, Edward Sloman, Harry Pollard, Herbert Blache, William Seiter, Lawrence Trimble, Edward Laemmle, Maurice Tourneur, Clifford Smith, Henry McRae, Francis Ford and several new directors just signed, among whom may be mentioned Frank Griffin, Robert North Bradbury, Al Rogell, Travers Vale and Harold Shumate.

Mr. Laemmle announced the signing of several new people to go into stock. They include Louise Dresser, Jason Robards, Marion Nixon, Lola Todd, Prince Youcca Troubetzkey, Marceline Day, Josie Sedgwick, Margaret Quimby, Cesare Gravina, Georgie Grandee and Charles Puffy, the European comedian whom Mr. Laemmle expects to be a sensation.

John C. Flinn Discusses Advantages of Cecil B. DeMille's Stock Company Plan

WHILE John C. Flinn is carefully guarding the titles and subjects that will make up the pretentious 1925-26 presentations through Producers' Distributing Corporation, he lays stress on one assured detail of the coming productions that is of particular and significant interest to every exhibitor. This is the stock company dramatis personae of the pictures, and the direct bearing that the stock company idea will have on the box office.

"The stock company idea is positive in its assurance of benefit to everyone connected with the motion picture industry," says Mr. Flinn, "and its inauguration into our 1925-26 releases is a decided step forward in safeguarding alike the interests of the exhibitor, the producer, the distributor and the player.

"To the exhibitor the stock company idea presents an unquestioned advantage. Through it he is enabled to present exclusive offerings and eliminate a certain type of unfair competition now extant. With the stock company idea in full force, the exhibitor who pays a good price for a good picture featuring a certain star or group of popular players is not faced by the competition of an opposition house presenting an inferior picture purchased at a small price, but presenting identically the same star or featured players.

CECIL B. DE MILLE JOHN C. FLINN

"The distributor releasing worth-while offerings is not affected by similar unfair competition. Fine pictures, conscientiously made, will not be handicapped in their booking possibilities by cheaply made productions whose only merit is the reputation of the players.

"The producer is benefited by the stock company idea in having competent casts available at all times for each picture he produces. And close association with each player enables the producer to cast his picture with more certainty of the screen results. It also saves the time usually lost in assembling casts from the ranks of unattached and scattered players, and eliminates the delays frequently caused when players of the desired type and artistry are not available.

"From the standpoint of the players the stock company eliminates the worry and uncertainty of steady employment, which, in itself, is conducive of better screen portrayals. With the player happy and contented the production benefits by better work. And in addition to the assurance of steady employment the artist is assured constant constructive publicity tending to promote his public popularity; because by increasing the popularity of each player through casting them only in suitable parts, and by giving them adequate publicity, the value of each production is increased to the mutual benefit of the exhibitor, distributor, producer and the player himself."

"Zander the Great" Opens for Special Run in Los Angeles

"ZANDER THE GREAT," the new Cosmopolitan production starring Marion Davies, opened April 18 for an indefinite run at the Criterion Theatre, Los Angeles. This is the first showing of Miss Davies' newest production, which has been filmed on the West Coast and which was completed only a few weeks ago.

The Los Angeles' premiere was marked by several unusual features, including the personal appearance, in several dances, of Ann Pennington, star of the "Ziegfeld Follies," who was especially engaged for the run of the picture in Los Angeles. The opening was attended by prominent members of the motion picture colony, of Hollywood, as well as by social and civic leaders of Los Angeles.

Special interest has been manifested on the West Coast in "Zander the Great," as it presents Miss Davies in a role markedly different from any in which she has heretofore appeared. The role depicts her as a young orphan girl with a motherless child to care for, and who, in an emergency, flees with the child in a broken-down flivver to Arizona, where a series of unusual adventures befall her.

Miss Davies was present at the opening, as were also several members of her supporting cast in the picture, including Harrison Ford, Hobart Bosworth, Harry Watson, Jr., Harry Myers, George Siegmann, Richard Carle, Hedda Hopper and Master John Huff, a four-year-old child, who plays the title role in the production and who is a screen discovery of the star.

Mary Pickford to Make Three Productions for United Artists

MARY PICKFORD expects to make three pictures this year—breaking all records for her since she was with Famous Players some years ago.

Her present vehicle, "Little Annie Rooney," is well under way and the schedule calls for its completion early in June.

Winifred Dunn, of the Pickford scenario department, is working on a second story for Miss Pickford, as yet unnamed. The nature of this story has not been disclosed. And yet a third story is contemplated by Miss Pickford for the present year. It is now under discussion with Ernst Lubitsch, who will direct it.

If the star goes through with her program and is not persuaded to go abroad this fall, she will bring joy to the United Artist booking offices, for Mary Pickford in "ragged roles," is more in demand today than at any time in history.

"Pollyanna," "Tess," "Through the Back Door," and similar pictures of Miss Pickford are playing throughout this and other countries today although made several years ago. They are still profitable to United Artists, and a big drawing card.

Special Service from Artclass

Weiss Bros. Announce Cuts and Mats on Their Western Star Pictures

In planning their schedule for the coming season, Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation will furnish exchanges handling their Western stunt features with a special advertising and cut service at nominal cost, according to an announcement by Louis Weiss, managing Artclass executive.

This service will consist of full page cuts and mats, of suitable design, for use in the regional papers and other layouts in line and half-tone for use in making up heralds, throwaways and other advertising novelties.

The service will at first be confined to the Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt series of five reel action features and to the third series Weiss Brothers plan to distribute this year featuring a new cowboy star. If it is found that the service meets with favor among the exchanges, as seems probable from the number of enthusiastic replies already received regarding it, Weiss Brothers will extend it to other features and series included in their release list.

Luchese Opens New Exchange

Anthony Luchese, better known to his friends as "Tony," who recently sold his interests in the De Luxe Film Company, one of Philadelphia's leading Independent Exchanges, announces the formation of the Liberty Film Corporation which will serve the theatres in the territory comprising Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. Mr. Luchese has rented the entire three story building at 1339 Vine street., and the entire place is being remodeled and refurnished, and an-up-to-the-minute projection room added. In fact every modern convenience is being provided to make this one of the most up-to-date exchanges in the Philadelphia territory.

The Liberty Film Corporation has already contracted for the new Rayart Pictures Serial play, "Secret Service Sanders" starring Richard Holt and Ann Little; and also for Rayart's Butterfly Comedies starring Gloria Joy and Joe Moore.

PETER GRIDLEY SMITH

An "ace" among publicity men, "Pete" has taken over studio publicity at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios on the West Coast. With his chief, Louis B. Mayer, "Pete" was a visitor in New York last week.

Four Features, Five Shorts, On F. B. O. Schedule for June

FOUR features and five short subjects are scheduled for release on the Film Booking Offices' June schedule.

"Smooth as Satin," an Evelyn Brent starring vehicle based on the famous stage play, "The Chatterbox," by Bayard Veiller, will be released on June 14. Production Manager B. P. Fineman is assembling a cast. Ralph Ince, who directed Miss Brent in "Alias Mary Flynn," her fifth picture for Gothic Productions, is slated to wield the megaphone. Pandro Berman will act as assistant director.

"High and Handsome," the second Maurice (Lefty) Flynn production of the new series which the former Yale halfback is making under the Harry Garson banner for F. B. O. distribution, will be shown on June 21. "High and Handsome" appeared as a novelette in Red Book Magazine and comes from the pen of Gerald Beaumont, author of the David Belasco production, "The Dove," now current in New York. "High and Handsome" will be directed by Harry Garson.

"The Human Tornado," the fourth Ben Wilson production starring Yakima Canutt, well known cowboy and broncho buster, is third on the June schedule and will also be released on June 21. The story and continuity came from the pen of Cliff Hill and Ben Wilson is slated to direct.

On June 28, "Whirling Lariats," the fourth Fred Thomson production which F. B. O. are producing, will be shown. "Whirling Lariats" is a fast moving western and gives Thomson and Silver King opportunity to display their unusual histrionic ability, as well as a goodly amount of riding, fighting and horsemanship.

The June schedule of short subjects will be headed by "Three Bases East," eighth of the H. C. Witwer series, "The Pacemakers," co-starring Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara, adapted by Paul Gangelin and directed by Wesley Ruggles. It will be released on June 7.

The ninth Jimmy Aubrey comedy, produced by Standard Cinema Corporation for F. B. O. release, titled "About Face," will be released on June 15.

June 21 will see the distribution of the ninth of "The Pacemakers," titled "Oscar's Wild."

Dinky Doodle No. 10, as yet untitled, a one-reel cartoon novelty directed by Walter Lanz, depicting the adventures of the mischievous little Dinky Doodle, will be released on June 21.

A two-reel comedy, starring Stan Laurel, made by Standard Cinema Corporation for F. B. O. release, as yet untitled, will be distributed on June 30.

Dietz Devises Classy Book Announcing Metro-Goldwyns

METRO-GOLDWYN announces its line-up for the season of 1925-26 in a style that sets a new mark for pre-season announcements. It comes in the form of an 110-page book titled "The Talk of the Industry," telling all exhibitors and the trade in general the really big things they may expect from Metro-Goldwyn during the coming year.

Listed in the beautiful book are the first 26 pictures, each described in more or less detail by means of handsome illustrations in full colors together with appropriate text. These initial 26 pictures will be released between July, 1925, and January, 1926, with 26 others to follow, a total of 52—"The Quality 52," as they are known.

For several months Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for Metro-Goldwyn, has been at work on this book. The work that he has accomplished places motion picture advertising on a much higher plane than it has enjoyed before. It is freely conceded by all those who have been privileged to go over this book that it is the finest thing of its kind ever produced by any of the motion picture organizations at any time.

Outside of the sheer charm of the work from the artistic side, this quite unusual book contains, among other useful features, a gallery of seventeen portraits of stars and featured players now enrolled at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City. These portraits are mounted on rose-colored old French mats. Framed, they should enhance the allure of any theatre lobby. Each of the full page plates illustrative of the individual pictures will also make beautiful lobby cards.

The book also contains crayon portraits of all of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production executives as well as the directors who are responsible for the turning out of Metro-Goldwyn box office hits. There are also several full-page layouts showing scenes from forthcoming productions.

"Are Parents People?" Ready

Final cutting on "Are Parents People?", which Mal St. Claire directed, was completed at the Paramount studio. Featured in the cast of the picture are Betty Bronson, Florence Vidor and Adolphe Menjou. The story was scenarized by Frances Agnew from Alice Duer Miller's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name.

Nation-wide Beauty Contest On Pathe's "Sunken Silver"

THE week of May 10th marks the release of the newest Patheserial, "Sunken Silver," based on Albert Payson Terhune's novel, "Black Caesar's Clan," with Allene Ray and Walter Miller in the featured roles.

The release of this ten-chapter production will be accompanied by a nation-wide newspaper advertising campaign built around a national beauty contest, which will involve three thousand dollars in prize awards and an opportunity for some girl to play a part in a Patheserial. The campaign, designed to especially attract the women of the nation, has been centered in such publications as have a strong circulation among the women of the United States and is expected to reach over five million readers through such prominent periodicals as The Liberty, Cosmopolitan, True Story, Dream World, Picture Lover, True Romance and Photoplay.

Feeling that in order to attract the male element it was first necessary to interest the women, Pathe officials set about to devise a plan that would appeal especially to the female portion of the motion picture theatre's audience. The winning girl will receive a four weeks' engagement in a Patheserial at one hundred dollars per week and one thousand dollars cash prizes in addition.

In addition to the first prize there will be twenty-four cash prizes awarded. These prizes will be distributed as follows: $750.00 to the second prize winner; $500.00 to the third prize winner; $250.00 in cash to the fourth prize winner; $100.00 in cash to the fifth prize winner; two prizes of $50.00 each to the next two winners; the next eight in line will receive cash prizes of $25.00 each, and the next ten will receive prizes of ten dollars each. In the case of a tie each contestant so tied will receive an equal award.

The selection of the winners will be made by a board of judges on the basis of photographs of the candidates and letters written by them. The winners will be determined on the basis of good looks, expression, intelligence, and apparent screen effectiveness. The letters received from the contestants will also serve together with the photographs as a basis of judging the intelligence of the contestants. The contest is open to women and girls only who are not now acting on the stage or in motion pictures. In writing the letter each contestant will be required to state why she thinks she could be successful in a part in a Patheserial, basing her opinion on the work of any girl whom she has seen in a Patheserial. The contest is advertised to close August 15th, which allows the exhibitor ample time to exploit the contest from a local standpoint.

There are many ways than an exhibitor running the Patheserial, "Sunken Silver," can make profitable use of this contest. They can hold contests of their own for the prettiest girls of their own town or patronage, the best candidate being selected for the national contest by representative people of the locality or by audience vote.

Photos of the girls selected can be shown on the screen, or the candidates presented in person on the stage, this on days that a chapter of "Sunken Silver" is being run. A qualifying elimination contest over a period of weeks can be conducted by the exhibitor in conjunction with his showing of the serial installments, photographs of the best candidates being submitted to the Pathe Exchange, Inc., for entry into the national contest.

Signs Irene Rich

Irene Rich has been signed by Ben Verschleiser to play the feminine lead in his forthcoming Banner Production to be distributed by the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation. The title, "The Love Gamble," has been accepted for commercial purposes. It is an elaborate picturization of Mazie Grig's novel, "Peggy of Beacon Hill."

Scenes from "The Air Mail," the Irwin Willat production for Paramount in which Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Mary Brian, Warner Baxter and Billie Dove are featured.

Pola Negri in "The Charmer," a Sidney Olcott production from the novel, "Mariposa," by Henry Baerlin. Screen play by Sada Cowan. A Paramount Picture.

Eight First National Films Approaching Release Dates

PHOTOGRAPHY is just finished on four new pictures for First National release, with four others in the cutting room. The productions are:

"The Desert Flower," starring Colleen Moore, a First National production.

"Soul-Fire," from Martin Brown's play, "Great Music," made by Inspiration Pictures, starring Richard Barthelmess.

"The White Monkey," from John Galsworthy's novel, made by Sawyer-Lubin, starring Barbara La Marr.

"The Making of O'Malley," from Gerald Beaumont's story, made by First National, starring Milton Sills.

The four productions now in the cutting room are:

"Fine Clothes," John M. Stahl's production for L. B. Mayer, made from the Molnar comedy, "Fashions for Men," with Lewis Stone, Alma Rubens and Percy Marmont

"The Talker," made by Sam Rork from Marion Fairfax's play, with Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson.

"Just a Woman," from Eugene Walter's play, made by M. C. Levee, with Conway Tearle, Claire Windsor and Percy Marmont.

"The Marriage Whirl," made by Corinne Griffith Productions from J. Hartley-Manners' play, "The National Anthem," with Harrison Ford and Kenneth Harlan.

Camera Work Was Completed

Director Gasnier finished camera work on the screen version of Zona Gale's novel "Faint Perfume" on which he has been at work for the last two months. This widely read book is one of the outstanding stories on the production schedule turned out this year by B. P. Schulberg. J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution of B. P. Schulberg Productions, has set the "Faint Perfume" release date for the latter part of May.

F. B. O. Buys "Keeper of Bees," Gene Stratton Porter's Novel

FOLLOWING the overwhelming success and great financial returns both in this country and abroad on "A Girl of the Limberlost," one of Gene Stratton-Porter's most widely read and popular novels, Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., has purchased the screen rights to another novel by this famous author, now running serially in McCall's Magazine, called "The Keeper of the Bees," and shooting on this story will commence shortly, according to an official announcement by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president and general manager of the company, who consummated the deal with the estate of Gene Stratton-Porter, Inc.

Shortly before Mrs. Stratton-Porter met her tragic death in an automobile accident in Los Angeles last December, she finished and sent to her publishers, Doubleday, Page & Company, the completed manuscript of a new novel, "The Keeper of the Bees." Over 2,000,000 subscribers of McCall's Magazine will have read the story before it has been placed in book form by the pulishers, and they state that it has the possibilities of popularity beyond anything written since the early days of "Freckles" and "A Girl of the Limberlost."

James Leo Meehan, Mrs. Porter's son-in-law, will direct.

Powers Confirms Association With Neilan in Production

CONFIRMATION of a news story from Hollywood to the effect that Marshall Neilan and P. A. Powers have become associated in independent production, comes from the Powers offices in the Powers Building. In making the statement Mr. Powers said that in view of repeated denials on the part of Metro-Goldwyn, Nicholas Schenck and others attributed to Mr. Neilan himself, he wished to clear up the resulting confusion, and authorized the following:

Marshall Neilan, director, has severed his connection with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He will be actively associated wtih Mr. Powers and have the general direction of Marshall Neilan Productions. He will be assisted by his present technical staff. Complete agreement on all details have been reached, and production plans regarding studio, stories and distribution are nearing a point that will permit an early announcement of their consummation.

Screen rights have been acquired to the recently published book by Adela Rogers St. Johns, "The Sky Rocket," which previously had appeared serially in Cosmopolitan Magazine and is now on its way to the best seller goal. He owns the picture rights to "The Garden of Edenbridge," by Cosmo Hamilton, soon to appear in Cosmopolitan, later to be published in book form, and from which Mr Hamilton is now engaged in making a dramatization. Arrangements have been made for a Broadway stage production in the early fall. Miss St. Johns is preparing the continuity for her own book, while Anthony Paul Kelley is similarly engaged on the Hamilton story.

Because of its suitability "The Sky Rocket" has been selected to launch Miss Peggy Hopkins Joyce (Countess Morner) on her screen career. This will undoubtedly be the first picture made by Marshall Neilan Productions An all star cast will be assembled in keeping with the character of the story, with Tom Moore as Mr. Neilan's choice for leading man.

Eastern headquarters of Marshall Neilan Productions will continue at the Powers offices in the Powers Building, 723 Seventh avenue, New York, while the publicity will be handled from Suite 504, at the same address, with Raymond Cavanagh in charge.

Eleanor Boardman Signed

Word came by wire from the Metro-Goldwyn west coast's studios that Eleanor Boardman had just been signed to a long term contract.

Vitagraph's "Happy Warrior" Cast Has Been Completed

THE cast of "The Happy Warrior," the second of A. S. M. Hutchinson's great novels to be picturized for Vitagraph's current release schedule, is now complete, and J. Stuart Blackton, who made also the earlier one, "The Clean Heart," is hard at work on the production.

Anders Randolf has been engaged to play the part of Stingo, the leader of one of the rival circus companies which come into conflict and furnish one of the striking highlights in the story. Mr. Randolf has a long list of stage and screen successes to his credit, numbering among the latter "Erstwhile Susan," "The Bright Shawl" and "Her Man."

Gardener James, remembered for his work in "Sonny," "The Headless Horseman," "Fascination" and other successes, will impersonate Rollo, Lord Burdon, while the part of Rollo, the child, will be taken by Philippe de Lacy, the eight-year-old boy who shone in "A Doll's House," with Nazimova, recently.

Jack Herrick is to be cast as Foxy Pinsent, who, as an amateur boxer with a standing challenge to all comers, meets Malcolm Mac Gregor, as Ralph Redpath, in what promises to be one of the liveliest mixups ever screened. Ralph, who is the principal man character in the story, bests the rival pugilist, but not until he knows that he, too, has been in a fight.

Olive Borden, Andre Tournier, who had important roles in "The Trail of Hate," "Lights of the Desert" and "Desert's Crucible," to mention only a few successes, and Bobby Gordon also will have important characterizations, that of Bobby being Ralph Redpath as a small boy.

Vitagraph regards the cast as now complete as a particularly strong one. Announcement had been made previously of the signing of Malcolm Mac Gregor (Ralph Redpath), Alice Calhoun (Dora Esparth), Mary Alden (Aunt Maggie), Eulalie Jensen (Lady Burdon), Wilfrid North (Mr. Lethem), and Otto Matieson (Egbert Hunt).

Helene (left) and Dolores Costello, the beautiful daughters of Maurice Costello, famous screen star in Vitagraph pictures a decade ago, who have just been signed to long contracts by Warner Brothers.

Columbia in New Studio

Advices from Harry Cohn state that Columbia Pictures has moved into the Clune Studios at 5350 Melrose avenue, Hollywood. This famous studio has seen many big productions made on its spacious stages, among them being some of the earlier Douglas Fairbanks productions. The Waldorf Studios which Columbia occupied last year proved too small to house the comprehensive production program of eighteen pictures which they are undertaking for coming season of 1925-26

Lloyd Given Big Reception on His Trip Across Country

IF Harold Lloyd never knew the hold he has on the public of the United States and Canada he learned it on the trip he has just concluded to New York, the first half of a much needed vacation for the comedian and his young wife, Mildred Davis, which is yet to take them through the South, over to Havana and back to Los Angeles by way of New Orleans. The Lloyds are accompanied on their trip by John L. Murphy, production manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation; Mrs. Murphy and Joe Reddy, publicity representative.

Lloyd made his first trip through Canada. At every railroad station there was a crowd waiting to greet him, and in Banff, Alberta, a special detachment of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police extended the greetings of the world famous force to Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd.

On the way East the Lloyd party made short stopovers in Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, Victoria, B. C., and Vancouver, B. C. They also took their first look at Niagara Falls and visited Toronto.

In Tacoma, where Mrs. Lloyd went to school, virtually the entire population turned out to greet the party. The young film couple almost caused a riot when they visited the Stadium High School where Mrs. Lloyd had received part of her education.

That evening Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd met Governor Hartley of the State of Washington, who gave Harold an inspiring presentation to the annual Convention of the Washington Loggers Association, composed of many of the most prominent men in the Northwest.

In Victoria, Lloyd was accorded another great reception. Hundreds of people thronged the dock on the arrival of the Canadian Pacific steamer from Seattle, and it was only with the assistance of the C. P. R. police that the comedian and his party were able to reach waiting automobiles. In order to avoid a similar reception in Vancouver, the party arrived early in the morning, and after a hurried sightseeing tour of the city, boarded the Toronto Limited. Just before train time a crowd tried to locate Lloyd but his natural disguise, the absence of his horn-rimmed spectacles, completely outwitted the throng.

Lloyd was anxious to slip in and out of Canada without any formality, as he was making the trip for a badly needed rest. He was not successful in his plan, for big crowds greeted his party at Medicine Hat, Kamloofs, Calgary, Bassano, Brandon, Winnipeg, Kenora and Schreiber. At the last named place he was aroused from his drawing room at seven in the morning to greet several thousand of his fans.

Inter-Ocean Buys Foreign Rights on "9 3-5 Seconds"

A. G. STEEN, who is rapidly extending his producing and distributing activities in the independent field, announces that he has just completed a deal with Lacy W. Kastner, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, 218 West Forty-second Street, New York, under the terms of which the entire foreign distribution rights on his all-star six-reel feature, "9⅗ Seconds," featuring Charley Paddock, the world champion sprinter, and also the Hunt Miller series of two-reel westerns, starring Tom Forman, the famous frontiersman and stunt rider, will be handled by the Inter-Ocean organization.

The Paddock picture was directed by Lloyd B. Carlton and includes a notable cast headed by Otis Harlan, George Fawcett, Lawson Butt, Helen Ferguson and including G. Raymond Nye, Peggy Shafer, Caroline Putney and Jack Giddings. Paddock, who is starred, is now on a tour around the world at the invitation of various governments, and plans to race the best men in the different countries he visits, from which it is anticipated much publicity will result.

According to the announcement, "9⅗ Seconds" will shortly be offered for territorial distribution in the independent market, its release here to be timed with the initial press reports about Paddock's world tour.

Premiere in New York

"Friendly Enemies," Starring Weber and Fields, to Open at Colony

The world premiere of the Belasco production, "Friendly Enemies," starring Weber and Fields, will be made at B. S. Moss' new Colony Theatre on Broadway, New York, beginning Sunday, May 3.

In this picturization of Sam Shipman and Aaron Hoffman's famous play, Joe Weber plays the role interpreted on the speaking stage by Louis Mann and Lew Fields portrays the part originally created with great success by Sam Bernard.

"Friendly Enemies" was directed by George Melford. The cast includes Virginia Brown Faire, Lucille Lee Stewart, Jack Mulhall, Stuart Holmes and Eugenie Besserer.

New Eddie Gordon Comedy

Century announces the release this week of a new Eddie Gordon comedy. It is "Itching for Revenge" and was made with the fun-film favorite by Noel Smith, well known comedy director. Larry Richardson and Bartine Burkett play the chief supporting roles. It is the second Eddie Gordon comedy to be released by Century. It is being released through all Universal exchanges.

U.'s Mobile Studio Unit Begins Country-wide Tour

DURING the coming week, at the instance of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, that company will send out a remarkable caravan. It is a mobile studio unit, consisting of a powerful auto-type tractor and a "bungalow on wheels," fitted out as a complete living room and film laboratory. Its mission will be to visit all the principal cities in the United States and to make pictures in these cities for historic record.

Starting from Universal City, the big Universal studio plant just outside of Los Angeles, the mobile film unit, or Mobile Mansion, as Universal call it because of the completeness of its appointments, will proceed northward to San Francisco, thence to Portland, Tacoma, Seattle and Spokane, and then eastward through Salt Lake City, Denver and Omaha, and continuing to the Atlantic Coast with frequent stops. It is expected to reach New York next September. From New York it will swing through the Southern States and return to California via Louisiana, Texas and Arizona. The entire trip will take at least a year, according to present estimates.

C. E. Holah, a veteran film executive, will be in charge of the tour and will accompany the unit. As advance agent for the outfit, Garrett Graham, formerly publicity director for the Hal Roach studios, will officiate. He is now in San Francisco arranging for the first stop of the strange caravan.

Carl Laemmle's idea in sending out this touring studio to the country's principal cities is in line with the patriotic slogan, "See America First." He believes that he could leave no greater historical legacy to posterity than a complete motion picture record of the leading cities as they are today. In each city where a stop is made, a print of the picture taken there will be shown in one of the local theatres and then placed in the city's archives as a record for future generations.

The Mobile Mansion is a unique outfit. It was constructed at a cost of $28,000 for use in Universal's forthcoming Jewel picture, "California Straight Ahead," in which Reginald Denny is starred.

The Mobile Mansion includes both tractor and trailer. The tractor is a powerful Hall-Scott-Fagoel truck motor of 120 horsepower, built into a regulation automobile roadster type body, but of much larger proportions. The driver's controls are the same as those of a passenger car save for two extra gears for hill climbing.

Sennett-Pathe Comedies

"Tee for Two" and "Butter Fingers" Poke Fun at Popular Sports

Mack Sennett has completed two comedies this week for Pathe distribution. "Tee For Two," is a travesty on golfing and "Butter Fingers," which burlesques baseball. "Tee For Two" is the third comedy featuring Alice Day, supported by Raymond McKee, Thelma Parr, William McCall and Eva Thatcher. The direction was handled by Eddie Cline. "Butter Fingers" was directed by Del Lord. The cast is composed of Billy Bevan, Madeline Burlock, Ruth Taylor, Andy Clyde, Kewpie Morgan and "Pal."

Myton Made Scenario Editor

B. P. Fineman, production manager of the F. B. O. Studios in Hollywood, announces the appointment of Fred Kennedy Myton to the post of West Coast Scenario Editor of Film Booking Offices.

Mr. Myton is well known in the industry as the author and adaptor of many of F. B. O.'s recent box-office successes, including several Evelyn Brent stories, among them "Alias Mary Flynn" and "Forbidden Cargo."

New Wanda Wiley Comedy

"Getting Trimmed," Wanda Wiley's highest praised two-reel Century Comedy, is being released through all Universal Exchanges. It has been pre-released in a number of big first run theatres, and has the reputation of being one of the best comedies of the year.

Hold "Charley's Aunt"

Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Holds Christie Feature Over for Second Week

Another distinction was added to the accumulation of honors for "Charley's Aunt" last week when the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee held the Al. Christie feature for a second week's run.

During the past year, only one other picture, "Over the Hill," has been able to stand up for more than one week in Milwaukee.

The critics lavished glowing praise on the picture, saying in part:

"Just about the nicest thing you can say about a picture is that it lives up to its advance advertising. Well, we can say that with good heart and gracious hand of 'Charley's Aunt.' It is a riot and a scream."—Milwaukee Journal.

"It is a rollicking picture and its humor is so clean that you could take your minister as well as your youngest child without embarrassment.

"A good, clean comedy with a riot of laughs."—News.

Harris Joins De Mille

Elmer Harris, well known playwright, scenarist and motion picture producer, is the latest entertainment expert to sign a contract with Cecil B. De Mille under that producers' new plan of independent operation.

Mr. Harris has signed a contract to be production editor of five pictures a year at the De Mille studio. The other five of the current De Mille supervision schedule will be handled by Production Editor Bertram Millhauser.

Pick "Forgotten Men" Cast

With the signing of John Harrington for "Whitey" one of the principal roles in Herbert Brenon's forthcoming picture, "The Street of Forgotten Men," Paramount announces that the cast is complete.

The featured players are Percy Marmont, Mary Brian and Neil Hamilton. In the supporting cast are several players from the legitimate theatre.

"White Thunder" Completed

Ben Wilson, director and producer of the F. B. O. series starring Yakima Canutt, champion cowboy, came back from location last week with the final shots on "White Thunder" completed. "White Thunder" was formerly called 'The White Vaquero."

It Speaks for Itself

Warner Brothers' New York office was quite elated over the receipt of the following telegram this week after the opening of "Recompense," the famous sequel to "Simon Called Peter" by Robert Keable, at the Forum Theatre, Los Angeles:

"H. M. Warner:

"'Recompense' broke all existing records Saturday and Sunday. Public and press lauded picture. Look for this to be one of the biggest box office attractions of the season.

Priscilla Dean in Cleveland, O.

The first public appearance of Priscilla Dean in her new "break-in" act for the Hunt Stromberg production, "The Crimson Runner," was made this week at Keith's 105th Street Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, and pronounced a complete success by the newspaper critics.

The premiere of the act and the picture brought out a record attendance and the general impression created is evidenced in the following excerpts from the Cleveland daily newspapers:

"Priscilla Dean is even more lovable in person than in pictures if the tremendous ovation given her by the audiences at Keith's 105th Street is to be taken as a criterion."—Cleveland News.

"Miss Dean's reception was literally an ovation. 'The Crimson Runner' is an actionful melodrama and the audience expressed its approval by audible outbursts of enthusiasm."—Cleveland Press.

Eight weeks of personal appearances have been booked for Miss Dean by Producers Distributing Corporation and the itinerary will carry her back to Los Angeles where she will immediately start work in a new Hunt Stromberg production.

Next Thompson Production

Fred Thompson has romped through his latest Western vehicle for F. B. O. "The Bandit's Baby" and is now preparing to film "Sir Peigan Passes," an original story by William C. Tuttle. It is a Western story with much comedy, in which Fred and his famous white horse "Silver King" take a leading part. Marion Jackson, who has written the continuities for all of the successful Fred Thompson productions, wrote the script for his new vehicle. The cast has not yet been completed.

Comedy Companies on Location

Two of Hal Roach's Groups Quit the Spacious Studios

There are two less comedy units working on the Hal Roach lot this week on Pathe comedies with the leaving of the Charley Chase and Clyde Cook units for outside locations.

The Charley Chase company with thirty-five people has left for San Diego for boat and harbor scenes of the current Chase vehicle, directed by Leo McCarey. The players will make scenes on board the Emma Alexander in San Diego and Los Angeles harbor.

The Clyde Cook unit, making the first of Cook's Hal Roach starring comedies, has gone to Camp Hearn, near San Diego, to obtain backgrounds for the cavalry station scenes in the story. Cook portrays an underdog of military misadventure in his first Roach vehicle, which is under the direction of Thomas Buckingham.

New Ben Wilson Serial

In line with the policy of furnishing the independent field with a complete line-up of first-class box office attractions, J. Charles Davis, 2nd, announces the completion of negotiations with Ben Wilson for a serial co-starring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber for early release, by the Davis Distributing Division.

The title of the serial will be "The Power God," and Ben Wilson will not only take the leading role but the entire production will be made under his supervision, the actual direction being in the hands of one of the best known serial directors on the Coast.

Ballin Writes Novel

Hugo Ballin, well-known motion picture director who produced Astor Distributing Corporation's second film, "The Shining Adventure," is author of a new book published by Watt and Cmpany. The title of the novel is "The Broken Toy," and book reviewers have praised it as an excellent piece of work in which Hollywood, which Ballin knows very well, figures quite prominently as the locals of the story. The book was completed several days before Ballin started work on "The Shining Adventure," and is one of the reasons why this popular director has been away from the screen for many months.

Many Pictures in Production At Universal City Studios

WITH six features in actual production, four in the cutting rooms, and eleven in preparation for immediate work, Universal City is well along on what Carl Laemmle has declared will be the biggest year in the company's history.

This does not include two comedy companies, one of which is shooting, and the other cutting one picture and preparing to shoot another.

The six pictures in production are: "Peacock Feathers," featuring Jacqueline Logan and Cullen Landis, directed by Svend Gade. "The Titans," starring House Peters, directed by Edward Sloman. "The Home Maker," featuring Alice Joyce and Clive Brook, under the direction of King Baggot. "Perils of the Primitive," a serialization of "Swiss Family Robinson," featuring Joe Bonomo, with Francis Ford directing. "The Border Sheriff," starring Jack Hoxie, under the direction of Robert North Bradbury. "The Dynamiter's Daughter," starring Josie Sedgwick, directed by Ernst Laemmle.

Pictures in the cutting rooms are: "The Teaser," starring Laura La Plante, directed by William A. Seiter; "I'll Show You the Town," starring Reginald Denny, directed by Harry Pollard; "A Daughter of the Dons," starring Hoot Gibson, directed by Herbert Blache, and "The Phantom of the Opera," starring Lon Chaney, Mary Philbin and Norman Kerry.

The eleven pictures in preparation include: "Doubling For Cupid," starring Laura La Plante, directed by Frank Griffin; "My Old Dutch," directed by Larry Trimble; an as yet untitled feature, directed by Charles Brabin; "Sporting Life," directed by Maurice Tourneur; "Looking For Trouble" and "Peace Medicine," starring Jack Hoxie and directed by Cliff Smith; "Kings Up," directed by Edward Laemmle; "Scarlet Streak," directed by Henry McRae; "The Circus Cyclone," directed by Al Rogell; "Red Dawn," directed by Harold Shumate.

Richard Smith is directing Charles Puffy in an untitled two-reel comedy, and C. Richard Wallace is cutting one picture and preparing for another in the "Sweet Sixteen" series featuring Arthur Lake, Olive Hasbrouck and Eddie Clayton.

To Start on Royal Series

It is expected that production on the Royal series of six pictures to be distributed by the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation will commence May 1. William Russell will be featured in the earlier productions and the cast will be hand picked. Complete casts will be announced later.

International News Reel Gets Complete Pictures of Rum War

INTERNATIONAL NEWS has scored again, this time with one of the most interesting and noteworthy series of timely pictures ever obtained by a news reel. It is a complete camera record of the operations of the rum-runners off the coast of New York and New Jersey, and the activities of the Coast Guard in attempting to stamp out this traffic.

The pictures were obtained by U. K. Whipple, one of International's star cameramen, after many weeks of difficult work, much of which was in disguise and at great risk. Both the Coast Guard service and the rum fleet personnel are shy of publicity, both concerning themselves and their methods. This series of moving pictures, which are included in International's News No. 32, are said to be the first and exclusive pictures of the rum war.

Whipple was assigned to the task of getting these pictures about four months ago. The job had been tried many times before by International, as well as by others. Whipple worked night and day, and even enlisted as a member of the crew aboard a rum-runner in order to get comprehensive pictures of the blockade activities from the rum-runner's point of view. He also did service aboard a government boat to get the rum-chaser's side.

The pictures include spirited chases by the government boats, the capture of liquor carriers and the lining up of the captured crews. The activities of the Coast Guard in salvaging the illicit cargoes, often jettisoned during the chase, and the interning of the captured rum-runners, also are shown.

Pictures taken at the rum fleet, twelve miles or more from shore, show the visiting rum-runners, the transferring of hundreds of cases of whiskey from trans-oceanic ships to the fast speed boats of the blockade runners, and the precautions taken by the bootleggers to guard against surprise by the Coast Guard service.

Assembles Big Cast

A cast of Well known players has been assembled by B. P. Schulberg for the featured roles in "My Lady's Lips," John Goodrich's story which James P. Hogan is directing on the Schulberg lot in Hollywood. The principals selected for this society drama are Clara Bow, Frank Keenan, Alyce Mills, William Powell, Ford Sterling, John Sainpolis and Mathew Betz.

"My Lady's Lips" will be the tenth and last picture to be released by B. P. Schulberg Productions for the current season. The tentative date set for it is June 1.

Scenes from the B. P. Schulberg production, "Go Straight," with Gladys Hulette, Owen Moore, George Fawcett and Mary Carr.

Research Department Head Signed by Cecil B. DeMille

FRED KLEY, general manager of the De Mille Studio, announces that Mrs. Elizabeth McGaffey has been signed as head of the Research Department of the De Mille organization.

Mrs. McGaffey has held a similar position with Famous Players-Lasky for the past ten years, having conducted research on many big productions, including "Joan the Woman," "The Ten Commandments" and "Peter Pan."

In obtaining data to make "The Ten Commandments" perfect in detail, Mrs. McGaffey spent months of study. She will take charge of the research department of the De Mille Studio within the near future.

Garrett Ford Signed

Garrett Ford, scenarist, was signed under a long-term contract this week, to write scenarios for the De Mille Studio. He has had conspicuous success in motion picture writing, some of his originals being "The Fire Patrol," "Ports of Call," "Wickedness Preferred" and "In Fast Company."

Ford adapted "The Coming of Amos," from the novel by William J. Locke, and will assist Elmer Harris in the production details of the picture, which will be directed by Paul Sloane.

Harris. Sloane and Ford left New York for Los Angeles this week and in collaboration they will work out the final details of the Rod La Rocque starring vehicle en route.

De Mille Fashion Angles

That the famous fashion angles of the De Mille production will be continued in the pictures to be released through Producers' Distributing Corporation is confirmed in the announcement that five striking evening gowns, each radically different from the others, will be worn by Leatrice Joy in "Hell's Highroad," the first picture to be produced at the De Mille Studio.

The very latest motifs are carried out in Miss Joy's wardrobe, which includes everything from negligees to sport clothes in addition to evening wear.

Each article of wearing apparel has an individuality expressed by the cleverness of Mlle. Dallet, who has designed models for some of the most famous Parisian dressmakers.

Enters Fifth Week

Monty Banks enters his fifth week of production on his second production for the Associated Exhibitors which he is making at Culver City. The title of the new picture is "Keep Smiling." The supporting cast is headed by Anne Corwall and Robert Edeson.

"Off the Highway"

Tom Forman to Direct Hunt Stromberg Picture for Pro.-Dis.-Co.

It isn't necessarily the modern stories which make the best motion picture material. "Off the Highway," Hunt Stromberg's latest all-star special, will be an adaptation of Tom Gallon's novel, "Tatterly." This author belongs to the literary period which followed shortly after Dicken's era, but, having imbued his characters with all the gestures of reality, they are as living as they were when the authors created them.

Tom Forman has been chosen by Hunt Stromberg to direct "Off the Highway," because he has the rare qualifications for preserving all the fine feeling of a story and still adding the deft modern touches which mark a picture as unusual and distinctive. Mr. Forman was an actor before he began his successful career with the megaphone.

The production will be released as a Hunt Stromberg special, by Producers Distributing Corporation shortly after August first.

May McAvoy an Arrow Star

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Pictures Corporation, announces the acquisition by Dallas Fitzgerald of May McAvoy as the star in the first of a series of four Dallas M. Fitzgerald productions to be released by Arrow Pictures Corporation. The picture will be of the society type made from a well-known story.

Miss McAvoy recently completed her work in Metro-Goldwyn's "Ben Hur."

Scenes from "Lilies of the Street," a Banner production to be released through F. B. O., featuring Virginia Lee Corbin, Johnny Walker and Irma Harrison.

Strong Program Announced By Pathe, Week of May 10

"SUNKEN SILVER," Pathe's latest serial production, based on Albert Payson Terhune's novel, "Black Caesar's Clan," and Charley Chase in a Hal Roach comedy, "Looking for Sally," are the principal releases on the Pathe program for the week of May 10.

"Sunken Silver" starts its release this week. The story from which the serial was adapted had a very large sale in book form and numbers hundreds of thousands among its readers. Four months' time was taken in the making of this production, which was filmed in Florida. A strong cast supports Walter Miller and Allene Ray in the featured roles. The screen adaptation was made by Frank Leon Smith and the direction was in the hands of George Seitz.

The Charley Chase comedy, "Looking for Sally," leads the Pathe comedy offerings for the week. In this picture, directed by Leo McCarey, the popular young screen comedian is strongly supported by a cast headed by Katherine Grant, Noah Young, Jules Mendel and Leo Willis. The story of the comedy is based on a young man's search for a girl he is engaged to marry, but hasn't seen for years.

Hal Roach is also presenting a one-reel comedy on the Pathe program for the week of May 10. The title of the picture is "Grief in Bagdad." The cast of players in this picture comprises Earl Mohan, Billy Engle, Dolores Johnston, Katherine Grant, William Gillespie and Leo Willis. The production was made under the direction of Ross Lederman.

The fourth chapter of "The Origin of Man" series is the featured subject in the Pathe Review No. 19. This is an instalment of the Roy Chapman Andrews Expedition into Mongolia and consists of interesting views of "The Sacred City."

A cartoon novelty, "The Making of Man," by Hy Mayer, and a Pathecolor of the City of Washington in "Visiting Our Own America" series, complete the Review.

The Aesop's Film Fable for the week is entitled "Darkest Africa." Paul Terry's cartoon zoo characters center their little screen comedy in the jungle land of Africa.

Topics of the Day No. 19 and Pathe News Nos. 40 and 41 complete the Pathe program for the week.

Completes First Comedy Drama

The first of the new series of comedy dramas starring Lefty Flynn, similar to those in which the late Wallie Reid rose to fame, was completed this week at the F. B. O. Studios in Hollywood under the supervision of Harry Garson, of the Globe Pictures Corp. It is called "Speed Wild" and reveals the erstwhile Yale football star as a traffic cop with a romantic turn of mind.

The story was an original by H. H. Van Loan and the continuity was written by Paul Gangelin.

Four 1st National Pictures Enter Production During May

FOUR new productions are scheduled by First National Pictures to go into work during May. The number may be increased.

In Hollywood, on May 15, work will start on "The Viennese Medley," Edith O'Shaughnessy's novel of Vienna before, during and after the war, under the editorial supervision of June Mathis. Kurt Rehfeld will direct. Anna Q. Nilsson and May Allison have been engaged for leading feminine roles. It will be released as a special.

Photography is now expected to start on the new Corinne Griffith picture, "Classified," from Edna Ferber's short story, on May 7. Supporting the star will be Jack Mulhall and Charles Murray. Al Santell will direct.

Two productions to be filmed under the supervision of Earl Hudson will soon get under way in the East. One of these is "The Half-Way Girl," from Ferdinand Reyher's story, "The Eternal Lamps," in which Doris Kenyon will be featured. This picture is scheduled to enter production on May 1, with John Francis Dillon directing. Besides Miss Kenyon, the cast includes Lloyd Hughes, Hobart Bosworth and Tully Marshall.

The new stellar vehicle for Milton Sills, "The Come-Back," from M. D. C. Crawford's new novel, is expected to go into production some time during May. No definite date has yet been set. Joseph Poland and Earle Snell are preparing the continuity.

Tom Mix, the famous Fox star (left), put on the gloves aboard the S.S. Aquitania, when enroute to Europe, and amused the passengers with half an hour of quick stepping and fancy boxing.

"That Royle Girl"

D. W. Griffith's First Paramount Picture on New Contract

D. W. Griffith's first picture for Paramount will be "That Royle Girl," by Edwin Balmer, a serial now appearing in the Hearst-Cosmopolitan Magazine. This was announced yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production.

Mr. Griffith is engaged in filming his final production for United Artists, "Sally of the Sawdust," for which all interior scenes have been completed. The exteriors will remain to be taken.

"That Royle Girl" is a dramatic story of the conflict between the old Americanism of the bluebloods of New England, and the vivid new Americanism born of the many bloods that mingle in Chicago.

Production will start at the Paramount Long Island studio soon after the completion of "Sally of the Sawdust."

Progress in Photography

Remarkable Camera Used in the Filming of Emerson Hough's "Ship of Souls" for Associated Exhibitors

A step forward in the field of motion picture photography was made by Max O. Miller, head of the Stereoscopic Productions, Inc., in the producing of the Emerson Hough story, "Ship of Souls," for Associated Exhibitors distribution.

Mr. Miller, who is noted as a producer, is also the inventor of the Stereoscopic camera that eliminates distortion, and gives the player a rounded figure as well as depth to the scene. It also prevents backgrounds being out of focus. This remarkable camera was used extensively by Max O. Miller in the filming of "Ship of Souls," and the release of this Associated Exhibitors' picture is awaited with great interest by motion picture experts. This is the first production of feature-length that the producer has used his process on.

"Ship of Souls" is a dramatic picturization of the widely-circulated novel by Emerson Hough, with its action centered around the Great North country. Charles Miller directed the picture, which presents an unusually strong cast headed by Bert Lytell, Cyril Chadwick, Lillian Rich, Russell Simpson and Earl Metcalf. Other players appearing are Tom Santschi, Ynez Seabury, Lillian Leighton, and Mrs. Jack Mulhall.

"King of the Rodeo" Completed

"King of the Rodeo" will be the title of the fourth Yakima Canutt Western production just completed by Ben Wilson for F. B. O. Canutt, one of the greatest horsemen in the world, personally chose the title. In addition he proclaimed his eagerness to defend his title against any rider alive today and to put up a side bet in the bargain. Riding and roping and bull-dogging will be colorful features of "King of the Rodeo," it is stated.

Wray to Direct "Marriage"

To John Griffith Wray, former director general for Thomas Ince, falls the enviable task of picturizing for Fox "Marriage," by H. G. Wells, celebrated English novelist, and the first story from the pen of that author which he has allowed to be given a screen presentation.

Sering D. Wilson & Co., Inc., Announce 1925-26 Program

AN announcement has just been received from Sering D. Wilson, President of Sering D. Wilson & Co., Inc., outlining their production and distribution activities for 1925-1926. This company specializes in color pictures but not the hand colored type which has represented practically all of the colored film shown on the screen in recent years. In the Wilson pictures, special process is used which includes the actual photographing in true colors.

"In arranging our releasing schedule for 1925-1926," says Mr. Wilson, "we have provided for a reliable, dependable output of short length features in color to be available on the basis of two each week and our production plans will include a series of units tentatively classified as 'Ebenezer Ebony Comedies', 'Kid Noah Comedies', 'Color Shots', 'Karlo Kolor Komics', 'The Wonderbook Series', 'New Redhead Satires', and 'Color Melodies'.

"In addition to the above, we are arranging for a series of eight special productions which will be built around exceptionally beautiful color possibilities and will be a distinct innovation on the screen.

"Naturally we recognize the fact that inevitably certain of these units will prove of greater general popularity than others and our productions scheduled and facilities have been purposely made most flexible in character in order that we may increase the number of subjects which prove most popular but always having in mind our fundamental policy of being able to offer to exhibitors two high quality short length features in color each week for the coming year.

"In addition to our short feature program we are negotiating for a total of not less than eight special feature-length productions for release during the coming year. We have already completed the filming of the Richard Harding Davis novel 'The White Mice' in which Jacqueline Logan and William Powell are featured. This picture was directed by E. H. Griffith, who is at present engaged in cutting and editing it.

"The positives will be printed and developed by the special processes owned and controlled by Sering D. Wilson & Co., Inc. We feel that 'The White Mice' offers a distinctly unique attraction to exhibitors in that it is a famous story by one of the world's greatest writers, portrayed by a most excellent cast and Mr. Griffith's direction has been almost inspirational. With all these factors taken into consideration, plus the additional beauty given to the finished product by our color processes, we are confident that this, our initial feature production, will be most favorably received."

Unusual Boston Booking

A most unusual booking in the city of Boston was closed recently by Producers Distributing Corporation when the Tremont Temple booked the Al. Christie feature "Charley's Aunt" for a four weeks engagement. This engagement follows a three weeks showing of the production at The Modern, The Beacon and The Fenway Theatres and it will mark the first instance in which The Tremont Temple has played a picture after these theatres.

O. L. Meister, of the Milwaukee White House Theatre, sends a message to the exhibitors of the world. He visited Universal City recently as a guest of Carl Laemmle, and declared that never would he mind being held up for Hoot Gibson's pictures, as they always bring in the shekels

Schlesinger Says Europe Demands Warner Pictures

ON his return to the home office this week from a seven months' trip to Europe, Gus Schlesinger, in charge of Warner Bros.' Foreign Department, announced that all countries where motion pictures are shown had been sold the product of his company. He states that while there was very little production in Europe, outside of Ufa in Berlin, there was an effort being made to produce international pictures. That is, German and English interests, and French and English interests are trying to get together in combines to produce and fight American pictures which were being shown in 80 per cent of the motion picture houses of Great Britain and the Continent.

This effort, he stated, had met with very little success up to date, because of the popularity of the American product, and although Germany was making every effort to hold the foreign market for home-made product and stem the American invasion, he did not think the movement would get very far, as the foreign public was demanding the American brand.

Warner's product, he stated, led the demand in all foreign countries. Rin-Tin-Tin, said Mr. Schlesinger, was the premier star of Europe. In Germany, he stated the Warner's dog was particularly a favorite, and Marie Prevost and Monte Blue were in big demand.

In Paris, according to Mr. Schlesinger, "Where the North Begins," with Rin-Tin-Tin, had been running at the Cameo on the Boulevard for six weeks and the engagement would probably be extended to eight weeks.

The Establishment of Jacques Haik, 63 Ave des Champs Elysees, Paris, France, he said, had taken all of the Warner 20 Screen Classics of the 1923-24 season. Jacques also had a seven weeks' option through Mr. Schlesinger for the 20 of the 1924-25 season, and due to disposing of the 1923-24 product in such rapid-fire progress, Mr. Haik exercised his option for the 1924-25 product in three weeks, instead of waiting seven weeks.

Since taking over the 1924-25 product, which occurred when Mr. Schlesinger left Paris for his return to the states, Mr. Haik cabled the sale of fifteen productions for the territory of France, Belgium, Switzerland and Egypt. Mr. Haik controls the market of France, Belgium, Switzerland, Egypt, Spain and Portugal.

In London, Gaumont also has closed for the twenty-six first announced by Warners, and is waiting further word on the later announcement of forty to discuss options, and also on whatever other product Warner Bros. acquired through taking over the Vitagraph Company of America.

Mr. Schlesinger released the 1924-25 Warner product in Berlin direct and stated that the exhibitors in Germany were calling for all the Warner pictures they could get. Ufa, he stated, was working hard on production to meet the American competition, but in France and England only scattered pictures were being made.

He said that the foreign producers could not see spending four or five hundred thousand francs to make a picture, and then probably have no market for it outside of their own country, when they could buy better American pictures much cheaper. Consequently, he stated that with the exception of the interests, who were trying to arrange international production, every one abroad is hungry for American pictures and stars.

Before leaving for the United States, Mr. Schlesinger was tendered a dinner by Gaumont of London, which was attended by twenty of its branch managers and forty of its salesmen. At this time, after talking Warner product for fifty-two minutes, Mr. Schlesinger offered two prizes—one of $300 and one of $200, for the best showing of salesmen handling Warner Bros.' product.

The British trade papers also tendered a dinner to Mr. Schlesinger before he left for America.

Costello Girls With Warner

Beautiful Daughters of Former Vitagraph Star Follow Father's Footsteps

Just about the time Warner Bros. bought the Vitagraph Company of America in which Maurice Costello was at one time one of the best known and earliest stars of the company, his daughters Dolores and Helen, popularly known as the "Costello Girls," were affixing their signature to a contract with Warner Bros. in Los Angeles.

Jack Warner signed both of the young women just two or three days before Warners took over the company that their father helped to make famous.

The beautiful girls have appeared in vaudeville and on the speaking stage. They have been coached by their father, who is now in vaudeville, and are actresses of considerable talent as well as possessing youth and charm.

It is the intention of the Warners to develop the young women for the screen and assign them to prominent roles.

Maurice Costello, their father, was one of the best known of the old school screen players, and had a great following in his day. Of late he has been giving most of his attention to vaudeville.

New Lubitsch Picture

Included in Warner Bros. Releases for Current Month

Releases by Warner Bros. for April include the long awaited "Kiss Me Again," directed by Ernst Lubitsch, and "The Woman Hater," adapted by Ruby M. Ayres, from "The Eleventh Virgin," by Dorothy Day.

The Lubitsch production is a comedy written by Hans Kraely, featuring Monte Blue and Marie Prevost, supported by Clara Bow, John Roche and Willard Louis. It is a comedy of Parisian life in which Mr. Lubitsch has taken the eternal triangle and handled it in an entirely new way, depending upon comedy to break its corners.

"The Woman Hater" was directed by James Flood and features Helene Chadwick. Clive Brook, the young English actor recently acquired by the Warners, plays opposite her and they are supported by John Harron, Helen Dunbar and Dale Fuller.

"Phantom of the Opera" Has Big San Francisco Premiere

"THE PHANTOM OF THE OPERA," Carl Laemmle's super picture, made by Rupert Julian from Gaston Leroux's celebrated novel, with Lon Chaney in the sinister role of the Phantom, had its world premiere last Sunday in the Curran Theatre, San Francisco, and established new box office records for that theatre, as well as meeting with high praise from both the press and the public.

The premiere was featured by an elaborate prologue and the presence of several of the popular stars who acted in the film. Among these stars, who journeyed to San Francisco from Los Angeles for the opening night were Lon Chaney, Norman Kerry, Mary Philbin, Arthur Edmund Carewe and Gibson Gowland. Kerry and Miss Philbin have the two leading roles in the picture next to the Phantom.

The presentation included a scene from the opera "Faust" which is enacted in part in the plot of the film, and a ballet scene adapted from the Walpurgis Ballet of "Faust." The music from "Faust" supplied the background of the music for the picture presentation. An orchestra of enlarged proportions was used for this.

The San Francisco newspaper critics were especially enthusiastic over "The Phantom," hailing it as one of the best super pictures ever seen. The San Francisco public sided with the critics in praising the work of Chaney, Miss Philbin and Kerry.

Dudley Burrows, critic of the San Francisco Call, referred to the picture as "a master film which is epochal." His contemporary on the San Francisco Herald, W. F. Elliott, had the following to say: "An immensely striking picture, and I think in many ways the best of the super pictures I have yet seen."

A. F. Gillaspey of the San Francisco Bulletin said: "Even from a cold critical standpoint, 'The Phantom of the Opera' is a real achievement." Thomas Nunan, of the Examiner, similarly praised the production in the following words: "The picture proved fully worthy of a world premiere in San Francisco and of the celebration with which we received it."

"Black Cyclone" Premiere At the Capitol, New York

"BLACK CYCLONE," the latest Hal Roach feature production, starring "Rex," King of Wild Horses, will have its world premiere at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, the week of May 10 or May 17.

This is the second production of this type made by Hal Roach and its presentation in Broadway's largest motion picture theatre strikes a new note in screen entertainment. The picture is an absolutely new departure in film production, and with the facilities of presentation offered by the Capitol Theatre, "Black Cyclone" is destined to be one of Broadway's outstanding pictures of the year.

A statement this week from the Pathe home office announces that the Capitol Theatre engagement of "Black Cyclone" is the first of a series of special key city runs, which are being arranged with elaborate exploitation and presentation effects with a view to demonstrate the unusual box office power of this feature when promoted in accordance with approved showmanship methods.

The plan of preceding national release with a series of special exploitation runs is a departure from the Pathe policy in the handling of features, but Pathe officials point out that the unusual character of "Black Cyclone" justifies the innovation in every respect.

Following the signing of "Black Cyclone" for its world premiere at the Capitol Theatre, Major Edward Bowes, managing director, stated that he had been unusually impressed by the picture at a private screening.

"A picture of this kind deserves a Broadway representation of the highest type," Mr. Bowes stated.

"Shore Leave" Begun

Richard Barthelmess Starts Work at Aquarium, New York

Director John S. Robertson shot the first scenes of Inspiration's new Richard Barthelmess picture for First National release, "Shore Leave," at the Aquarium, New York, last week. This is said to be the first screen appearance of the Aquarium. The interior scenes will be made at the Tec-Art Studio in West 44th Street, New York, with exteriors on board various battleships of the Atlantic fleet and on the Massachusetts coast.

"Shore Leave" is an adaptation of the play by Hubert Osborne, in which David Belasco presented Frances Starr a few seasons ago. In the screen version Mr. Barthelmess has the big role, that of "Bilge" Smith, the romantic gob-hero of the story. He will have the co-operation of the United States Navy in the making of this picture.

Franchise Holders Enthusiastic

Harold Bell Wright's latest novel to reach the screen as a Principal Picture is proving itself an excellent box office attraction, according to franchise holders. That "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent," which reached the high-water mark as a best-seller book, is again reaping the popularity it won for itself, is evidenced by the fact that theatres booking the picture have not been averse in writing in their satisfaction.

Totman Joins Meador

Scenarist of "Queen Calafia" Was Film Editor, Impresario, Theatre Publicist

Llewellyn Totman has joined the staff of J. E. D. Meador's Trucraft Pictures Corporation as scenario writer. He has completed the adaptation and continuity of "Queen Calafia," Blasco Ibanez's novel, which will be Meador's first Trucraft production.

Totman, who is 21, is one of the youngest screen writers, and before entering the Metro publicity department under Meador a year and a half ago had a varied experience in theatricals in the Middle West.

When he was 17 he held the titles of dramatic editor, photoplay editor and literary editor of the Duluth News Tribune. A little less than two years of that gave him his fill of newspaper work and he became an impresario. He brought to Duluth Geraldine Farrar, Ruth Draper on two occasions, and several other attractions. For a period he managed the tour of a concert artist in the South.

He press-agented the annual All-Star Concert Course in Duluth, and later became publicity representative for Clinton & Meyers Enterprises there. A year and a half ago he came to New York and joined Metro under "Jack" Meador, who recently left the Metro-Goldwyn organization to produce independently.

Dempsey in New York

To Complete "Manhattan Madness" for Associated Exhibitors

Jack Dempsey, accompanied by his wife, Estelle Taylor, and his director, John McDermott, arrived in New York last week to make the final scenes in his Associated Exhibitors production "Manhattan Madness."

The heavyweight champion was met at the depot by a score of sport writers and newspaper photographers, in addition to a committee from the Associated Exhibitors headed by J. S. Woody and Oscar Price, the producer of the picture. Many columns of newspaper space in the New York dailies were devoted to the champion and his picture because of the public interest in his plans for coming fistic encounters.

More Exhibitors Thank Vitagraph For Initiating Tax-Free Music Cue Service

Vitagraph continues to receive letters from exhibitors throughout the country, thanking it for its inauguration of a tax-free music cue service to theatres in connection with the distribution of ts attractons.

This letter, written by R. B. Grunauer, assistant general manager of the extensive West Coast Theatres circuit of Los Angeles, to C. M. Hill, Vitagraph's Los Angeles branch manager, was forwarded to New York and is the latest to be received by him at Vitagraph's executive offices in Brooklyn:

"West Coast Theatres, Inc., appreciates Vitagraph's splendid co-operation in regard to the tax-free music cue sheets. We truly believe that many other producers will follow in the footsteps of Vitagraph and use these cue sheets! We compliment you on being the first producer with a tax-free music cue sheet."

Vitagraph decided upon the radical innovation of extending to exhibitors a tax-free music cue service after receiving requests from scores of theatre managers, anxious to be relieved of the burden imposed upon them by the Authors and Composers Association. Members of this organization own copyrights on much standard music, which, in consequence, carries a fix charge for use in cue sheets. Even if a theatre used only one sheet of copyright music in a year it was required to pay a yearly fee of ten cents for each of its seats.

Not only have exhibitors deluged Vitagraph with letters and telegrams thanking it for the relief extended, but numerous organizations of exhibitors have adopted resolutions of commendation and thanks.

North Buys "Lying Wives" for New York and Northern N. J.

BOBBY NORTH, president of the Apollo Film Exchange, who holds the Warner Bros. franchise for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey, has secured the rights for "Lying Wives," an Ivan Abramson Production, for physical distribution for his territory next season.

The Apollo Exchange has been distributing the Warner Bros. product exclusively ever since Bobby North acquired the Warner franchise. The purchase of the New York rights for "Lying Wives" by North, to be released through his exchange, as his first Independent production, created quite a furore in film circles.

The acquisition of "Lying Wives" by Bobby North comes in the form of a precedent for the Apollo Exchange. Mr. North remarked after he made the announcement that "'Lying Wives' is probably the finest domestic drama I have ever had the pleasure to view. The cast holds a roster of six excellent artists, who are each a star in their own right."

"Lying Wives" was written and directed by Ivan Abramson. It is the first of a series of four Ivan Emerald productions to be produced by Ivan Players, Inc. In the cast are such brilliant screen luminaries as Clara Kimball Young, Madge Kennedy, Richard Bennett, Edna Murphy, Niles Welch and J. Barney Sherry.

"Charley's Aunt" Is Splendidly Received At London Premiere

The London premiere of "Charley's Aunt" at The Tivoli on the Strand has called forth the most glowing praise for the production and high tribute to the American producers from the entire English press.

London was the birthplace of this famous farce and the scene of its world record run on the speaking stage. It was in London that Brandon Thomas first produced it as a play over thirty-three years ago, and the run it made there still stands. Naturally the London critics and the public in general were anxious to see how the American motion picture producers would handle their long cherished comedy.. That they were delighted with the treatment it receive in its screen translation by Al. Christie is evidenced in the followng excerpts from the English newspapers:

"One could hardly find a better tribute to the genuine, right-down goodness of 'Charley's Aunt' as a farce than the way in which the familiar but immortal original shows up in this American film."—The London Referee.

"If a critic may confess to having laughed, it is a mere duty to record that I have never seen a film so wholly diverting."—London Evening Standard.

"'Charley's Aunt' is an entertainment that should appeal to the holiday mood of everyone."—London News.

"The film version of the famous old play is quite as good if not better than the original. Indeed the film when we saw it was shown to an accompaniment of laughter that only paused to become more hearty."—London News of the World.

The attendance at The Tivoli indicates that "Charley's Aunt" is in for a run that will rival its London stage record.

How to Use This Chart

First—Booking! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over—and under-length program.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and a fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Why and Wherefore

F. H. Miller, Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Pa., says:

Have been using Mazda for projection, on a 32 volt direct current supply, using a rheostat to control the lamp amperage. Am changing to 110 volt A. C. supply, which I have been advised will necessitate the purchase of a controller to regulate the lamp amperage. Same party told me that the rheostat uses 800 watts and the lamp 900. If that is so, why is it so? Is it because of the difference between A. C. and D. C.? Is there any other means of controlling the lamp amperage besides the controller?

To begin with, the amperage of a Mazda projection lamp must be controlled within very narrow limits. The 900 watt lamp works at capacity at 30 amperes. At 28 it only gives 72 per cent. of its normal illumination, while at 33 it gives illumination 66 per cent. above normal. The former, as you will see, won't do at all because there would not be nearly enough light. The latter also won't do, because of the fact that it would burn the lamp filament out very quickly, and lamps are expensive articles.

Adjustable Rheostat

With a 32 volt supply, either A. C. or D. C., you might be able to regulate the current very well by using a specially built adjustable rheostat which would increase or decrease amperage by half ampere steps, or even by one ampere steps. You could do the same thing on 110 volt supply, either A. C. or D. C. You could do it with an ordinary adjustable rheostat, but the regulation would not be what it should be; also you could use a non-adjustable rheostat of just sufficient capacity to supply the lamp, PROVIDED your supply voltage be absolutely rock steady, BUT there would be a heavy jolt to the lamp at starting, because a rheostat allows a much heavier flow of current when cold than it does when it has heated up.

Then, too, a rheostat would be very expensive on 110 volt supply, because you are taking 30 amperes at 110 volts, or a total of 110 x 30 equals 3,300 watts from the lines, 900 of which ONLY are "consumed" in the lamp the rest, or (3,300—900 equals 2,400 watts), being consumed in the rheostat, where it is dissipated in the form of heat.

"Breaking Down" Voltage

In other words, your lamp circuit must and will take amperage times line voltage from the line. The rheostat MUST consume all this that is not used by the lamp. This is called "breaking down the voltage." In fact what the rheostat does is "break down" or reduce the line voltage to the value which will force just 30 amperes through the resistance of the lamp, and in doing this it consumes the difference between amperage times the voltage of the lamp and amperage times the voltage of the difference between the lamp and the line voltage.

There, I guess that is as clear as I can make it. You will find all these things fully explained in the Bluebook, a copy of which I would advise you BY ALL MEANS TO GET. Price six dollars, and it's worth many times that sum to you, or should be.

To wind up: the best, most practical, and in fact the only really good way to handle your Mazda projection lamp when taking A C from a 110 volt supply is through a controller, which you may obtain from the General Electric Company, or from your supply dealer. It is an expense fully justified and one you will have to stand. DON'T try a rheostat. It is NOT suitable for such work.

Question No. 276—Is low frequency or high frequency current best for projection? Don't merely give an answer, but explain the answer. We want to know just how well you understand the effect of current frequency, and why there is such an effect.

Question No. 277—Is there a "positive" and "negative" where A. C. is used in an arc? Is there a positive crater?

Question No. 278—Just why is the crater on the upper carbon of an A. C. arc smaller than on a D. C. arc where equal amperage is used?

Question No. 279—Explain the effect of 2-phase and 3-phase current as compared with single phase.

Question No. 280—Does current "flow" from positive to negative?

How?

From Jessie Lawrence, Projectionist, Lake Placid, New York, comes the following:

Am having trouble with my motor driven Power 6B projectors. Spoke to the Boss, asking him for the new governor type speed control. He seems to think it O. K., provided he can see where he will be bettering himself. He has advised me to write asking your advice.

The projectionist who was here before me told me to fill the intermittent movement oil well with oil until it runs out of the top hole. Have been doing that, but find that the oil runs all over the mechanism and stand. Please advise as to what the correct oil level is.

To settle an argument, will you kindly tell me whether or not the Simplex has the same intermittent movement that the 1902 Powers had.

Same Type

If you mean is it the same type of movement, the answer is yes. Both had the familiar "star and cam" movement, generally referred to as the "Geneva movement." If you mean literally the "same movement," I don't know. One may have been a faster movement than the other. You know such movements may be made with different speeds. That is to say, one may be a movement which will consume less time from point of starting of the sprocket to the ending of its movement than the other one. You see, brother, how much sometimes depends upon correct description, or nomenclature. To say is it the "same movement" and is it the "same TYPE of movement," may have very different meanings.

As to the oil level, and the instruction to fill the oil well to the point where the oil runs out of the upper hole, how do they get that way? The correct thing is to fill the oil well until the oil runs out of the OIL CUP—out of the hole you put the oil in at.

Amazing

It is an amazing thing, but some alleged projectionists actually force the oil in with a pump until, as you say, it runs out of the upper hole, which latter is merely a vent hole for the oil well. OF COURSE THE OIL RUNS OUT AGAIN. There is absolutely nothing to be gained by such procedure, and much to be lost. The man who told you to do that certainly knew very little about a Powers projector.

Oiling

OIL YOUR PROJECTOR AS FOLLOWS: FILL THE OIL WELL AS ABOVE DIRECTED. GIVE THE OTHER MECHANISM BEARINGS ONE DROP OF OIL, OR AT MOST TWO, EVERY TWO HOURS OF ACTUAL OPERATION. NEVER USE MORE THAN TWO DROPS OF OIL ON ANY PROJECTOR BEARING. IT DOES NO MANNER OF GOOD, AND DOES MUCH HARM, BECAUSE THE SURPLUS RUNS OFF, OR IS THROWN OFF, GETS ON THE FILM AND MAKES A NASTY MESS GENERALLY.

BUT don't, DON'T, D*O*N'T! use any but a really high grade oil. NEVER, under any circumstances, very thin, light oils, such as sewing machine oils. They are totally unsuited to the lubrication of a projector mechanism. Either use an oil recommended by the projector manufacture, or else see page 593 and 594 of the Bluebook. OR go to your local light station and get a gallon of oil such as they use for their dynamos. At least it will be a very good lubricant, be-

Governor Motor Drive

As to the governor motor drive, your "Boss" is entirely right in demanding to be shown that there will be benefit before he invests a very considerable sum in these most excellent speed regulators. Inasmuch as you have given me no information as to just why your present speed regulators are not giving satisfactory service, I cannot very well advise you. Quite possibly your present drives are worn out. The old type speed regulators gave more or less trouble. They were good in their day, but their day is past. I think it would be better that you take the matter up with the Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold Street, New York City. Tell them just what seems to be wrong, and ask their advice as to the replacement of your present drives with the new governor type. The manufacturers of projectors—any of them—will give you what they believe to be the advice calculated to serve your best interests. You may always depend upon that. There are no fly-by-night, penny-grabbers in the motion picture projector manufacturing business. I of course will be glad to advise you further upon receipt of additional information, but really think the manufacturer is in position to give you better service in this matter than myself.

S. M. P. E. Program

THE Society of Motion Picture Engineers will meet at Schenectady, New York, May 18 to 21. The actual meeting place has been changed to the new million dollar Hotel Van Curler, which will be opened by the S. M. P. E. meeting. The following papers have been promised: The Machine Development of Negative and Positive Motion Picture Film, by A. B. Hitchins, Duplex Motion Picture Industries, New York City; Some Early Historic Facts, by F. H. Richardson, Moving Picture World, New York City; A Museum of Motion Picture History, by T. K. Peters, Los Angeles, Cal.; Static Markings on Motion Picture Film, by J. I. Crabtree, Eastman Research Laboratories, Rochester, New York. (1) An Improved Sensitometer Sector Wheel. (2) Student Psychology and Educational Motion Pictures, by M. Briefer; Powers Film Products, Rochester, New York; The Standardization of Screen Illumination, by R. M. Hill, U. S. A. M. P. Service, Washington, D. C.; A New Reflectometer, by Dr F. Benford, General Electric Company, Schenectady, New York; Artistic Utilization of Light in the Photography of Motion Pictures, by D. W. Atwater, Westinghouse Lamp Company, New York City, and W. B. Ihnen, Motion Picture Art Director, New York City. Paper describing installation of tungsten lamps for color motion picture work, title as yet unknown. Tentative subject "The Manufacture of Incandescent Motion Picture Lamps," by R. S. Burnap, Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, New Jersey. Control of Series Arc Generating Sets, by J. H. Hertner, The Hertner Electric Company, Cleveland, Ohio. Color Lighting Effects for Use in Connection With the Exhibition of Motion Pictures, by L. A. Jones, Eastman Research Laboratories, Rochester, New York, and Lewis Townsend, Eastman Theatre, Rochester, New York. The Use of Desensitizers in the Development of Motion Picture Film, by J. I. Crabtree and M. L. Dunton, both of Eastman Research Laboratories, Rochester, New York, and How Theatres Should be Ventilated, by F. R. Still, American Blower Company, New York City.

Also there probably will be papers on "Infra Red Photography in Motion Picture Work." A paper on Special Color Work and An account of recent development in radio vision.

Quite a considerable program, I think you will all agree, so it is up to each and every individual member of the Society to be present on the job at Schenectady May 18 to 21. An excellent program has been arranged to fill in what time we can grab from listening to those most promising papers and the discussion they will inevitably call forth. Incidentally I am advised that every member not present will be fined two fish hooks and six of his best marbles, so be warned! It's going to be the best meeting of all the splendid meeting we've had up to this time.

Lucas An Exhibitor

Last week I received a neatly printed card invitation from the General Enterprises, Inc., to attend the opening of the New Egyptian Theatre, Greenville, South Carolina, April thirteenth, this year. When I looked at the bottom I nearly had palpitation of the wishbone, for there appeared, in bold type, the name Harry K. Lucas, General Manager.

So it seems our old friend Harry Lucas, who for years has laid claim to being the top notch motion picture theatre supply dealer in the Southeast (Atlanta, Georgia), has gone and went and become an exhibitor. Well, Harry, both as an editor and as F. H. Richardson, I wish you all that meed of success deserved by so good a scout as yourself. More I cannot say.

You can't blame the weather.

You know it will be hot in July and August. It always is.

You know people like to be comfortable—and won't sit and perspire in a hot theatre.

So you can't blame the weather—nor the public. It's up to yourself if you want good, profitable business this summer.

Lamp Centers

Some weeks ago a Massachusetts projectionist, Hobdell by name, sent to the department certain criticisms regarding the height of the center of the filament coils, or center of the light source would perhaps be more understandable, from the face of the center electrical contact in the base of the incandescent lamp. He also sent suggestions for overcoming this variation, all of which was published.

I am in receipt of the following letter from the General Electrical Company, Harrison works. You will note that there is none of the rather silly "There can't possibly be anything ever wrong with OUR product," which is still indulged in by a gradually lessening number of manufacturers of various sorts of products. There is no human product which is perfect. There is no human organization, large or small, which ever has, or probably ever will turn out any considerable amount of any sort of manufactured article without errors occurring occasionally, and articles reaching the consumer which are lacking in one way or another.

A Compliment

I pay the General Electric Company the deserved compliment of saying that it comes as close to eliminating error as any organization, large or small, that I know of. This I think is because of the uniformly high grade, careful men in charge of its various departments. I have noticed, however, that through all the years past, when errors are brought to its attention, these men (men in charge of departments and their immediate subordinates) never waste energy denying, but always offer such explanation as may be offered, and such information as seems to be available for its correction. And I like them for it.

I shall print the letter just as received. The letter reads:

Dear Mr. Richardson: It is unfortunate that Mr. Hobdell received the incandescent lamps with a long light center. The incandescent lamp manufacturers realize the importance of manufacturing all focusing lamps with the correct light center. However, it sometimes happens that several lamps with centers slightly wrong beyond the tolerance permitted may get past the inspectors in the factory, but as the art advances incandescent lamps will be manufactured with greater precision.

The light center of all motion picture lamps now supplied the trade is 4¾ inches, with an approximate plus or minus tolerance in manufacture of ⅛ inch. In figuring out the light center length of any incandescent lamp used for focusing purposes and referring to your cut in the article in the Motion Picture World on page 401 of the March 28 issue, 1925, italic A at a point at the foot of the filament as shown in the cut is the point that the light center length should be computed at.

You therefore realize that the consumer may receive motion picture projection lamps with a light center centered at 4¾ inches, but the actual light center will vary from 4⅝ inches to 4⅞ inches, which data corresponds with the suggestion made in your article and seems somewhat more close than the limits suggested by you.

It appears to me that you could reply to Mr. Hobdell in your columns and tell him in your own way the proper light center, without publishing this note. However, I am giving this information to you for your future guidance, and if you might desire to publish this note you are at liberty to do so.

Destruction Cause

From Locksley Clark, who writes on the stationery of the "British Columbia Projectionists' Society," comes the following:

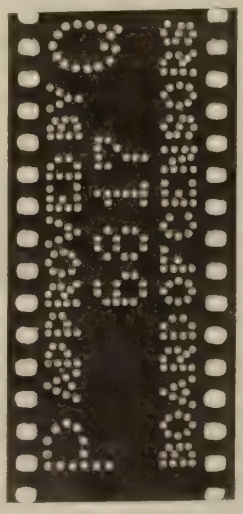
Question: Film Destruction! What is the real cause? Answer: Patronage system of politics.

This sounds a bit queer until I show you one of the several samples clipped from films which Brother Clark sends along. He heads the letter as above, then says:

Dear Sir and Brother: After following Mr. Dennison's and your own articles on film damage, which have been most educational, I feel impelled to forward attached clippings of film which I believe were butchered up by the Quebec censors. They even go so far as to censor their own advertisement of uselessness.

We all know censors are an unnecessary evil (Wrong, brother. Evidently you have not considered the fat jobs supplied people unable or unwilling to work for a living.—Ed.) to the public and to the moving picture industry, but even so, it seems like rubbing it in a bit when they start to destroy film in this manner.

I would like to hear the matter commented on in the department. My best wishes to yourself. I hope the good work will be kept up.



Really, Brother Clark, what is the use commenting on such an obvious outrage? Men or women who would deliberately ruin film thus would, I imagine, be entirely beyond talking to or reasoning with. Such work is stupid. It is adding deliberate insult to injury and then rubbing it in.

By the way, how come I hear from you boys of British Columbia so infrequently; also how come none of you has taken up the Bluebook School work? How come? I'm inquiring of you with entire good nature, of course.

Joplin, Missouri

Thomas L. Jackson, Joplin, Missouri, sends in drawings of three things he believes have value. They are reproduced. He says:

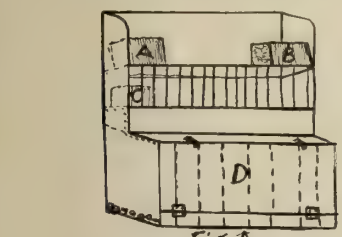

Fig. A

FIGURE 1

Figure I of Brother Jackson's drawings illustrates his Slide and Reel Container. A B are piles of slides on the top shelf. As the slides in pile A are used, they are placed in correct position in pile B, so that when it is all finished it is only necessary to shove the pile from position B to position A and begin over again. C is compartments for merchant advertising slides, which may only run every other show or every other day, etc. These racks make it easy to keep track of them. A receiver for a paper label card may be placed at the top of each compartment. It resembles a card filing system. D is the container for ten or fourteen inch reels. Fig. B shows how the whole outer casing may be cut from a sheet of metal 44 x 52 inches

Change-over signal device, by Jackson, Joplin, Mo.—A, Upper magazine of projection No. 1. M Upper magazine projector No. 2. D lead weight. F contact points set in a slot in a fibre block so that they may be adjusted up or down to suit. I think the drawing makes the rest sufficiently clear

I want to congratulate you on the excellence of the S. M. P. E. paper Powers printed as an advertisement. Such papers are a great help to the industry. You hit the nail right slap dab on the head, and I don't mean maybe either.

Attached find some foolishment. If you think it worthy of publication, why, that's good. If you don't, just forget all about it. Personally I don't like the idea of using film to line up the projector sprockets, as per Powers in March 21 issue. Get me straight. I'm not telling the Powers engineers their business, but merely giving my own views, fully understanding that they forgot more about a projector in one night than I ever knew.

Brother Jackson's slide and reel container play may have considerable value to those who desire to make such a device, but I doubt if many would expend the labor necessary to make a really good one. However, the plan is good, and we thank Jackson for submitting it. Incidentally, why didn't you tell us something about the conditions in and around Joplin while you were writing?

I would suggest that this change-over signal with one slight change which I shall suggest would work very well, and if the roller on end of rod D be ball bearing there would be no possible appreciable damage done to the film.

The improvement I would suggest is that contact points F be set out away from the magazine at least six inches, using aluminum wire for said extension. Lower contact point F could then be set for "light the lamp" signal, and since there would then be considerable travel necessary to bring contact H up to the upper contact point, the signal could readily be set for both a lamp lighting and a change-over signal. Of course the lower contact would have to be very light, but since only a very light contact is necessary, that sets up no objection.

The hack saw method of lining sprockets, as suggested by Brother Jackson, of Joplin, Missouri. As to the hack saw method of lining sprockets —well I dunno. I suppose the back of a hack saw blade really is perfectly straight, but still I could not make oath upon that point. On the whole I believe the film method is at least the more dependable, since the hack saw blade would necessarily have to be bent considerably, and I'm pretty certain that the bending would, at least to some extent, throw it out of line, unless a small, very perfect steel square be used to take care of the intermittent sprocket. Nope, Jackson, the more I think the matter over the less I am inclined to favor your hack saw stunt, though I'm nevertheless placing it before our department fans for consideration.

Why do I publish such things, do you ask? Simply because, while you and I may and do agree that the cue sheet is the ONLY correct change-over, and that the use of such devices invites carelessness and inattention on the part of the projectionist, still, make no error, it will be a long while before men who just can't or won't make a cue sheet and USE IT will be eliminated. Meanwhile the change-over signal is better for general results than the missed change-over with a white glare of light on the screen, and it is results we are after.

Mirror Screen

Richard Kuester, Projectionist, Brooklyn, N. Y., sends us the following:

Dear Friend Richardson: In March 28 issue you ask the American Projection Society to explain why the audience cannot see a picture if it is projected upon a plain mirror.

I am not a member of the A. P. S., but if you will permit I will attempt an explanation, basing my argument upon facts as I believe them to be. I will hand you herewith three drawings, scale ⅛ inch equal to 1 foot, intended to make my argument more clear. In looking them over you will find I have merely laid out a floor plan, making no allowance for aisles, etc.; that the projection angle is twelve degrees, which is heavy; that the floor has no pitch; that the screen is large and is not figured for distortion from projection angle. The projection angle and large screen I have made purposely so in order to make my explanation more clear.

Now let us get started. In figure 1 we have the elevation plan of an auditorium 100 feet long, with 26 rows of seats and a picture fifteen feet high. Line B represents the axis of projection. Its angle is 12 degrees from the horizontal.

Now let us assume that we are projecting three spots of light to the screen, the same being 1½ inches in diameter at the screen due to thickness of glass not figured in the drawings.

Let us now apply the principle shown in figure 3 to figures 1 and 2. The ray of light represented by A would be reflected along broken line AA until it reached the rear wall at D, which we find would, under the condition shown, be about fifteen feet from the floor, and about ten feet from the side wall, see figure 2. If we follow ray B, according to the same law, we would find it would strike the eye of a person at E, figure 1, sitting in the eighteenth row from the front, and in the center of the theatre. Ray C would, in the same way, meet the eye of a person seated at F, or in the fourth row, and about twelve feet from the center.

Neither of these three persons would see the light reflected from rays other than the one shown, because they would be seated outside the angle of reflection for those rays. He therefore would not even know the other two spots existed on the screen. Each person sees ONLY the rays which fall along the angle of reflection which strike the place his eyes happen to be.

surface. These spots are represented by lines A, B and C, figure 1. Let us assume that line A reaches the screen in the upper right hand corner, line B reaches it in its exact center, and line C at its lower left hand corner.

Broken lines AA, BB and CC represent the light rays as they would be reflected by a plain mirror surface when lines A B C are the incident rays.

In figure 2 we have the floor plan, showing the auditorium to be sixty feet wide and the mirror itself twenty feet wide. You may see just how the rays from lines A B C will be reflected as to the side angle.

Figure 3 shows that any ray striking a surface such as a mirror will be reflected in exactly the same angle. Refraction of rays

This is why, I believe, a picture projected upon a plain mirror is not visible, as a whole, to a spectator. On the other hand, let us examine into the reason why a person sees the entire screen image when a diffusing surface screen is used.

Applying the principle involved in figure 4, we see that lines A, B and C, figures 1 and 2, would be reflected in every direction, hence the spot of light they produce upon the screen surface will be visible from any and every point in the auditorium. I have shown, in figures 1 and 2 that the reflected rays AA and BB diverge after leaving the screen, which is contrary to the sketch submitted by Brother Thomas, who shows all rays parallel after leaving the screen surface. Those desiring a more detailed illustration of light action should turn to page 222 of the Bluebook of Projection—the Handbook.

There, gentlemen, that is a very excellent explanation of why we cannot see a picture, but only a spot of brilliant light, when a picture is projected to the surface of a mirror, and the explanation of Brother Kuester is based upon the well known optical law that, in dealing with a straight reflection surface, the "angle of incidence is always equal to the angle of reflection." In other words, the ray will leave the surface at an angle equal to the angle at which it met the surface, as shown in figure 3, in which the angle is 40 degrees for both the "angle of incidence" and the "angle of reflection."

Overlooked One Thing

But Brother Kuester has overlooked one thing which enables me to ask you a new question. Not one of the A. P. S. replied to the original question. MAYBE they could, but they did NOT demonstrate that fact. Our boys (the A. P. S.) rather pride themselves upon being pretty high class, and they are, too, as the men of the profession go. I use the term "high class" as meaning well informed in technical knowledge. I will again invite them to try their hand to this very SIMPLE problem. Probably they can all answer it, for it really is VERY simple, BUT they need not fail to do so and then put up a squawk that they "could if they wanted to." That's BULL! If you can, then DO IT! Here is the problem. For reasons so ably set forth by Brother Kuester the audience could not possibly see any picture in a plain mirror screen, but instead merely a bright spot of light, which would move on the screen surface as one moved about the auditorium, but always be visible so long as the angle of incidence and reflection as represented by a straight line from lens to screen and from the same spot on the screen (mirror) to the eyes of the spectator was incident upon the surface of the mirror.

Now, A. P. S. members OR ANY ONE ELSE who can, tell us just how the same audience which is unable to see a picture on the mirror surface can be made to, without leaving their seats and without in any way altering the mirror location or its surfaces, be made to see the picture in its entirety?

That is a very simple question, or rather it deals with a very simple problem in applied optics. Brother Kuester, as I said, evidently overlooked it, though it had nothing to do with the answer to the thing he dealt with.

By the way, Friend Kuester, if you are not a member of the A. P. S., then you ought to be, or so it would seem to me.

A Square Deal—Not!

E. N. Prescott, Union, Maine, in writing Friend Van Powell, Editor of the Straight From the Shoulder department, says:

Am enclosing samples of film taken from the comedy "Shanghaied Lovers." All these cuttings were taken from No. 1 reel. Had three stops in this reel, and don't see how it ever got through at all. The sprocket holes were strained throughout the entire length of the production. The second showing we had a non-stop projection, for the simple reason that we inspected and repaired the films. I WONDER IF THE BOSTON EXCHANGE WOULD BE WILLING TO PAY ME FOR HAVING THIS INSPECTION MADE AND THE REPAIR WORK DONE?

We experience considerable trouble with a certain brand of comedies, which are apt to pull apart at splices. We find that, in many cases the emulsion has not been removed when the splice was made. These splices have every appearance of having been made in the final assembly of the production. If I do not get better service I will buy our comedies where I can, and that's that! WILL WE EVER GET A SQUARE DEAL ON PRINTS? IF SO, WHEN?

Wretched Prints

Van Powel turned this over to this department for attention. The samples show a wretched condition. It is nothing short of an outrage for an exchange manager to permit films in such unprojectable condition to go out under the guise of "service." I note that friend Prescott wants to know what the exchange would say if he sent in a bill for inspection work.

Why not try it once and see? I'll bet dollars to a busted no good egg that the exchange manager would have an attack of heart failure at your nerve in presuming to ask to be paid for doing the work YOU PAID HIM TO HAVE DONE. In my 'umble opinion some exchange—pardon me, exchange MIS-managers—deliberately try to compel the theatre projectionist to do their inspection and repair work, and DO IT GRATIS. Of course if they send out films in non-projectable condition and the propectionist tries to use them, with result that there is from one to half a dozen stops in the show, why that is too bad—but the darned "Op'rater" should have examined the films and fixed them. He should know (from experience) that this exchange supplies JUNK, not a show. And if through the wretched condition of the film a fire occurs, with resultant panic, and perhaps death—well that's too bad, but (again) why did'nt the d——d "Op'rater" inspect the films and fix um?

A Plain Outrage

Gentlemen, THE SENDING OUT BY AN EXCHANGE OF FILMS IN ANYTHING LESS THAN DECENT, PROJECTABLE CONDITION IS NOTHING LESS THAN A CRIME AGAINST THE EXHIBITOR, THE PROJECTIONIST, THE AUDIENCE AND THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY AT LARGE. It should NOT be tolerated. IT INCREASES THE FIRE HAZARD VERY MEASURABLY. It is bad practice from any and every possible point of view. I, for one, honor Mr. Prescott for refusing to accept films in such condition as the samples submitted show the ones they were taken from to be in. I would go further and refuse to accept films in anything less than good projectable condition. That is what you are paying for, why not get it? If all exhibitors made a real stand in this matter there very quickly would be a change for the better.

Operators—Yes!

W. C. Budge, Garden City, Long Island, says:

Attached find slip containing wording copied from a stamping on the band around reel one of a production just received. It was from the Boston Paramount exchange. In all the eight reels there was no punch mark or change-over scratch signal. If Boston can thus clean up this change-over signal situation, why cannot the rest do it in the same way, or is it that all the projectionists are in Boston and the operators elsewhere?

Warning!

The wording of film band reads: "Warning: Do not punch holes or scratch the emulsion of this film. Seventy-five per cent of the OPERATORS refuse to project them to the screen. This means loss of film. We are compelled to charge for films thus damaged. —'The Confidence Man,' 2349, Print F."

So they permit confidence men to show in Boston! I'm s'prised! Well, anyhow, I am glad to see that the Boston Paramount exchange has the decency not to include the Projectionist in their indictment. They are right. It IS the machine operator, or machine attendant, and NOT the projectionist, who thus manhandles film. It is encouraging to note that exchange men are beginning to realize that fact, and to give the projectionist credit by accusing machine operators ONLY.

The fact that the films contained no punch or other change-over marks proves nothing, however, because that set of films may have just had them all removed, or maybe they have not been in the hands of any machine operators since all change-over signals were removed. It is even possible that that particular set of films had been handled ONLY by motion picture projectionists, and thus had escaped the devastating hands of the machine attendant or operator.

Notice Won't Stop Butchers

It is hardly to be expected that this notice would completely stop the punching and scratching perpetrated by machine operators, because those of them who do such things could hardly be stopped by anything less vigorous than a club, and as the Boston exchange has rightly said, their number includes about 75 per cent of them all.

This last is to be expected, because not too much may be expected from men who have no more pride than to class themselves as merely the operator of a mechanism.

But anyhow the notice the Boston exchange has put on the reel band is a step in the correct general direction. If they will follow it up by really assessing the theatres where the damage is perpetrated with the full price of the film ruined, and DO IT PERSISTENTLY AND CONSISTENTLY, the trouble will soon stop. I have told you that YEARS ago, but it has seemed impossible to get film exchanges to carefully examine film, remove the damaged portion and assess the charge against the theatre, except perhaps spasmodically, which merely creates a row and remedies nothing.

My compliments to the Boston exchange for having recognized the fact that machine operators ONLY and NOT motion picture projectionists are responsible for thus outraging film.

P. S.—I'm wondering how you, who are located way down in the New York City end of Lang Island, happen to have film from a Boston exchange.

New Loew House

Coney Island will have a Loew Theatre, a new 3,000 seat structure, located at Surf and Stillwell avenues and schedules to open about June 1. The theatre was built by the Chanin Construction Company.

The new theatre will be one of the many show places of the island and will start its career with an exclusive motion picture policy and a symphony orchestra. The theatre is equipped to house any type of theatrical performance. Stage, screen and radio stars will actively participate in the opening ceremonies.

Bluebook School—Answers No. 246 to 250

Question No. 246—Is it practicable to rewind at the rate of a thousand feet of film in six to eight minutes? Give us your views as to the advantages and disadvantages of such a rewinding speed.

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota; Harold C. Hurlbutt, Oskosh, Wisconsin; Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Ontario; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, New Hampshire, Walter Johnson, Champaign, Illinois; A. F. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Massachusetts; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan; Philip Mannino, Madera, Pennsylvania; W. C. Budge, Garden City, Long Island; W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, California; William A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa; H. C. Mallery, Castle Rock, Wyoming; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa, and Dan W. Jameson, Denver, Colorado, all expressed views entitling them to be included in the above list. This is, to my way of thinking, a very important matter, hence I shall print several answers, so that you may have the views of various men.

Brother Hanover's answer is long and most interesting, most of it being given over to the description of a machine he has made. He says:

You will doubtless remember, Brother, Richardson, that some considerable while ago you described a plan which you believed would, in conjunction with slow rewinding, give a fairly effective inspection of film. This was some two years ago. You drew a sketch to illustrate your idea.

After thinking the matter over, and making several experiments, I came to the conclusion that your views were sound, and proceeded to construct such a device, which I have perfected, improving on your plans somewhat, I think, and have had it in successful operation for quite some while. I find that when carefully and intelligently adjusted, it remains in adjustment indefinitely and detects all ripped sprocket holes, even to just one division between two holes being torn out, and all loose splices except the very wide, stiff ones, which are themselves detected by the device.

In the sketches I have drawn, I have tried to make the whole clear as possible, so that any ordinary projectionist may use the same for building one. And now to answering question No. 246.

It certainly is practicable to rewind at the rate of six to eight minutes per thousand feet of film in any theatre not cursed with the speed mania, and even for those, six minutes ought to be pretty nearly practicable, though it would be too fast to successfully use the device I shall describe effectively. Rewinding may be done at essentially the same speed as projection. If it requires fifteen minutes to project a thousand feet of film, there is no good reason why rewinding ought to be at a much higher rate.

It seems almost foolish to discuss the advantages of low speed rewinding, since they are so very obvious. First, at high speed (we discuss only motor driven rewinders, of course. Theatres so back-number as to still oblige the rewinding to be be done by hand are, it seems to me, hardly worth discussing) the projectionist is literally compelled to remain at the rewinder throughout the whole process, which is NOT good practice, as you will agree. With slow rewinding—and I call anything faster than eight minutes to the thousand feet fast—this is entirely unnecessary, except when inspection is required, when a hand rewinder should be used anyhow. This is particularly true if the device I shall present to you is used.

Sketch A shows an END view, looking toward the tail end (dummy) of the rewinder. G is the end of the film. H H are two uprights of strap iron one inch wide by one-eighth thick, of suitable height. These are attached to the rewind table by hinges B B, midway between the rewinder elements and exactly in line with the film travel. On their surface is a hardened metal block shaped as at F, between which the film runs. These uprights are held together under pressure exerted by spring D, which is adjustable by thumb screw X. To each of these copper parts E E are attached, as shown, the same being two inches in length, and not so thick as the drawing indicates; also shaped a bit differently. R R are two electric contacts making electrical contact with parts R R, as shown. One thing of importance is that parts E E must be thin and have a certain amount of "spring" to them, so that a slight movement of parts H H will not break the contact. I had considerable trouble arranging this, but finally did it by using thin, wide stock, curved at its angle end, and not just as I have drawn it. I arranged this so as to have the contact break upon an inward movement of either bar amounting to 3/16 of an inch at the film contact, which I find to take care of everything really necessary.

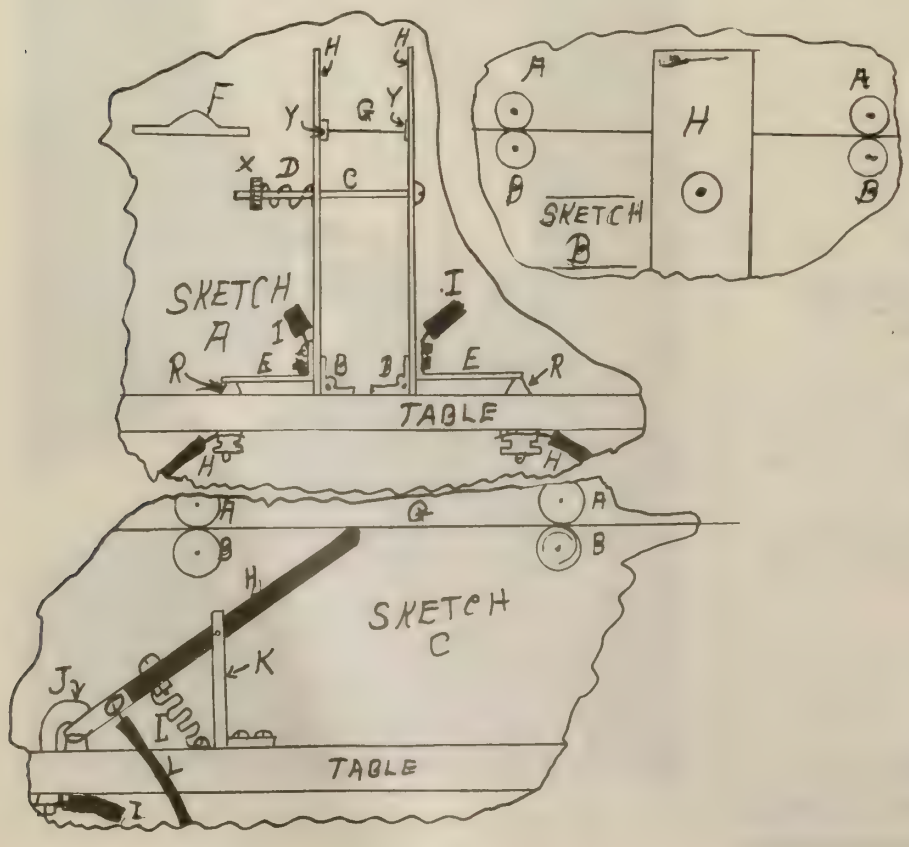
In order that this machine be operative it is necessary that the film be held rigid. This I accomplish by means of sprocket-idler rollers, as at sketch B, plus rigid, hardened side pieces just back of them, not shown, to prevent any side motion. These latter I find operate to detect mis-matched splices and thick, stiff splices, which make a snapping sound in passing between them.

The operation is as follows: H H and I I, sketch A, are both sides of the motor circuit, which is only closed when parts E E are in electrical contact with parts R R, and this is only when parts H H are held at film width by the film itself. When a splice is sufficiently loose to allow either part H and F to move inward to exceed one-fourth of an inch, contact is broken and the motor instantly stopped. Of course a tension sufficient for tight rewinding is necessary, in order that the film between rollers A A, sketch B and the rigid side pieces not shown, be held tight and rigid, in which condition, since it is only a total of three inches from rollers A B to rollers A B, quite a lot of tension may be given spring D without buckling the film.

NOTICE PART F and its shape. These parts are at Y Y, sketch A. When a loose splice comes along, spring D pulls parts H H together, since the "hump" on part F can and will enter the loose place, and thus the contact at R is broken and the motor instantly stopped. The "hump" must be carefully shaped, so that it will pull out of the break without injuring the film. This can be done, though it took quite a bit of experimenting to get it just right.

Sketch C takes care of ripped sprocket holes. When the film is pulled tight it holds part H, sketch C, against contact J against the pull of spring I. Lever H is made of fibre and copper, the black being fibre. Its upper end I have covered with a bit of clock spring. Wire I comes from I of sketch A, and wire L to main circuit switch. There are two of the devices shown in sketch C, of course—one for each side, so that both circuit wires pass through duplicate make-and-break contacts.

Those who attempt to make one of these will doubtless find trouble, as I did, in getting it so that it will do the work, and at the same time not be too much trouble starting, and not be continually stopping. But I have overcome all this, and can now put my film on the rewinder, start the thing and go on about my business, secure in the knowledge that if there is any serious fault with the film, the buzzer (I have one rigged so that when the rewinder stops it rings) will notify me of that fact. The rewinding speed is twelve minutes to the thousand feet, or about 83 feet per minute, at which speed no damage to the film is likely to occur through rewinding, and all noise is eliminated. All electrical contacts (make and break) are carefully inclosed.



The editor can readily understand that this device could not be built or successfully operated by any but a careful, painstaking man. He believes, however, that such men can build and successfully operate this device, just as Brother Hanover has done, and it certainly would do the work it is designed to do, and without damage to the film. Let it be understood that BOTH sides of the motor circuit pass successively through contacts R, sketch A and J, figure C.

Good photography plays no small part in making a picture popular. It has a definite box office value.

Budge says:

The answer to this question depends upon whether you have a "position" or a "job." If it is a position, then the manager sees to it that the projectionist is made at least reasonably comfortable, and is permitted to project at proper speed, in which case the projectionist should and will rewind at not less than six minutes to the thousand feet. If you merely have a job—well, in that case you will do what conditions compel you to do, and that will be that.

Fell says:

Where two men are on duty, or the rewinder is motor driven, as it should be in any case, it then is practical to rewind at six to eight minutes to the thousand feet of film, and ten minutes would be even better. At these speeds, with proper tension on the dummy end, and the rewinder in proper alignment, the job will be done right and the film saved from the hard knocks and abuses it is subjected to when rewound at high speed.

Should a splice pull apart at these speeds, the dummy reel will not continue to revolve, and possibly run a lot of film off on the more or less dirty floor before it is stopped. Low speed, with ample tension, eliminates the "pulling down" evil and loosely rewound film, which is the seat of oceans of "rain," some of which we now find in almost new prints.

The only disadvantage or fault of low speed rewinding is that where but one man is on duty and the rewinding is done by hand, it keeps the projectionist away from the projector, where he should be, and where he may even be unable to see the screen. That condition is, however, in my view, the fault of the exhibitor, rather than of the projectionist.

Dobson says:

The majority of men probably do all their rewinding at a speed of six or seven minutes per 1,000 feet, but good practice does not permit it, as a speed of ten minutes for each thousand feet is quite fast enough for all normal conditions. Where the film is rewound at a speed of, say, 10 minutes a reel, and sufficient tension is applied, all patches that are at all weak will be pulled apart.

At a greater speed there is always the chance that a weak patch will go by so fast and will be gone before it can be caught; also there will be a greater chance for the film to be wound loosely on the reel, and then to be pulled down and scratched.

Bennewitz says:

Not only is rewinding at six to ten minutes practicable, but it is a well proven fact that when eight to ten minutes are consumed in rewinding a thousand feet of film, there is less damage done to the film.

The advantages of rewinding at slow speed are that the film may be wound tightly, so that there is no necessity for "pulling down," which makes "rain," there is no noise and there is no necessity for watching the process closely, as is the case with rapid rewinding.

The only disadvantages I know of are that some mis-managers are so darned "tight" that they just won't spend a few dollars for a motor to drive the rewinder, or for the gearing necessary to reduce speed. Of course when rewinding is done by hand it is not to be expected that the projectionist either can or will spend ten minutes, or even eight of them, doing it, which would mean four or five minutes at the projector.

Question No 247—Where a power rewinder is used, ought there to be a separate hand rewinder?

Every one of the before named, and several others, agree that a hand rewinder should always be supplied, if only for inspection purposes.

Question No. 248—Tell us briefly what you know about what a "wet" and "dry" battery is, how it acts and why it acts.

Not so good! Only Bennewitz, Hurlbutt, Wallace, Whitt, Hanover, Fell (who very properly calls me down for using the term "battery" where I really meant "cell") and Dobson got by, and some of them by only a rather narrow squeak, on this one. On the whole, I think the reply of Friend Whitt is perhaps best, and I shall print it exactly as written, with the notation that I'm not so certain on one or two points raised myself, though I believe he is right. Incidentally, Whitt is a new "scholar," but his answers mostly stack up rather remarkably well. He says:

A "wet" battery consists of two or more cells containing a fluid called the electrolyte. A "dry" battery consists of two or more cells which, while not absolutely dry, do not contain liquid that will escape if the cells are placed in an inverted position. A primary wet cell usually consists of a glass, rubber or porcelain jar, containing a chemical fluid —the electrolyte—in which are suspended two plates (electrodes) of different kinds of metal or metal and carbon. The electrodes terminate in suitable binding posts for wire a short distance above the top of the jar.

The electrolyte may be solutions of sal ammoniac, sulphuric acid, common salt, caustic potash, iron and zinc chlorides, zinc sulphate, cadmium sulphate and many more of a long list. The electrodes, or plates, may be made of almost any metal, or combination of metals or carbon. The electrodes are named anode and cathode, to distinguish them apart. The anode is the positive plate and the negative pole, and the cathode is the negative plate and the positive pole. In the internal circuit through the electrolyte, the action is from the anode to the cathode. In the external circuit (the one that interests us) the action is from the cathode, or positive, to the anode, or negative. It is the chemical action of the electrolyte upon the anode, the gradual "burning up" of the metal and the electrolyte that produces chemical energy. The presence of the cathode or another kind of metal or carbon acts as a collector which catches the chemical energy in the form of electrcial energy. It is the maintaining of the E M F that forces the current through the external circuit, when this circuit is closed, that causes the electrolyte to attack and consume the metal and itself. The solution and the anode can be replaced, and the battery thus made the same as new, because the cathode is not affected by the chemical action. The chemical and electrical actions are the same in all primary cells, however, they are built.

There can be no action, either chemical or electrical, in a secondary cell until an electric current has been forced through it. Hence the combination of several of these cells constitute the thing we call a storage battery and swear at when it goes dead. A dry cell acts just the same as a wet cell, though its construction is of course a little different. The anode of a dry cell is the zinc container which holds the remainder of the cell together. The cathode is composed of carbon-manganese-dioxide. The electrolyte is the same composition as the cathode, only that it is in granulated form, and is saturated with sal ammoniac and zinc chloride solution. The whole thing is wrapped in blotting paper saturated with the same solution before being inserted into the zinc container. The container is then sealed with a water and air proof cement and is ready for work.

Fell adds this excellent and very clear explanation of an important point:

The fundamental fact upon which electrochemical generation of current depends is that if a plate of metal be placed in a liquid (I'm not so sure that this holds good for all liquids, or that it doesn't.—Ed.) there is a difference of electrical condition produced between the metal and the liquid, of such nature that the metal takes a different electrical potential than the liquid, which may be either higher or lower, according to the nature of the metal and the liquid.

If two metals of different nature be placed in an electrolytic liquid, there is a difference of electrical condition established between them, as such nature that if they be joined by a conductor, as in an outside circuit, a current of electricity will flow over the conductor. This current proceeds in the liquid from the metal most acted upon chemically by the fluid, to the one least acted upon. The plate attacked by the liquid is the negative, and the one unattacked the positive. The size and nature of the elements, their proximity to each other, and the strength of the electrolytic fluid governs the power a primary cell can produce.

Question No. 249—What is the voltage of an ordinary single cell of a dry battery? What amperage will it supply?

Everyone seems to agree on 1.5 volts, and from 20 to 30 amperes for a fresh, normal cell, though of course such an amperage would flow but a short while.

Question No. 250—How high a voltage, and how great an amperage would it be possible to get from dry batteries of the ordinary sort used for door bells?

Cooley says:

In theory, but hardly in actual practice, it is possible to obtain almost any voltage or amperage desired, dependent upon the number of cells of battery and the manner in which they are connected—which is what all the rest say, and it is correct—only I wonder if enough cells were connected to raise the voltage very high—say, two or three hundred—would or would not the individual batteries (cells) sort of burn themselves up when current started to flow, even though controlled. I wonder. Guess, not, but don't seem to quite get the matter clear in my alleged brain.

A Correction

Both P. A. McGuire, advertising manager of the Nicholas Power Company, and Harry Blumberg, of the Philadelphia Theatre Equipment Company, have written Moving Picture World in correction of an announcement in the April 25 issue of the installation of Simplex projectors in the New Colony Theatre, Philadelphia. The projectors really installed were the latest type Power projectors. The New Colony also has Power's Dissolving Stereopticons, Power's Speed Indicators and other equipment installed by the Philadelphia Theatre Equipment Company. Moving Picture World's original article appeared in another trade paper as well, and evidently is an error on the part of some publicity department.

Griffith's In Again!

The Silk Hat Comedy Scream is knocking 'em dead once more in "The Night Club." "Riotously entertaining," says the New York World. "Griffith is sending Rialto audiences into gales of laughter. A real sensation!" yells the Mirror. The Brooklyn Eagle calls it "the most hilarious film of the season."

What a comedy bet this boy Griffith is! The public is crazy about him. Exhibitors are "discovering" him daily by the hundreds. What a wallop you can hand warm weather and your opposition with Griffith comedies! Get the next one too—"Paths to Paradise"—coming in June.

Adapted by Walter Woods from Wm. de Mille's "After Five." Directed by Urson and Iribe. Screen play by Keene Thompson.

Telling the World

Warner Bros. are now preparing a powerful national advertising campaign on their coming FORTY Classics of the Screen.

Without doubt this will be the most impressive—most dominating—and we believe the biggest in direct results, as measured in increased theatre attendance, of any advertising campaign in the history of motion pictures.

You remember the great campaign on the 1923-24 Warner Classics. That was admittedly the biggest thing ever attempted up to that time. The present campaign will overshadow that by far. It will surpass the former in number of publications used—surpass it by millions in number of people reached—and greatly exceed the former in cost.

This campaign in its plan and magnitude will be unique and absolutely without precedent or parallel in motion picture advertising. Never before in this industry has any producer backed up his product and the Exhibitor with such forceful, timely and direct selling help.

Heralded by this mighty volume of advertising, the new Warner pictures will be FIRST in the minds of the motion picture public.

Hold your dates open till you get all the details of the coming FORTY WARNER pictures. Warner Bros. never stop with half-way measures. They are in a position now as never before to do big things in a big way and the coming pictures—and the advertising of these pictures—will awake the entire country to Warner Bros. Leadership. Wait for the FORTY winners!

WORLD

We Tell How

"ON the eve of the battle, mother." What is going to happen? What should happen? About the time this is being read several hundred of us will be packing the bag preparatory to a descent on Milwaukee. Some few, probably, are going just to watch. But several hundred are traveling buoyed with high hopes. Hoping that something will happen; and that what happens is—that which should happen.

What will happen? What should happen?

Let's see. We will tackle the easy part first, the "don'ts." And we are edging in with full consciousness that nothing an editor says about conventions or politics is likely to go further than the mutilation of good white paper.

What should not happen? Modestly, we make one suggestion:

There should be no election of a president or other national officers—with the exception of the necessary Board of Directors—at Milwaukee.

A minor matter? Maybe. And maybe not. Because if they keep the minds of the exhibitors gathered in Milwaukee away from thoughts of who is, or is not to be, president; away from all thoughts of politics, they are apt to keep them on business.

Business.

That is the essential.

WE feel pretty certain that Sydney Cohen is going to Milwaukee ready to stake his entire career as an exhibitor leader on getting something real accomplished. We know that Al Steffes is going solely to be on the ground and ready to lend a shoulder to the wheel if the signpost ahead says "Constructive."

There has been no talk of the politics that concerns itself merely with offices and titles. There should be none.

And if the minor matter of postponing all elections of officers will but serve to check the possibility of office-seeking wrangles entering the picture—then do so.

An humble suggestion, timidly offered.

ON another page we spryly dodge Sydney Cohen's request that we favor his Board of Directors with any specific suggestions we may have towards a solution of the problem of producer-distributor-exhibitor competition.

Our editorial humility is to blame. As a matter of fact we could very easily solve the problems of independent distributor and exhibitor — IF. The "if" is merely a matter of a few words. Here it is:

We could very easily solve the difficulties of independent distributor and exhibitor IF we were a happy blend of Washington, Lincoln, and Von Hindenburg.

Otherwise it looks like a tough job. Especially if you leave out the Hindenburg driving qualities.

ENDOW us with those qualities—gosh, maybe we should have asked for a dash of Alexander Hamilton, too—and we can lead the independent out of the wilderness.

Our first move would be to take a dictator's job —the Hindenburg strain is represented here. And then we would demand at least fifty per cent of the dates present through exhibitor representatives at Milwaukee.

Give us that fifty per cent of the dates—unyielding, unwavering, solid—and men like Carl Laemmle, Bill Fox, the Warners, Joe Schnitzer, and a host of others to talk to, and we'll lick the world.

A modest request. Certainly.

But back us up with a prettily engraved set of resolutions, a mess of petty politics, an army that will rush to cover under the enemy's dugouts as soon as our back is turned, and seek a balance by starving the independent—and we'll go home.

He Elected Mayor to Get Theatre Permit

By Sumner Smith

FORGET cross-word puzzles, film rentals and spring cleaning for the moment and turn an attentive ear to the story of R. E. Connell, exhibitor extraordinary of Aberdeen, Wash., who built a theatre for which a permit had been denied and then, to get legal permission to operate, lined up candidates for local office and had them elected. The story of Connell's victory will give heart to the small operator who finds a big combination trying to monopolize the theatre business in his town. Public opinion is a mighty power and Connell knew how to mobilize it.

R. E. CONNELL
Aberdeen, Washington

Although Mr. Connell's experience only covers a period of six years, they have been six years of colorful activity. He is a determined man, and when asked how he happened to open the Connell Theatre in Aberdeen, in the face of what seemed obstacles which could not be overcome, he replied, "I feel that this is a free country and I have just as good a right to make a living here in Aberdeen as any city in the U. S. A."

In October, 1919, Mr. Connell sold his plumbing business and bought a small theatre in Hoquiam, Wash., and with his opposition running the two largest and best theatres in the town, he found it tough sledding. His next move was to buy the Arcade Theatre, the best of the two theatres operated by his opposition. He operated these two theatres for a year and finally consolidated with his opposition. About eleven months later they sold their entire holdings to Dolan & Ripley, who controlled all the theatres in Aberdeen, four miles from Hoquiam.

Wishing to rest from strenuous labor, he took a three-months' trip to California. It was during this period that the Aberdeen council passed an ordinance limiting the number of theatres in Aberdeen. The ordinance said there was to be one theatre to every 7,500 people. Aberdeen has a population of around 20,000 people, and as there were already five theatres, this gave them a monopoly on the theatre business for a period of practically twenty years.

In the face of this ordinance Mr. Connell bought a lot for $9,000 on one of the principal streets of Aberdeen, less than a block from the new D. & R. Theatre seating close to 2,000 people. He made application for a permit to build. The council refused him the permit. The judge refused to give a decision, stating that he had made improper application. He made a second application but was again refused a permit, and the second time was refused the judge's decision. This action consumed seven months. He made a third application for a permit and met with the usual refusal.

He then went ahead with his plans to build and dared them to stop him. His opposition, however, figured that without a permit he would have difficulty in financing his building, and in this way they would defeat him. He finally completed his financial arrangements and started building the Connell Theatre. When the council saw his determination, they said they would let him build but would not let him operate the theatre.

The newspapers gave the proceedings front-page writeups, the sympathy of the city being with Mr. Connell, and it was because of this unusual publicity that he finally decided to call the theatre the Connell.

The annual city election came a week before the opening of the theatre. Mr. Connell got busy and lined up a bunch of candidates on his side, making statements to the citizens of Aberdeen that if they believed it was still a free country and if they wished a new theatre in the city, they vote for the men whom he was supporting.

As a result, his candidates succeeded in winning the election, both for the mayor and council, and he finally secured his permit on the opening night.

Mr. Connell says, "The old bunch died hard and they are still weeping."

The new mayor and council immediately repealed the ordinance and everything is now sitting pretty with Mr. Connell, for he has the sympathy and support of the entire picture-going population.

During this fight, as the building neared completion, his opposition tried to buy up all the service against him. It was then that he decided to cast his lot with the Independents, booking F. B. O. 100 per cent. In making his selection, he felt that they could be depended on to stand by him. In addition to F. B. O. he uses an occasional Vitagraph and Producers' Distributing picture.

We Told You So!

A few weeks ago we rushed to a telegraph station in French Lick, Indiana, to "tell the world" that one of the big happenings of the season was going to be the smashing announcement of William Fox's product. This week, as the broadside appears in the pages of Moving Picture World, we can do no more than repeat "We told you so!"

Incidentally—aside from the array of product—there are words of congratulation due to the man and the men who put in a prodigous amount of work under high pressure to scoop the field with an announcement of definite titles, casts, directors, and all necessary details on a season's product—and who did it with beauty, effectiveness, and punch—R. E. W.

U. S. Capital Now Prospecting Continental Europe

By
W. Stephen Bush

WITHIN the last few weeks a well-known American film man has been prospecting all over Continental Europe. He represents American capital, which is beginning to take notice of the great possibilities here. If I may not divulge his name I may say that he has for many years been intimately associated with one of our biggest producing companies and possesses a rich and varied fund of experience accumulated on both sides of the water. His idea is to produce in Europe and for Europe, applying American methods and American equipment but depending on scenarios especially suited to European audiences. He intends to employ European stars and European directors. The survey made by the gentleman in question will be submitted to a group of American capitalists and some action on it may be taken before the coming of the summer.

"I have observed," said my informant, "the very distinct line of cleavage between the American and the European taste in films. Selecting themes and stories with a special appeal to European as distinguished from American taste, we hope for a certain and immediate market here. It is a rapidly growing market which will be able to absorb all we can produce, if our calculations are correct. The capacity of absorption demonstrated recently by the countries of Continental Europe has astonished even the European producers themselves. We hope to sell in America, but we will not produce with our eyes riveted on the public overseas."

Future Will Determine Merit of Plan

The future alone can show what if any merit may be claimed for such a plan as has been outlined here. If the numerous and narrow boundaries of post-war Europe can be obliterated as far as the films are concerned the effects may prove revolutionary. Not only the trade papers of Europe but the big dailies of London, Paris and Berlin have taken note of an unexpected development in the film history of Europe. I am speaking of the reception accorded in London and Paris to such distinctly German films as the series of the Nibelungen. The example will do as an illustration of the existence of a distinctly European taste, radically different from our own.

On the basis of this great difference we must admit the possibility of the United Films of Europe of which I spoke in one of my recent letters. The Nibelungen are in theme and in treatment alien to our tastes but they undoubtedly have conquered Europe. The director of these films in an interview with a Parisian journalist dwelt at great length on the bond of communion between the various countries of Europe. He spoke of his visit to the States and said he felt lost amid an entirely new civilization, with no roots anywhere but in its own soil. On the strength of the success of these films in Paris the Germans will now pluck up courage and show "The Miracle of the Wolves" in spite of the threats of Hitler and Ludendorff. The first note in the international peace and trade concert seems to have been sounded. Before the entire orchestra gets away to the middle of the overture some enterprising Americans might be seen at the desk of the leader.

In the meantime a glance at the producing activities of Continental Europe may be interesting to the readers of Moving Picture World, who in the light of the data supplied may judge for themselves as to the revival of production in the old country. Not at any time since the war has Europe turned out such quantities of film. This time at least the increase in quantity is not to be accounted for by a deterioration in quality. True, the improvement in quality has scarcely kept pace with the growth of quantity, but the trend toward improvement is unmistakable.

Germany Still in Lead

Germany is still in the lead but France is running a strong second and it is not at all impossible that she will eventually distance her competitor and resume her old importance in the markets of the world. Among the recent outstanding French productions is a sensational and spectacular feature, "The Daughter of Mrs. Lasac." This film, though it has a somewhat international origin, is thoroughly French in conception and execution. It might be called something like "The Lure of Paris," for it is largely high-class and modernized melodrama. The scenes are laid alternately in Paris and Venice. In its last stage in the studio the film received a lot of notoriety through the efforts of one of the assistant directors who wanted to introduce the show girls of the Casino de Paris in the scenes in the Palace of Versailles in their original lack of raiment. In its presentations in Paris, Brussels and Vienna the feature is said to have been quite successful. It is now to be shown in Germany and Italy.

Another French film worth mentioning is "Le Stigmate" (The Stigma) which is a clever mixture of emotional and spectacular stuff. "Le Fantôme du Moulin Rouge" has attracted some attention by reason of its particularly skilful use of double exposure. The subject is something like the Belasco idea in "Peter Grimm." I might also mention "Autour d'un Berceau" (Around a Cradle) which had its first run in the Gaumont Palace. It pleased the crowd there, but its possibilities in English-speaking countries, especially in our own, are not so bright. Anatole France's "When the Gods Are Athirst" is also said to be on the way to the screen.

Among the German productions which have recently had their first runs in Berlin is one called "Kammer Musik," a costume play which derives its chief merit from the fact that Henny Porten plays the leading part. It is distinctly limited to European uses. Others are "Das Grosse Wecken" (The Reveille) which deals with military conditions as they existed before the Kaiser concluded to establish himself in Holland. The same or a similar subject is treated in another German feature called "Zapfenstreich" (Taps) which is built on a stage play that was quite popular in the days before the war. "Wetterleuchten" (Sheet Lightning) is another German film that shows a distinct trend toward improvement. In the States it might be considered a good program picture.

Great expectations are entertained of the spectacular and historic play "Wallenstein," based on Schiller's drama. Considerable time has been spent on this picture, said to follow closely the lines of the original drama. The great historic scenes have been taken where they occurred—in the cities of Prag and Eger in Czechoslovakia. The Germans cannot keep from filming Ibsen despite the fact that from the box office angle it has been well demonstrated that his stuff is 90 per cent morbid and therefore unsuited to filming. No doubt these words will make the highbrows howl with rage and indignation but they are literally and painfully true nevertheless.

A German company has actually made a film play out of "Hedda Gabler" with Asta Nielsen as the star. The first run in Berlin, where the star is much admired, was only moderately successful. There are moments in the Ibsen play that might tempt an ambitious director of films, but as a whole it is an unwholesome mixture of melodrama and problem play. Such women as Hedda Gabler exist only in Ibsen or in Laura Jean Libby at her worst.

It would be easy to add a score or two of "better than average" pictures that have lately issued from French and German studios. The Svenska has released a romance at sea directed by Soestrom and called "Fire on Board." In Sweden and Germany the film is said to have played to good houses.

As an amusing incident in the fever of production which seems to be sweeping over Europe I might mention the formation of a Swiss Company called Helva, which sold stock to the thrifty Swiss and then folded its tents and disappeared on top of one of the high mountains of the little Republic. Turkey too has entered the ranks of the producers and seems to be doing a lot better than Switzerland. The leader of the young Turkish film industry is one Ertro Goohl Moushin Bey and he is releasing enthusiastically if somewhat irregularly. None of the reels will ever be exported out of Turkey except as a curiosity, for they are very much in their infancy.

It is quite natural that in its steady progress the European film is gaining a good deal of invaluable prestige these days. Prestige is a most valuable asset at this stage of development, which so much resembles our own of fifteen years ago. In Rome for the first time the most exclusive society there has arranged a showing of a French film called "The Miracle of Lourdes." This highly religious film, really a propaganda production, has been witnessed by the "Circolo di San Pietro" in the Salon of Pius VI in the Palazzo del Vicariato. The Circle of St. Peter is composed of the most ancient Roman aristocracy and of the most distinguished ecclesiastics of the Roman Church. Cardinal Vannutelli, as well as several other wearers of the purple, and a large number of high dignitaries, among them Monsignor Ceplak (recently freed from a Bolshevist prison), were in the audience.

Beyond all comparison it was the best projected picture I have ever seen in Italy, while the musical accompaniment was quite above the average. The story tells the conversion of an atheist through a visit to the miraculous shrine of the Virgin at Lourdes. The film is now being shown in one of the Roman film theatres to big crowds. At its presentation in the Palazzo del Vicariato one of the most distinguished members of the club addressed the extraordinary assembly on the importance of the screen and there was quite a little dignified applause when he was through. Probably most of the members of the audience had never been to a motion picture entertainment in their lives and there is no doubt that they were favorably impressed.

Here is another instance of the growing prestige of the film. There are two or three reels entitled "The Pontificate of Pius XI," taken but a short time ago. The enterprising owner of the film wanted to have the Sovereign Pontiff, or rather an impressive picture of him, in his advertising material and communicated with the powers of the Vatican, asking whether there was any objection. There was none and today the face of the Pope is looking down from the billboards with its most benignant smile. This film too has a large patronage, due no doubt to the Holy Week as well as the subject matter of the reels.

Let's Get This Straight

THERE comes a letter to our desk. We could have answered it by mail, but we are not built that way. If one fellow "read us wrong"—perhaps others did. So let's get the whole thing straightened out in the open.

First of all, the letter:

Mr. Robert E. Welsh,
Moving Picture World,
516-Fifth Avenue, New York.

Dear Bob:—Read your editorial in the "Moving Picture World" issue of May 9th, and you had neglected to mention the many definite accomplishments of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America by way of elimination of the five per cent. Film Rental Tax, etc., Seat Tax and Admission Taxes, and the fact that the activities of the organization and its effort have resulted in perhaps a thousand or two less theatres being owned today by the two major producer-distributor-exhibitor organizations.

It may be, Bob, that you have some concrete, specific ideas and suggestions to offer that will aid in bringing about a constructive solution of this very vexatious problem—producer-distributor-exhibitor business competition, and I would very much appreciate your forwarding same to me at the earliest possible moment so they can be presented to our Board of Directors when they convene in Milwaukee, May 11th. With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,
SYDNEY S. COHEN.

The important part, to us, is the first paragraph. Sydney, you got the wrong slant on our editorial if you thought we intended it as a history of exhibitor ORGANIZATION. That wasn't the thought at all. What we did intend was a sketchy summary of exhibitor CONVENTIONS. There has been a difference.

We have been the first—and we believe the most frequent—to pay emphatic tribute to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and its officers for the good work they have done in matters of taxation, censorship, general propaganda, and so on. There is no use repeating all the good words we have said because we can't make them any stronger. And our readers' memories are long.

CONVENTIONS—and this year's problems in particular—are something else again. Exhibitors are perfectly willing to let a hard working bunch of officers plug away throughout the year fighting taxation and other common corns. But at convention time they seem to prefer to talk around in circles and shy away from internal problems, or else meet them with easily tabled resolutions and speedily forgotten speeches.

But THIS YEAR—and at the moment this is near as I care to come to being "specific and concrete," Sydney—they have to give their officers a MANDATE. What should that mandate be? I dunno! And I don't care—so long as it is definite, and CONSTRUCTIVE. Yours Truly, and some number of independent exhibitors, are going to be gol durned disappointed if we leave Milwaukee in a smoke screen of resolutions.

It was in hopes of forestalling such a condition that I wrote the editorial, Sydney. Maybe it will help. R. E. W.

"Competition!" My Town Said "No!"

By
E. N. Prescott
(Prescott Circuit, Union, Me.)

Got your town air-tight?
Sewed up so no competition can come in?
Business better than it used to be?
Suppose that to be the case!
Along comes a competitor—"Good place for me to make money," says he.
What will you do?
What will your town do?
Better read what Prescott's town did—and how it came to do it!

"WHAT do you do, in your town, with your theatre—besides extracting the silver shekels from all you can induce to come within your doors?

"Did you ever stop to consider that there might come a day when you'd like to have a pull—not a pull merely in terms of money, but a pull with your patrons, a standing with the citizens of the community in which your theatre is located.

"What would happen if your reputation, your theatre's popularity, had to be placed on the scales of public judgment, weighed in the public esteem. How would you feel? What would you do? How would you weather the storm—emerge as a victor?

"These exact conditions were the ordeal by which I was tried in a recent and unexpected test: an acid test in every sense of the word: and in one of the three towns in which I operate—and the outcome? Well, that's the story!

"I went into the town in question six years ago, just after it had been abandoned by another exhibitor as a failure. Thereupon I leased the Hall, proceeded to put in a good equipment and likewise to use some real pictures.

"As I have stated, that was six years ago. Today I am enjoying, in that town, the best business in the history of my occupation of the premises.

"But—to get back to the meat of my story—recently a cloud showed upon the horizon, a cloud that threatened to shadow my successful conduct of the theatre activity.

"An outsider—a party who had seen my efforts bear fruit, who had gazed upon my success with avid covetousness, decided to make inroads on this fat and juicy plum of good will. With every anticipation of easily getting this trade which I had worked to create and maintain, he began to make arrangements for a competing show.

"Now here is the point of my story where public sentiment comes in.

"As soon as rumors commenced to circulate about town concerning this contemplated enterprise, people began to ask each other why the competitor should be allowed to enter, and they seemed to agree among themselves that if it did enter they would not patronize it.

"This sentiment continued to grow. As a body the townspeople appeared to be in complete agreement. Under such circumstances it naturally reached the ears of the town officials.

"The feeling was of sufficient strength to eventuate in a consultation among these officials. The result was that this would-be competition was refused admittance, the officials maintaining that the town was not of sufficient size to support two houses.

"Now—and this is the important thing!—all this came about without my having to enter the battle myself!

"No doubt you are wondering how anyone could have an enterprise in which his personality could be so deep-rooted as to swing a victory of this sort without personal activity in his own behalf.

"Well—I have shown the community that my theatre is part of its life, not a mere money-making enterprise, but a civic institution in which I take personal pride, which I strive to make worthy of the trust of the town I serve.

"I say 'serve' advisedly. It is my watchword as it has been in my ten years as an exhibitor.

"I have always been willing and glad to cater to all worthy charitable activities, such as the Red Cross, and to all civic activities such as the G. A. R., the Farm Bureau, the churches: always trying to help them put across their objects with a bang.

"As an example of recent service, and in the town which won for me an unsolicited but highly appreciated victory, a committee of a few interested people wanted a piano for one of the public places. They came to me for suggestions helping to put over their aim.

"I co-operated with them, and even gave active aid to the extent of giving them the entire gross receipts of an evening show, bearing all expenses myself.

"This show brought them a sum of money that by far exceeded their fondest expectations.

"That is part of how I got my 'pull'—always trying to be of service to my towns, building up and promoting all worthy projects, not merely with 'that's a good idea,' but also by active participation in the campaigns.

"In a few weeks I am co-operating with a school for the benefit of their graduation class: I am going to give them one-half of the gross receipts, which is, no doubt, the lion's share; but these same children will be my life-long patrons and return to me in good will many times over the amount I shall hand them when the show is over.

"And in closing, I can only say that for all the people in the towns in which I operate, I have the profoundest admiration for their loyalty and support.

"These things are not measured by dollars—some things are worth dollars, but dollars won't buy them in any over-the-counter transaction. I trust that I may always be able to maintain and deserve that loyalty—and I hope you'll have done the things to enable you to call on it if ever a crisis comes up in your town."

This "experience" was contributed by Mr. Prescott voluntarily, as have been others such as those by Mr. L. O. Davis, in a sincere desire to indicate the lines along which the theatre in the medium or small sized town can be made a success.

The columns of Moving Picture World are always open to these exhibitor experience articles.

Art Mix Adjudged in Contempt by Cal. Court

The Superior Court in Los Angeles, Cal., has issued a decree fining Arthur J. Mix Productions, Inc., $150 and Denver Dixon, its director, $75 for contempt of court, according to a statement made by Fox Film Corporation.

It was explained by Saul E. Rogers, general counsel for the Fox Company, that the defendant was originally enjoined from using advertising containing the name "Art Mix" on posters, press sheets and film titles in a manner to mislead the trade and the public into the behief that "Art Mix" is a motion picture star. Such advertising tended, it was alleged, to confuse the name used with that of Tom Mix, the star of the Fox Company, and was determined by the court to be unfair business competition.

The contempt charged was the distribution of an inaccurate copy of the injunction which tended to lead exhibitors to believe that the injunction did not apply to pictures issued before the date of the restraining order.

Theatre Authorities See Convention as "Last Stand"—Record Crowd Assured—Boom Woodhull—Business Program

By Tom Waller

A SEETHING mass of practical movie humanity will flood the M. P. T. O. A. convention hall in Milwaukee on the morning of May 12 where for that day and the three to follow they will confine themselves to much and serious business. This has been the subject of lengthy statements emanating from national headquarters for the past few months under the heading of "Bring Your Playdates to Milwaukee." Indications from other sources as well now are that the ex-brewery town really will be the scene of the largest attended convention in the annals of the M. P. T. O. A.

Showmen not only from all over the entire United States but from Canada and England will be in attendance. The prominent English exhibitors who arrived in New York this week solely to review Milwaukee include William Gavazzi King and Major A. J. Gale, representing the C. E. A. of Great Britain while the unofficial delegates will be T. F. McDermott of Birmingham, A. Cunningham of Leeds, Col. J. W. Barber of London and F. H. Cooper of Norwich.

One thing outstandingly impressive from the standpoint of genuine significance as to the firmness of purpose and sincerity of intent of this particular convention, is the phrase one hears throughout the industry—"This is the last stand. We have got to do something."

The program strikes us as speaking volumes for this utterance. It schedules four days of hard work for conventionees with diversions only at night. There are sightseeing tours and basket parties and matinee performances. These have already been announced. But they are intended, quite obviously, for the wives and friends of the men whose business horizon is the matter in hand.

Seeking Solution

Stories in the pre-convention section published in this issue of Moving Picture World concisely and authentically describe all there is to describe at this time. From them may be gleaned an idea of the kind of action to expect in Milwaukee. Insurgent states coming within the fold of the parent organization is action which seems to speak best for Milwaukee. Exhibitor leaders say the producer-owned theatre offers a situation which must be solved not only for the survival of the independent exhibitor and independent producer but the industry at large. There are some who have advanced one theory and others who have advanced others. It remains for the convention to decide which of these, if any, will afford the best means.

On Playdates

As told in previous issues of the World, various exhibitor units have pledged their entire memberships to bring their playdates to Milwaukee. There they will be presented, according to announced plans, with lists of product whose makers are understood by many to have pledged or to be about to pledge their support in lessening the apparent chaotic tensity under which a good proportion of the industry has been straining for some time.

Possible Candidates

Around New York there is not so much speculation as to who the new president will be. R. F. ("Pete") Woodhull, chairman of the M. P. T. O. A's board of directors, is being mentioned quite frequently for that post within the inner circles. A little further in, however, the talk is that Sydney S. Cohen might be persuaded into once more taking the job. "Joe" Seider, who was mentioned for a time, declares himself "positively out" because of the heavy work in his own New Jersey organization. There is some talk and evidence about the T. O. C. C. booming Bernard Edelhertz, a lawyer, for the job. From the greater country, however, there are few reports of others in mind to occupy the chair. The writer has heard nothing mentioned about M. J. O'Toole of Pennsylvania, the present incumbent, succeeding himself.

The chief interest this year gets right into the subject that has ballyhooed the convention—the future.

S'S'Sh! Money! Money!

Anybody who thinks that independent producers are going to be long on hopes and shy on capital next season is sadly mistaken. There are men boarding trains now for Milwaukee for the sole purpose of telling worth while independents what they are willing to do in the way of financing.

Nathan Saland, of Film Developing Corporation, it is said, will be on the ground with backing running into several figures to talk to independents who know what they are talking about. The line forms on the right. If "S. R. O." sign is out at Saland's room look up The Editor in the Hotel Wisconsin and he may be able to squeeze you through the stage entrance.—R. E. W.

Pre-Convention Statement from O'Toole and Cohen

THE cohesion of exhibitor forces at Milwaukee is most indicative of the fact that national organization is essential in the solving of problems affecting the industry as a whole.

It is a very auspicious situation and the cooperation thus effected will be a power for good in our business and lead us to higher and better lines of practice which will dignify and advance every division of the industry.

We have always contended that there is nothing in the motion picture business which makes it radically different from other lines of effort. Honest, sane and square business practices certainly can be made the basis for all our dealings. We have been adversely affected with distrusts and suspicions but these are being resolved in the interest of the industry as a whole and better understandings are certain for the future.

The coming Milwaukee convention will witness the assemblying of the greatest exhibitor force and representatives of other branches of the industry known in the history of motion pictures. We have a practically perfect North America in this wonderful map of constructive effort. No place is left out because there is room for all and cooperation and helpful effort will be the guiding principles of this convention.

The national officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have labored hard and with determined zeal to bring unity to the front at Milwaukee and give the gathering that great clearing house aspect so essential to effecting the genuine coordination of all independent forces.

Every state in the Union will be represented as well as all of Canada, Great Britain, France and other parts of Europe. This is the first big international meeting of Motion Picture Theatre Owners and their independent allies. It can and will be made of the greatest constructive value to the industry.

All of our sessions will be open, except a brief period which will be devoted to the election of national directors. Debate will be encouraged on all questions presented as we desire the fullest and freest discussion. The more any situation is intelligently considered, the more facts are brought out and these are the real helpful situations.

We congratulate the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the United States and Canada and our fraternal visitors from abroad on the wonderful prospects for remedial action and general development presented by the coming Milwaukee convention. It means advancement of the highest order and the Theatre Owners and others present may be depended upon to make the occasion count for permanent good in the industry.

M. J. O'TOOLE, President.

SYDNEY S. COHEN, Chairman Administrative Committee.

Only Independent Exchangemen Allowed in Oklahoma Meeting

PRACTICALLY all sessions of the state convention of the M. P. T. O. of Oklahoma recently in Oklahoma City were executive, so that matters affecting the exhibitors might be discussed intimately and, it is said, with considerable artness. No representatives of national distributors were present at any time, but three independent film exchange managers delivered brief addresses by invitation. This was considered extremely significant.

President A. B. Momand of Shawnee presided. His administration was enthusiastically indorsed and he was formally elected to represent the organization at the Milwaukee convention. Others at the state meeting who will go as delegates are Vice-President L. W. Brophy of Muskogee, John Brown of Tulsa, W. B. Spearman of Edmond and C. A. Runyan of Barnsdall. Others in the membership are also expected to attend.

United States Senator Harrold made a short talk, reporting that a senatorial sub-committee was investigating the music copyright laws and promising his cordial help in promoting in a national way the interests of Oklahoma theatre men. He was introduced by Attorney W. F. McLaury, counsel for the M. P. T. O.

It is known that the convention threshed over the problems of music tax, uniform contract, arbitration clause and non-theatricals, but definite action taken, if any, was not disclosed.

Col. H. A. Cole, president of the Texas M. P. T. O., was present throughout the sessions. He reported procedure in certain Texas propositions similar to situations interesting Oklahoma exhibitors, and gave advice to the convention. As a result of the convention's authorization, the board of directors today appointed Harvey W. Ferguson, reputed to be the "highest powered" publicity man in the Southwest, to be general manager of the organization with headquarters in Oklahoma City. It is understood he was clothed with unusual powers and also guaranteed the board's backing in his every action.

Ferguson was affiliated with big newspapers in various parts of the country as editorial and special writer, and for a number of years has been connected with exchanges and theatres, usually as publicity and advertising manager.

Texas Re-elects Cole and Staff at Peppy Convention

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas unexpectedly ended late Wednesday, May 7, a programmed three-day convention, cramming the work into two days, re-electing Col. H. A. Cole of Marshall and all other officers and directors.

Col. Cole at first refused the presidency because he is already devoting more than half of his time to business of the organization, but a unanimous demand for his services coupled with a $3,000 yearly salary added to the office induced him to remain in a position he has occupied so brilliantly since the birth of the Texas group.

About 150 attended the convention, which was a whirl-wind affair from start to finish, uminating in a banquet and dance Wednesday night at Hotel Jefferson. convention headquarters.

Dangers in non-theatrical bookings proved the keynote of the meeting, and it was asserted that real danger lies in the present buying up by some individuals of the rights of certain pictures. These pictures, it was have no overhead, and will put many exexplained, will be shown in institutions that hibitors out of business.

A full report of the Texas convention will be published in next week's Moving Picture World.

Enmities Discarded for Unity

T.O.C.C. Delegation

According to the records of the Transportation Committee, the actual paid reservations by the members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce who are going to attend the Milwaukee Convention will fill two full ten-car sections of the Twentieth Century Limited which leaves New York on Monday, May 11.

A large number of up-state exhibitors wired their reservations to be picked up en route at Albany, Utica, Syracuse and Rochester. In addition to the above two full cars will be picked up at Albany with the Boston contingent.

The enthusiasm and eagerness displayed by those going is encouraging to the highest degree to the leaders.

Mayor Cast Deciding Vote for Sunday Shows in Corning

With the vote tied, 7 to 7, it was Mayor James P. Hallahan who cast the deciding vote that killed the attempt to put a ban on Sunday motion pictures in Corning, N. Y., at the meeting of the common council in the southern tier city on Monday evening, May 4. The fight against exhibitions of pictures on Sunday has been strong in the city, with the ministers taking an unusually active part in the movement to abolish Sunday presentations.

Exhibitors put up a strong fight against the ordinance and their stand on the question found many followers. The fight against Sunday pictures in Corning has met with some hard battles in the past and the decision of the council is looked upon as the closing of the question for some time.

Fox Convention Ends

The twelfth annual sales convention of the Fox Film Corporation came to a close at the New York studio on April 30. It was the most important and most militant gathering ever held by the Fox organization. All of the United States and Canada exchanges were represented by district and branch managers and a large number of salesmen and special representatives, and there was also an unusual representation from exchanges in all the four quarters of the globe.

William Fox was present, after a three month's absence at his West Coast studios, where he has been in active supervision of the casting and production of the big specials for the coming season. Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager, was also present at all meetings, and General Sales Manager James R. Grainger had his first opportunity of getting in touch with the complete personnel of the big field organization. It was announced that a new exchange will be opened at once in Milwaukee and that Jack Lorentz, formerly of the Seattle exchange will be the branch manager.

Crisis in Industry Brings Armistice With Michigan and Allied States Lined Up With M.P.T.O.A. for Common Good

APPARENT realization of a crisis and the need to meet it with unanimity has caused some surprising concessions to be made in the past few days. On top of the announcement that the M. P. T. O. of Kansas and Missouri at their recent convention voted to send delegates to Milwaukee, come to Moving Picture World telegraphic dispatches from H. M. Richey and W. A. Steffes. These notify us that for the good of the cause and with the desire to lend any possible support at this crucial time the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan and the members of the Allied States, both insurgents of the parent organization, will have representatives in Milwaukee.

While this news at first seems astounding, and even though it is without precedent at any other national confab, the due consideration it has received in many high quarters has caused it to be calmly accepted in the spirit in which it comes.

The wire from Steffes, which preceded that from the Michigan organization, reads:

"I am today wiring the leaders of the Allied States to meet in Milwaukee on same dates as M. P. T. O. A. Convention. This does not mean that the states represented in allied will again affiliate themselves with the M P. T. O. A. But hoping that something definite might be done at the Milwaukee convention we believe that the allied should do nothing to hamper or retard the progress of the independent theatre owners of the country and on the other hand if anything constructive is presented and the Allied States can be of assistance the independent theatre owners of the United States may depend on a hearty cooperation as it is the intention of the allied organization and all states represented therein to cooperate with any body of theatre owners or any other organization that is working towards the interest and betterment of the independent theatre owner."

The telegraphic message from H M. Richey is as follows:

"Hoping that definite steps will be taken to insure the continuance of the independent exhibitor and the independent producers Michigan will be represented at the coming convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to be held in Milwaukee May 12th to 16th inclusive.

"At the board of directors' meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan held Wednesday, April 29th, at the association offices in the Hotel Wolverine, President G. A. Cross appointed the following committee made up of the past presidents of the association to represent the Michigan organization at Milwaukee: James C. Ritter, Detroit; W. S. McLaren, Jackson; J. R. Denniston, Monroe; G. A. Cross, Battle Creek, and H. M. Richey, general manager.

"The presence of the Michigan delegation at the Milwaukee convention does not mean that Michigan has again become a member of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, neither does it mean that Michigan is forfeiting its valued membership in the Allied State organizations. The sending of a committee to Milwaukee was prompted by the realization on the part of Michigan theatre owners that a serious national situation has presented itself. A common problem that affects all theatre owners in the United States, regardless of what their affiliations may be and a desire on the part of the Michigan organization to lend whatever assistance it can to the solution of this national issue.

"At the time that Michigan ceased to be active in the present national body the statement was made that if at any time a common problem affecting the industry presented itself Michigan stood ready and willing to offer its cooperation to the national body or any other organization working toward the interests of independent theatre owners. Suitable headquarters for the Michigan committee have been reserved by H. M. Richey, general manager Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan."

Immediately upon the receipt of the last telegram the following statement was received from Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the administrative committee of the M. P. T. O. A:

"The decision of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan to send a delegation to the Milwaukee convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is very gratifying, as evidence of the fact that independent exhibitors are prepared to join forces, regardless of their organization affiliations, in the common defense of their business.

"Michigan is one of the strongest states. Entrenched within this territory are Independent Theatre Owners who reflect creditably upon our industry—men of sound judgment, men searching for that which is deemed by all men as right, and since our interests and theirs are mutual, since we feel that the good they accomplish in their state cannot help but benefit the independent situation in every state, that the good we have accomplished and will accomplish as a national organization, has helped and will continue to help Michigan, we welcome Michigan to our conferences, feeling certain that some very constructive proposals for the good in general will be forthcoming from their representatives.

"Differences of opinion are bound to occur between men who are not 'Yes Sirs,' but there is always this platform of cooperation, of a coming together the motive which actuates any action. Independence is the goal or destination of our travail or travel. It matters not whether we approach independence men from the north, south, easterly or westerly direction, when a problem presents itself it

N. J. Instructs Delegates to Fight Duplication of Dues

NEW JERSEY delegates to Milwaukee have been instructed by their association to suggest several changes in national organization affairs in addition to taking the stand with the others against the producer-owned theatre situation. Among these now known are:

The elimination of the present duplication of dues, so that the state units may be assessed according to their actual theatre membership on a per capita basis instead of that of the quota. In this respect, President Joseph Seider explains, the dues should be paid directly into one organization, thereby eliminating duplication. The privileges and benefits would therefore be confined exclusively to members.

New Jersey would also seek the decree from the convention to have its own arbitration medium. At present its theatre owners are compelled to travel into New York before the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce board.

In the latest pamphlet letter addressed to members of his organization Joseph Seider says:

Dear Theatre Owners:

Who is next? I am on the list. It is only a question of time when I will be reached. This and not picture, public or business policy, now imprisons every independent theatre owner his thoughts, peace of mind and actions.

Will we submit to our fears? Will we exaggerate their hold upon us? They ARE close to home but they HAVEN'T got us.

Do not permit yourself to be stampeded.

There are such things as Trust Busting Acts, there are such things as Trusts busting themselves.—They over reach.

And, in every instance in the past the "Master Minds" of our Industry have talked themselves into difficulties. Give them enough rope. They WILL hang themselves.

Who are those Master Minds? Are they the minds educated in the Cloak and Suit Business? Emanating from button-hole making? Pants pressing? Sponging?

Master Minds bosh.

We, pioneers in this business, with substantial Investments therein, even if we operate the most humble theatre in the State, have seen this most speculative, fickle and heartbreaking business through. Struggled with outside organized opposition. Struggled and fought for a square deal and respect from the people from whom we purchase. Have utilized our every resource to master a new enterprise—a new idea—a wonderful discovery.

AT LAST with the Public seeing the LIGHT, with the structure about completed, these business vultures, these undiplomatic and unprincipled "Master Minds" are attempting to steal the rewards that we are entitled to for our heartaches, our trials, our Investments—our Labors. And they would have succeeded in their LARCENY if we would not have been aroused out of our lethargy.

Last Thursday your Board of Directors held its meeting in conjunction with members in Hudson County in Jersey City. Messrs. Seider, Samuelson, Woodhull, Adams, Rosenblatt, Hildinger, Rosenthall, Kutinsky, Kaiserstein, Wilkins, Hunt and Peizor were elected as delegates to represent us at the Milwaukee convention. Yesterday members located in five of the largest counties in our State met at the Hotel Astor.

A RESOLUTION WAS UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED URGING OUR MEMBERS NOT TO CONTRACT FOR NOR GIVE PLAY DATES FOR NEXT YEAR'S PRODUCT UNTIL AFTER THE MILWAUKEE CONVENTION.

At both meetings it was a case of mobilizing and pooling our energy, our thoughts and our resources. This means business. We are encouraged.

WE ARE GOING TO RESIST. We are going to throw off the noose from around our necks. And if we can't and we are going to be pushed over the cliff by "Master Minds" drunk with success, greed and lust—the damned swine in a public serving Industry—WE WILL DRAG THEM OVER WITH US.

But, no, we CAN.

We are going to be calm, cool, courageous and will keep both our feet on the ground. We are going to use the brains God blessed us with. We WILL think. We can and will find a solution. We will make our plan and work it. We will rid ourselves of oppression.

Discussion of Arbitration is crowded out of this issue. However, we are taking care of the arbitration troubles of our members in good shape. Same goes for Music Tax.

To overcome advantage of distributors over theatre owners in arbitration cases through their being represented by counsel we have engaged Attorneys Joseph Varbalow and Norman Samuelson to represent our members in every arbitration case.

All present at recent meeting in New York where Sam Katz spoke for an hour and said nothing will agree that Sydney S. Cohen saved the day and was the

MAN THAT DELIVERED THE GOODS

There is a man in the World who is never turned down
Wherever he happens to stay.
He gets the glad hand in the populous town
Or out where the farmer makes hay.
He's greeted with pleasure on deserts of sand
And deep in the aisles of the woods.
Wherever he goes there's a welcoming hand
—he's
The man that delivers the goods.—Nesco.

The people of recognized value in this world are those who do more than they agree to do.

You have read in Trade Papers that New Jersey Theatre Owners plan a booking combination and have had conferences with New York Theatre Owners. Your organization knows nothing of it. If anything is done by your organization you will know of it because you will take part in it and it will be done IN, FOR AND BY New Jersey.

Metro-Goldwyn is requesting Theatre Owners holding contracts for King-Gish Pictures to sign a release. Hold on to the contract. You have Romola and the indications are that the next one will be unusual.

All Exhibitors Warned

By resolution the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania has agreed that "all exhibitors refuse to sign any agreement or enter into any booking arrangement with any co-partnership, company or corporation until after the national convention."

This action is a result of the allegation that "certain members of our organization have been approached by agents of an unnamed company for the purpose of signing agreements whereby the theatre owners transfer to the company the exclusive booking of their theatre. This activity has resulted in bringing about a somewhat chaotic condition of the industry. The transfer of the booking is virtually a transfer of the control of the theatre."

Copies of the resolution are being mailed all exhibitors in the Western Pennsylvania zone, all state organizations, the national organization and all trade papers. It is signed by Fred J. Herrington, secretary.

Unity

does not matter how we attempt to solve it, although some methods of procedure conserve energy, the vital necessity is that the problem shall be solved.

"To meet the encroachments of the distributor-theatre combine we need the cooperation and active participation of every independent factor in the business. Trade and organization politics should be entirely put aside, while we concentrate every effort and consolidate all our power on the one big issue.

"The help of the Michigan theatre owners and of all other independent theatre owners is urgently needed and most cordially welcomed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. As we write, we have been informed that a large delegation of independent theatre owners from Kansas will also meet with us at Milwaukee. The same cordial welcome is extended to them."

Many Film Heads Aid Jewish Fund

LEADERS of the film industry, now in Hollywood, have organized under the leadership of Joseph M. Schenck, to aid in the rebuilding of Palestine as the Jewish Homeland, through the Palestine Foundation Fund, the chief financial agency for the restoration of the Holy Land. Samuel Untermyer, the noted lawyer, is the president of the Fund, which since its organization four years ago, has raised $8,000,000 among the Jews of America for building, agricultural, educational and public health activities in Palestine.

Among the leaders in the film industry's efforts for the rebuilding of Palestine, in addition to Mr. Schenck, are Carl Laemmle, B. P. Schulberg, Sol Lesser and Jack Warner. A mass meeting of the industry was held April 30 in Warner Bros.' Studio in the interests of the Jewish Homeland movement.

The industry has adopted a quota of $25,000 to be raised in Hollywood. Leading contributors thus far are Mr. Schenck and Mr. Laemmle, each of whom has contributed $2,500.

Agitation for Court of Appeals

Joseph Seider Opposes Finality of Present Arbitration Board Decision—Urges Adoption of Official Contract at Milwaukee

By Tom Waller

THAT the decision of a Board of Arbitration should not be the last word and that the convention should seriously consider and act upon the establishment of a Court of Appeals, comprised of authorities equally appointed by the Hays organization and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is one of the strong sentiments emphasized by Joseph Seider in an exclusive interview with Moving Picture World.

The subject of play dates and means to combat the producer-theatre-owner situation of course Seider regards as the primary issue of the convention. But secondary to this in his estimation comes sound business. Under this heading he places a form of contract that should be officially authorized by the M. P. T. O. A.

Since stepping into the presidency of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey a year ago Seider has come into particular prominence in the motion picture industry, not only because of his proven integrity and foresight, but because of the way in which he has manifested these qualities in building his own organization on an enviable and most concrete basis. It is because of these facts and also that he has thoroughly studied and analyzed exhibitor conditions not only in his own state but nationally that this publication sought his opinions on matters which might be considered at Milwaukee.

Seider believes that the medium of arbitration should be conducted on a national basis in the sense that the nucleus of its power should be jointly vested in the two national organizations, that of the Hays unit and the M. P. T. O. A. In other words he believes that the present miscellaneous boards should be co-related.

With such a system, he points out, the national organization could appoint a bureau, including a legal staff, which could keep a definite record of the cases reached and distribute duplicates of such records to every board in the country. With this information Seider vouches that boards throughout the country, conversant with the happenings in all states, would be considerably benefited and be able to function with a clearer and more direct understanding.

The present finality of an arbitrary board's findings does not appeal to Seider as the best example of jurisprudence. He cites the legal processes of our courts in substantiation of his contention that another body should be empowered to reconsider a matter upon which the sole business career of an exhibitor might be involved. A Court of Appeals to which cases deemed meritorious could be brought is another means towards solving the matter of arbitration in the industry, Seider declares. He forcefully added:

"The exhibitor equity in the contract must be protected. The national organization must take the lead in attending to the functionings of arbitration boards throughout the country."

On the subject of the contract Seider said that the present uniform contract has never been officially approved by the national organization. "The mere fact that some of its vicious clauses are not always enforced does not mean that this contract form is right and that it is a safeguard to the exhibitor. Bearing in mind that an exhibitor can be utterly destroyed if the contract is not equitable makes me stress all the more the fact that there are matters, other than the chief subject of this convention, which can bring about our destruction. It is time that we draft a contract which could be legally construed as equitable and not a 'one-way-street,' as a New Jersey judge recently called one of these contracts."

The gathering at Milwaukee represents the "last stand" and the significance of that opinion is shared not only by him but by every wide-awake exhibitor, Seider maintains. He concludes:

"The thought of fun and play does not enter into the program at this convention. Friends and enemies of the national organization realize that the crisis is at hand. They are going to the convention to pool their thoughts. Out of that pool some definite action will take place."

Shallenberger Wages Convention Campaign

W. E. Shallenberger, long an active worker in the cause of Independence, has waged an untiring campaign in behalf of the Milwaukee Convention. Over his own signature, a series of letters has gone forth to exchange operators throughout the country, urging their attendance and co-operation.

According to Shallenberger, the response to these letters has been truly amazing. He announces he has been assured of the support of the following:

J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Film Players Corporation, Chicago, Ill.; A. Steinberg, S. & S. Film & Supply Company, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Arthur Bromberg, Progress Pictures Company, Atlanta, Ga.; M. Wintraub, Fontenelle Features Film Company, Omaha, Neb.; J. L. Stein, Independent Film Company, Omaha, Neb.; Harry Hynes, St. Louis Film Exchange, St. Louis, Mo.; W. N. Skirboll, Skirboll Productions, Cleveland, Ohio; Sam Werner, United Film Service, St. Louis, Mo.; J. S. Jossey, Progress Pictures Company, Cleveland, Ohio; Herman Jans, Jans Productions, New York City; Jerry Abrams, Rebown Pictures, Chicago, Ill.; Mex Levey, Exclusive Film Service, Chicago, Ill.; John J. Rogers, Enterprise Distributing Corporation, Omaha, Neb.; Wallace Walthall, Enterprise Distributing Corporation, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Revive Western Canada Theatre Association

According to an announcement made at Calgary, Alberta, the sale of the physical assets of the defunct Trans-Canada Theatres, Ltd., to Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd., Toronto, does not include the theatres in Western Canada which were formerly operated under the auspices of Trans-Canada, these houses having been on a lease basis only. These leases have reverted to the owners of the theatres.

Coincident with this announcement comes the news that the Western Canada Theatre Association had been reorganized by these theatres. C. P. Walker of the Walker Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, is the head of the revived organization, while Manager Maynard Joiner of the Grand Theatre at Calgary is another officer. The owner of the Calgary Grand Theatre is Sir James Lougheed, a member of the Canadian Senate, who is now busy with the Parliamentary session at Ottawa. Sir James and James W. Davidson of Calgary were formerly directors of the defunct Trans-Canada Theatres.

KANSAS CITY MINISTER DENOUNCES CENSORSHIP

More than 100 exhibitors and exchange representatives, in addition to the regular congregation of the Linwood Christian Church, Kansas City, heard censorship condemned and Sunday shows highly approved recently by one of Kansas City's most widely known pastors, the Rev. Burris A. Jenkins.

"Censorship usually is sponsored by a group of narrow-minded persons who desire to do all the censoring themselves," Mr. Jenkins said. "I never have favored the censorship of films and never will. It has been said many times before, but I will say it again—the public is the censor."

I. E. Chadwick, president of the Independent M. P. Producers' and Distributors' Association, on Thursday last wired Dr. W. E. Shallenberger to the effect that there was a rumor afloat that the reported smallpox epidemic in Milwaukee had caused the convention to be called off.

Sydney Cohen immediately wired Chadwick to the effect that "the only epidemic in Milwaukee as far as we are concerned will be an epidemic of play dates for independents.

Coming and Going

M. H. Hoffman, vice-president of Tiffany Productions, Inc., and Truart Film Corporation, arrived in New York recently after a six weeks' stay in Los Angeles.

Marion Davies is in New York from the Coast.

Pola Negri returns to the United States this week from a two months' tour of Europe.

I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, who has been in Los Angeles for several months supervising the productions of his company, will leave California this week to be present at the convention in Milwaukee.

J. G. Bachmann, vice-president and general manager of distribution of B. P. Schulberg Productions, has left for Milwaukee to attend the M. P. T. O. A. convention.

Harry E. Aitken of the Epoch Producing Company returned to the United States recently from Europe.

Major H. C. S. Thomson, managing director and executive head of Film Booking Offices, returned to New York this week from a flying trip to Los Angeles.

Ken G. Hall, publicity director in Australia for First National pictures, arrived in New York last week for a visit of three or four weeks.

James R. Grainger of Fox is scheduled for a sales trip through Canada. Joe Shea of the publicity department is now in the Dominion on an important business mission.

AUGUSTA, ME., MAYOR REFUSES

Mayor Ernest L. McLean of Augusta, Me., cancelled the rental of the City Hall auditorium for the showing of a motion picture entitled "The Fifth Horseman" on Wednesday night, April 22. The mayor said he did not learn of what he considers the objectionable nature of the photoplay until he saw a handbill, which stated that the picture was an expose of the Ku Klux Klan. He further based his action on the ground that inasmuch as the K. K. K. had been denied use of the auditorium for meetings it would be unfair to permit the use of the place for attacks on the organization.

SON TO LUBINS

Herbert Lubin, secretary of Associated Pictures Corporation, is the glad father of an eight-pound boy, born April 11. Arthur H. Sawyer of the Sawyer-Lubin firm, is godfather to the new arrival, who was named Herbert Arthur Lubin in honor of his dad and Mr. Sawyer, who states he is as proud of the fine looking boy as though he were a Sawyer-Lubin production.

99-Year Term!

Henry W. Gauding, owner of the Lincoln Theatre, Mt. Washington, who has presided as convention chairman for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania annually since its inception five years ago, was accorded a unique honor at the last convention held by the organization three weeks ago. A motion was made and adopted which assures Mr. Gauding of the convention chairmanship for ninety-nine years to come.

Ontario Government Has Budget of $91,350 for Own Films

The Ontario Government is spending $91,350 for the production of its own moving picture releases in the new Provincial film studio and laboratory at Trenton, Ont., according to the estimates which were brought down at Toronto, the Provincial Capital, for the current year, this being the 12 months ending October 31 next. This appropriation is somewhat higher than the moving picture outlay for the previous year, ending October 31, 1924, when the expenditure amounted to $87,050.

The estimates by the Ontario Government for this year provide the sum of $60,000 for the purchase of equipment, motion picture printing and projecting machines at the Trenton Studio, as well as for raw film material, maintenance and operation of the studio, apart from salaries for the officials who include the superintendent, laboratory foreman and accountant.

The Studio of Trenton, Ontario, was purchased by the Ontario Government less than one year ago. The plant was established and was formerly used by the Adanac Film Corporation for the making of several feature-length pictures, in one of which the star was Tyrone Power. Several comedies were also made at the Trenton building. The Government secured the property for some $30,000. It was formally opened last summer as a Government enterprise with an elaborate ceremony and since then various industrial and scenic releases have been prepared and distributed by the Ontario authorities.

Schine Chain Gets Olympic Theatre in Buffalo

The Schine Theatrical Corporation has invaded Buffalo. This company, which has been adding links in its chain of 40 or so houses in the state by acquiring houses all over western New York, has taken over the operation of the Olympic Theatre on Lafayette Square. The Olympic has been operated by Universal for the past year. The lease has only a year or so, however, to run, an extension having been granted some time ago because a bank, owning the property, was not ready at the time to extend its building operations. Lewis W. Schine was in Buffalo last week end to confer with Manager Ray S. Averill, who will remain under the new regime. The Olympic has been running double feature bills of late. No change in this policy has as yet been announced.

The Schine Theatrical Corporation has also obtained a long term lease on the O'Malley skating rink in Exchange street, Geneva, N. Y. While the plans have not been officially made public, it is understood that the company plans to enlarge the Temple Theatre, by an addition to the rear, and to make it a vaudeville house. The O'Malley rink is to be turned into a theatre with a large seating capacity, and will be used while the work is in progress on the Temple, and in all probability will be continued as a picture theatre afterwards.

CHARLES PUGH

Manager of Associated Exhibitors' Portland, Ore., office, who mysteriously disappeared.

Pugh, of Associated, Missing Nearly Month

Charles Pugh, manager of the Associated Exhibitors' office at Portland, Oregon, has been missing for nearly a month, under circumstances that mystify his friends and the police of that city. There is no reason known for his disappearance. He was in good health, his family life was ideal, and he would shortly have received a $2500 bonus as winner of "The Spitfire" contest.

Associated Exhibitors is making this appeal through the national tradepapers in the hope that he may have communicated with someone connected with the industry or that he may have been seen subsequently to his disappearance from Portland. Pugh was last seen on Friday, April 3, about 11:30 p. m. driving an Essex Coach with Oregon License plate 117-769 from Ninth and Davis streets, toward Broadway Bridge in Portland. He was wearing a blue serge suit and gray hat. He is five feet, nine inches tall and weighs 226 pounds. His eyes are hazel.

Film Ads. for Church

An enterprising minister in Urbana, O., according to reports from that town, advertises his sermons in the local newspapers in such a way as to compete with the glaring qualities of film ad copy. He is the Rev. Ralph G. Carson. Such themes in bold face type amid the "movie" ads as "The Secrets of Match Making," "Who Said Thou Wast Naked?" "Why Did She Marry a French Nobleman?" have filled vacant pews and brought him the support of the exhibitors as well.

Hays Completes 52 Programs for Saturday Morning Children Shows

Premiere City Showing in Rochester Acclaimed Huge Success by 2700 Kiddies—Exhibitions Confined to 8 Reels—Prints Underway

By Tom Waller

THE movement by Will Hays for special Saturday morning shows for children throughout the nation became an actuality recently when the first program, of a series of fifty-two compiled under the auspices of the M. P. P. D. A., made its city premiere in Rochester. Exactly 2700 kiddies testified to the fact that the Hays' embryo of a year ago has ripened into a plant fruitful for the community as well as the box office.

This week the Hays Office announced that of the thousands of old prints it has reviewed, cut and prepared into diversified eight-reel programs—enough of which there are for every Saturday morning in the year—the distribution will be handled by key city exchanges. Their simultaneous release throughout the country has been delayed for only a short time because of the lack of sufficient prints for general circulation.

Because of the keen interest Mr. Eastman manifested from the start for Saturday morning shows, the Hays' office decided that his Rochester theatre would be the place for a city try-out. This, however, does not mean that the Eastman theatre will be used as a clearing house for the remainder of the programs. Had there been enough prints it is likely that the premiere would have included as many national theatres which would have desired to have screened the special offering.

Major Ward P. Wooldridge of the Hays' staff, who was particularly active in the selection of the programs, was on the ground in Rochester at the time of the opening. He will make an effort to assist all exhibitors who book the product and be in their territory for its first showing.

The Major, who was selected by Hays to do this work a year ago, reviewed some 4,000 pictures, many of which had had their run before adult audiences and were then locked in the vaults of various producing units. From these were selected the fifty-two programs constituting the yearly schedule. Cuts ranging from 500 to 3,000 feet were often deemed necessary before the film was fully approved for an adolescent patronage.

"We have had to keep in mind, too," explained Major Wooldridge, "that the boys and girls are not interested in just goodie-goodie pictures. We have got to give them plenty of action, but that action must be wholesome. They aren't coming to our shows to be preached to. We must entertain them."

Major Wooldridge said that experiments had shown that eight reels were about all that would hold a child's interest at one show. The average Saturday morning show is arranged to run approximately an hour and a half. Besides the main "story picture," nature study, travel, animal, cartoon and educational pictures are to be shown in the Saturday morning programs.

Say Coast Chain Quitting 3 Houses

One of the most notable stories along the Hollywood Rialto this week is to the effect that West Coast Theatres, Inc., will soon relinquish its management of the California, Miller's and Tally's Broadway within the next thirty days. Tally's, according to the report, will revert back to T. L. Tally, its founder. Nothing authentic has been announced as to what will become of the California and Miller's but it is understood that Universal will soon take them over.

Since Fred Miller let go of the California and Miller's theatres some time ago when the Metro organization took over the Goldwyn product, it gave West Coast practically a monopoly on all the first-run theatres in Los Angeles except the Paramount houses. West Coast, however, still retains Loew's State, the Criterion and the Alhambra houses for first-runs.

INSTALL BUFFALO TRADE HEADS

The installation ceremonies of the Film Board of Trade were held Monday evening, May 4, in Stein's Hotel, Orchard Park, N. Y. The new officers, headed by Chairman McCarthy, were installed with due ceremony.

M. P. D. E. of Canada Building Up Large Exhibitor Following

EXCELLENT work is being done throughout Canada by the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, even though this association itself is not yet quite complete in organization details. Though it is affiliated with the Hays organization in New York, the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, as its names implies, has extended the scope of its activities to take in all exhibitor memberships in the Dominion as well as the exchange officials of various cities and the producers.

According to information obtainable at the Toronto headquarters of the association there is already a substantial exhibitor membership that includes prominent theatre managers in many cities of both Eastern and Western Canada, the cities represented including Montreal, Winnipeg, Hamilton, Ottawa, St. Catharines, London, Guelph, Galt, Toronto, Stratford, Peterborough, Kitchener, Kingston, Calgary, Brantford and Vancouver.

Announcement is made by Col. John A. Cooper, president of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada that the annual convention of association members will be held shortly in Toronto to complete all details of organization for the ensuing year. The Canadian headquarters of the association are located in a handsome suite of offices in the Lumsden building, Toronto, but the annual meeting will probably be conducted in a large downtown hotel.

Recent activities of the association under the direction of Col. Cooper have included the distribution of a valuable book, "Film Mutilation and How to Prevent It," published by the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., to projection machine operators throughout the Dominion, an effort being made to reach every operator in Canada. The envelope enclosing this booklet bore the inscription, "With the compliments of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada—Read, Preserve, Help." Further, a representative of the Eastman Kodak Co. has been touring Western Canada under the direct auspices of the Canadian association in order to meet the operators and association meetings have been held in Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, B. C. Further association meetings are scheduled to be held in Montreal and Toronto during May.

"U" EXCHANGEMAN ROBBED

Barnard Temborius, cashier for the Universal exchange, 3320 Olive street, St. Louis, was stuck-up by two young bandits at 2:25 p. m. May 1 and robbed of the exchange payroll, totaling $865.25.

Mayor for "U" City

Universal City, Cal., where Carl Laemmle's Jewels are wrought, is now a regular city in every sense of the word "municipality." It has a mayor. "Dad" Schrock, father of Raymond L. Schrock, general manager of the plant, holds the job, having been elevated with all glorification at a recent election.

Daylight Saving Hits Box Offices

The advent of daylight saving in many cities and towns in New York State raised havoc with receipts in motion picture theatres in all places. In Schenectady, a round of the theatres disclosed the statement that receipts had fallen off from 10 to as high as 35 per cent on Sunday night when the daylight saving ordinance became effective.

In Chicago, with the exception of the big first run houses in the loop, most of the managers reported from a 10 to a 25% drop in attendance. The big loop houses put on extra heavy bills to bring out the movie patrons and succeeded to a great extent in holding up their business.

Earl Johnson of the Berwyn, Ill., Theatre says that the daylight savings only costs him about $400 week, but he thinks this is a good investment if the folks take it out in getting more fresh air and exercise.

Exhibitor Booking Combines Urged at Kansas City Session

BOOKING combines or similar action is "in the air" in the Kansas-Missouri territory. At the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri convention in Kansas City last week producer owned theatres was the most widely discussed topic of the convention.

It was generally agreed that the producer owned house was not a matter for the association to take up, but, rather, an individual affair of exhibitors. However, as the discussion progressed, it finally ended with open suggestions that booking combines among exhibitors would be the most effective means of combating producer owned theatres as opposition.

Another feature of the convention was the enthusiasm with which the announcement of a non-union operators' school was accepted. C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. K-M., who largely was instrumental in starting the school, which is in charge of an experienced operator, explained that it was not until after the World-in-Motion theatre of Kansas City was dynamited, supposedly by union operators, that such a school was contemplated. As the situation now stands it will be only a short time until the association will have dozens of non-union operators for distribution at all times in the Kansas-Missouri territory. Also, by way of supplying the needs of exhibitor members, the association adopted a plan of sponsoring the Kansas City Juvenile Entertainers' Association, composed of young talent, to be used in prologues in theatres in the territory.

The Kansas City Film Board of Trade met in session with the directors of the M. P. T. O. K-M. on the second day of the convention and voiced a protest to selecting a seventh man from the outside to come in and assist in settling disputes on the joint board of arbitration. The board contended that the disputes should be disposed of without outside aid. No official action was taken on the matter.

Censorship came in for another "censoring" in an address by the Rev. Earl Blackman.

"I believe that if Christ were on earth today he would use motion pictures in his teachings," said Mr. Blackman. "The public always has been and always will be the only true censor. A governor of a certain state once offered a 1-man censor to me. I refused it. But I started thinking that perhaps I might obtain several assistants from all walks of life. But, after consideration, I concluded that such a board would represent a sad mess of discord."

A second and lengthy telegram from Carl Laemmle was read the final night by Paul Kohner, personal representative of Mr. Laemmle. The telegram assured exhibitors that Universal was not and did not intend to enter into competition with the small town theatre; that the company was obtaining theatres in the larger cities only where circumstances demanded it.

Sales Rally Proves First National Is Aiming Higher

The two-day sales convention of the Eastern District of First National Pictures, held recently at the Roosevelt Hotel, New York, is described as one of the most enthusiastic sales gatherings in the history of the corporation. E. A. Eschmann presided and took up with his branch managers in attendance, the selling plan for the Winner Group of pictures to be released by the company during the new season. The sessions were attended by many of First National's executives who addressed the branch managers on various phases of the company's activities and on the quality of the new product.

The delegates were H. H. Buxbaum, Manager of the Eastern District, and the following Branch Managers, J. C. Vergesslich, New Jersey; Thomas B. Spry, Boston; Robert Smeltzer, Washington; M. H. Keleher, New Haven; A. J. Herman, Albany; F. J. A. McCarthy, Buffalo; and W. J. Heenan, Philadelphia. The Home Office was represented by E. A. Eschmann, A. W. Smith, Jr., Charles M. Steele, W. J. Morgan, S. W. Hatch, C. W. Bunn, S. W. Hand and Allan S. Glenn.

In his address of welcome, Eschmann congratulated the managers present on the fact, that during the first quarter of 1925 the Eastern District had exceeded its quota with a record of 103 per cent.

President Lieber told the branch managers that with the line-up of stories, stars, directors, and the co-operative, quick-action spirit of the selling force, the coming year would witness a greater growth in First National than during any previous year of its existence.

R. A. Rowland, general manager of production, outlined some of the considerations and difficulties which influenced the production department in its efforts to make box-office pictures. He concluded by saying: "I can promise you that the pictures to be released from now to September are the best First National has ever had, and I can safely guarantee a twenty-five per cent. improvement in production during the next season. Our object is to make high-class, individual pictures, and in this we have the sincere backing of President Lieber, who has given us a free hand and aided us in every way."

COLLEEN MOORE GOES ABROAD

Colleen Moore, having recovered from the location accident which confined her to a plaster cast for weeks, sailed from New York Saturday, May 2, on the liner Majestic, being accompanied by her husband, John E. McCormick, western representative of First National Pictures.

This will be the first trip abroad of both Mr. and Mrs. McCormick. They plan a two months' tour of Europe.

Tremendous Influence Is Arousing Public for Greater Movie Season

Letters to M. P. P. D. A. Indicate Many of Nation's Greatest Minds and Organizations Heartily Endorse Movement

CIVIC, industrial and public organizations representing a national membership of millions are directing their efforts toward the success of Greater Movie Season and enthusiastically endorsing the project in letters to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America Inc., which is inaugurating the plan nationally.

"The Greater Movie Season suggests interesting and important possibilities," wrote Lee F. Hanmer, director of the Recreation Department of the Russell Sage Foundation in enlisting his organization in the movement.

"It should serve as a further stimulus to productions of merit. It ought to afford an occasion for turning public attention to the progress that is being made toward higher standards of excellence, and it will be a practical demonstration of the purpose of the producers, distributors and exhibitors to provide right moving pictures if the public will do its part in giving such productions the necessary support."

The Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, executive secretary of the Social Service Department of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, expressed great satisfaction in motion pictures. He stated his belief that the public would respond to Greater Movie Season and assured his organization's co-operation to the utmost. Similar assistance was promised by the American Sunday Union and the Community Center Association.

The campaign also will be carried into the motion picture halls of the Chautauqua Institution during August.

"There is no question in my mind about the people generally supporting a movement of this kind," Thomas E. Finegan of the National Educational Association, wrote. "Some of the most appealing and attractive entertainments provided for the public are moving pictures. There are moving pictures which exercise a fine influence upon the social fabric—that appeal to the intelligence and imagination of an audience. Some of the most dramatic entertainments produced are among moving pictures. You may count upon the co-operation of the National Educational Association."

Hearty endorsement by the twenty thousand citizens of Revolutionary stock composing the Sons of the American Revolution was conveyed to Mr. Hays in a letter from W. I. Lincoln Adams. The support of those working in the interest of young people will be forthcoming from the Boys' Club Federation, according to C. J. Atkinson executive secretary.

"Many of the best films are difficult to popularize and the financial risk of producing them is proportionately great," stated Harold A. Caparn of the American Civic Association.

"All the more praiseworthy therefore is this program of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors. All the more therefore should every citizen and every organization interested in raising the standard of motion pictures, do anything they can to encourage this important enterprise."

Other endorsers of Greater Movie Season include the National Board of Review, the National Committee for the Prevention of Blindness and the New York Knights of Pythias. State branches of many more bodies are active in conjunction with exhibitor organizations.

With wide national support thus guaranteed, the Hays' organization has put in effect plans by which these forces can be marshalled and a concrete alliance with the theatres brought about for complete exhibition benefit when Greater Movie Season opens in August and every avenue of publicity and advertising stimulates public interest.

Deacon Prefers Films to Pulpit

Because some of the deacons of the Lincoln Square Baptist Church in Worcester, Mass., insisted that he should not attend motion picture theatres, the Rev. Floyd H. Adams, pastor, has resigned. He came to Worcester 18 months ago from the Strong Place Baptist Church in Brooklyn. His daughter, Miss Dorothy E. Adams, assistant pastor, also has resigned.

"Conservatism" of the deacons was the cause given by the minister in his letter of resignation. His daughter, however, says the real reason was that a few of the deacons insisted on concerning themselves too much with the private affairs of the minister and his family.

KANE ADDRESSES A. M. P. A.

A humorous talk on the duties of the contact manager featured the last weekly Thursday luncheon at the Cafe Boulevard in New York of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Arthur S. Kane, contact manager for Universal Pictures, being the guest of honor and principal speaker. Speaking of the problems of a contact manager, Mr. Kane declared that the first requisite was to get the job, the second to hold it and the third to ascertain what its duties are.

Union Enjoined from Picketing Westfield Mass., Theatre

J. Louis Lambert, Frank E. Fennessy and John F. Gatelee and all other officers and members of Local 186 of the I. A. T. S. E. of America and Canada, and all officers and members of the Central Labor Union of Westfield, Mass., have been enjoined and restrained from interfering by picketing and patrolling the Rialto Theatre in Westfield. Fred G. Burnham conducts the Rialto.

The Superior Court in Springfield, which issued the restraining order found that Lambert, Fennessy and Gatelee individually and as officers of the union and Benjamin Hull and Dennis Courtney, individually and as officers of the Westfield C. L. U. had combined and conspired unlawfully for the purpose of injuring the business of the Rialto.

The management of the Empire Theatre in Palmer, Mass., has come to a satisfactory agreement with the Motion Picture Operators' Union and union conditions henceforth will prevail. Thus is ended a controversy between the union and theatre extending over a period of three years.

Denies Combine Has New Warner Product

Harry M. Warner wired from the coast this week he had learned, on good authority, that a big theatre combine was informing independent exhibitors that they had made a deal tying up Warner product for next season in their territory, and unless the exhibitors came into the combine by selling or leasing their houses, or permitting the combine to take over their booking dates, they would be unable to obtain Warner and other product for next season.

"Please inform everyone," says Mr. Warner, "that no theatre or circuit of theatres has our product after the present Twenty Screen Classics, and that no arrangements for selling has been made or will be made until after the Milwaukee convention."

NAVY HONORS "ROXY"

Rear Admiral C. P. Plunkett, U. S. N., Commandant of the Third Naval District, has been added to the list of speakers so far announced for the dinner which will be tendered Major S. L. Rothafel (Roxy) at the Hotel Biltmore, Saturday evening, May 9. The Sojourners, New York Chapter No. 13, who are giving this dinner to Major Rothafel in recognition of his efforts in raising funds to supply radio sets for wounded veterans of the World War in government hospitals, are a Masonic organization of officers of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, either active, retired or in the reserve forces. The speeches will be broadcast.

Paul Mooney Resigns Vice-Presidency of Producers Distrib.

Paul C. Mooney, vice-president in charge of sales, Producers Distributing Corporation has resigned his office.

"My contract with Producers Distributing Corporation," said Mooney, "has two more months before it expires, after which I had intended to make other connections. After discussing the situation at length with F. C. Munroe, president, and in view of the extensive plans of the corporation for the coming season, I regarded that the best interest of the company would be served by giving way to a successor at this time instead of later, in the middle of the selling season. The association with Producers Distributing Corporation with its executives, Messrs. Munroe, Raymond Pawley and John C. Flinn has been pleasant and profitable. The record of the company during the past fourteen months speaks for itself and it is with extreme satisfaction and gratification that I review the co-operative achievements of these gentlemen and myself."

Mr. Munroe, president of the company, said, "Mr. Mooney's record in the motion picture industry both before his association with Producers Distributing Corporation and particularly during that time shows unusual ability and grasp of the problems of the motion picture industry. For myself and the other officers of the corporation, I can say that his resignation is taken with sincere regret but with a knowledge that his future undertakings will reflect the same qualities which have made so many friends for him in and out of the industry."

HERMAN HEADS ALBANY BOARD

Alec Herman, manager of First National's exchange in Albany, N. Y., will head the Albany Film Board of Trade for the next year. Mr. Herman was elected president of the association at a meeting held May 4, at the headquarters in the Mark Strand Building in Albany. Mr. Herman succeeds J. H. MacIntyre, manager for Paramount, in that city, who has acted in that capacity for the past year.

Howard Morgan, manager of Educational's Albany office, was re-elected as vice-president of the association, while Herman Stearn, manager of F. B. O., was elected treasurer.

Two new corporations in Rhode Island are as follows: Rocky Point Natatorium Company, Providence; amusements, etc.; capital stock, $50,000; 500 shares preferred at $100 and 1,000 shares common of no par value; incorporators are: H. Minot Pitman, Bronxville, N. Y.; Jas. A. Tillinghast and Colin MacR. Makepeace. Community Theatres, Inc., Providence; capital, $100,000; incorporators are: Daniel Howland, Martin Kaufer, John L. Casey, Courtland L. Potter, Louis Huntoon, Daniel A. Clarke, Arthur Van Dale.

Detroit Organizing Against Bombers

The weekly bombing news from Detroit, received just in time for this issue, concerns the Princess Theatre, an East Side Detroit house, which was blown in early one morning last week by a high explosive tossed from a passing automobile. The bombing of the Princess marks the fifth theatre within the past three months to suffer from the raids of dynamiters.

Owing to the increasing number of houses that are suffering from the work of these tormenters, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan have decided, through their organization, to organize a concerted defense that will aid police.

Warner-Vitagraph Product Subject of Special Meet

As the first step in the sales campaign on the 1925-26 Warner Bros. and Vitagrapn product, Warner Bros. have called a convention to be held in Los Angeles May 12 to 16. This will be attended by all of the sales managers now operating the Vitagraph exchanges throughout the United States and Canada, and the departmental heads of the Warner organization.

Sam E. Morris, general manager of Vitagraph; Herman Starr, of the Warner firm; Meyer Lesser, in charge of national advertising and Gus Schlesinger, foreign manager for Warner Bros., are on their way to the Coast now, having left Wednesday. Harry and Jack Warner are already in Hollywood shaping up the production programs of both Warners and Vitagraph. According to a statement from Warner, the convention will develop among others, these facts:

New product not heretofore mentioned will be offered by Warners and Vitagraph to the exhibitors. The exact number of pictures to be made under the Vitagraph trade mark will be known. The complete lineup of Warner's Forty will be in shape to be announced.

The Warners will also have a representation at the Milwaukee convention next week. Sam and Abe Warner with Watt L. Parker, head of the advertising department, will leave for the convention city on Saturday morning.

REALTOR GETS BOSTON SITES

Three motion picture film buildings in the new filmland section of the South End of Boston have been bought by Frank A. Connors, Boston real estate operator. These include the three-story building at 39 Church street, running through to 20 Melrose street, under lease to Pathe Exchange, Inc.; property at 46 Piedmont street, running through to 37 Winchester street, under lease to F. B. O., Federal Film Company, and the building at 56-58 Piedmont street, under lease to Grand Arrow Company of the Federal Film Corporation. The properties were sold by Edward F. Cassell, who only recently took title to the building. They represent a total valuation of $175,000, of which sum $27,500 is represented by the 7,048 square feet of land.

Albany Exhibitors Pay for Mutilation

Motion picture exhibitors in the wide territory served by Albany exchanges are to be held responsible for all mutilated film received back by the exchanges from now on, and particularly film bearing punch holes made by operators in their desire to know the approaching end of a reel.

Exhibitors will be called upon to pay for such film. It is claimed that a great deal of film with punch holes is being received back by the exchanges and that in some instances very valuable pictures have been badly injured by a succession of punch holes made by different operators.

JOHN C. FLINN

Flinn Made General Manager of Producers Distributing Corp.

AT a special meeting of the division managers of Producers Distributing Corporation, held May 6 at the executive offices of the company, F. C. Munroe, president, officially announced the promotion of John C. Flinn to the position of vice president and general manager, and a member of the board of directors of the corporation.

In his new position Mr. Flinn will take full charge of sales and assume the executive duties just resigned by Paul C. Mooney in addition to supervising the advertising and publicity policies of the company.

Mr. Flinn joined Producers Distributing Corporation less than eighteen months ago and in this short space of time he has, by tireless efforts and the close support and cooperation of F. C. Munroe, completely reorganized the company and placed the organization in the foremost rank of independent distributors. Since his affiliation with the company he has enlarged and strengthened its programs by products from the greatest producing brains in the industry and the rapid advance of Producers Distributing Corporation has, in a great measure, been due to the confidence he has inspired.

Starting on January 10, 1924 with nothing but the skeleton of an organization, Producers Distributing Corporation now has the exclusive product of Cecil B. De Mille, the big feature productions of Al. Christie, the specials and Harry Carey features of Hunt Stromberg, and the productions of George Melford, Frances Marion, Renaud Hoffman and Belasco Productions, Inc. And it is rumored that the new program to be announced shortly will contain the names of at least two other producers of international fame.

F. C. Munroe, in announcing the elevation of Mr. Flinn to a higher position, paid eloquent tribute to his qualities as an executive and a man of broad knowledge, keen judgment, strong personality and great ability.

Universal's Annual Sales Meet to Be Held in Chicago May 9-11

THE largest and most important sales convention in the history of Universal will be held in Chicago May 9, 10 and 11. Universal managers and exploitation men from every exchange in the United States and Canada will gather at the Drake Hotel to meet the home office officials and executives and to get set on the coming year's product and sales policy.

Carl Laemmle, the Universal chief, will be the principal figure at the Chicago powwow. He will announce the Second White List, Universal's 1925-1926 output of 54 big features, to his assembled sales heads, and will recount to them the great strides made by Universal in the past year. Then he will tell what Universal will do during the next twelve months.

Officials to Attend

Other officials to be present in Chicago will be R. H. Cochrane, vice-president, and E. H. Goldstein, treasurer. Arthur S. Kane, the contact executive for the Universal organization, also will be there. The three sales directors, Ned E. Depinet, Ned Marin and Jules Levy, will marshal their forces, assisted by their respective assistants, Dan Michalove, Fred Gage and J. O. Brooks. W. E. Truog, assistant sales director for the Missouri Valley section, is another sales chief slated to play an important part in the annual convention.

List of Speakers

Among the home office executives who will attend the convention and address the sales managers, are Fred McConnell, short product manager; Paul Gulick, director of publicity; George Brown, director of advertising; Jerome Beatty, director of exploitation, and his assistant Joe Weil; Abe Stern, vice-president of Century Comedies and his sales manager, H. M. Herbel; E. D. Leishman, of the auditing department, Don Cobb of the sales promotion department, and R. V. Anderson, sales manager of the International News Reel.

In addition to Harry Zehner, secretary to Mr. Laemmle, the following personal representatives will be present, William Stoermer, Charles E. Burden and Paul Kohner.

The Universal managers attending the convention include S. Wittman, Albany; E. W. Kramer, Buffalo; M. Joseph, New Haven; M. Epstein, Washington; Joe Friedman, Detroit; C. W. Dickinson, Pittsburgh; Clair Haugue, Toronto; D. Leduc, Montreal; C. R. Dippie, Calgary; R. Scott, Vancouver; G. F. Law, Winnipeg; J. Lieberman, St. John; M. E. Morey of the American Feature Film Company, Boston; L. W. Alexander, Chicago; George Levine, Milwaukee; Phil Dunas, Minneapolis; M. Gottlieb, Des Moines; H. J. Chapman, Sioux Falls; H. F. Lefholtz, Omaha; E. Gerbase, Denver; S. Henley, Salt Lake; R. C. Hudson, Butte; L. J. Schlaifer, Seattle; G. E. Jackson, Portland; C. A. Nathan, San Francisco; D. S. Mitchell, Los Angeles; R. McIlleran, Dallas; G. L. Woods,

All of "Big Three" But Metro-Goldwyn Going to Milwaukee

MOVING PICTURE WORLD, just before this issue went to press, made an exhaustive survey of the New York territory to determine what producers and distributors would journey out to Milwaukee to attend the convention. Of the so-called "Big Three" the only one which asserted positively it would send no representative was Metro-Goldwyn. Famous Players-Lasky said that Adolph Zukor, Charles McCarthy and possibly Sidney Kent would be in attendance. First National stated that it would be represented by E. A. Eschmann.

From Fox, Winfield Shean, general manager, with James R. Grainger, advertising manager, and Clyde Eckhart will make the pilgrimage.

At the Universal home office it was said that executives of that company would be engaged in a convention of their own in Chicago, and that Carl Laemmle and several others would pay Milwaukee a visit. Several attempts were made to learn whether United Artists would be represented. No one could be found in the New York office at the time of these calls who would make a statement.

Among the other producers and distributors who will be in appearance at the huge conclave are:

Warner Brothers—Sam Warner, Watt Parker; Pathe—J. S. Storey; B. P. Schulberg Productions, Inc., Mr. Bachmann; Producers Distributing Corporation—John Flinn; Artclass—Louis Weiss; Independent—Jesse J. Goldburg; Rayart—W. Ray Johnston and Milton Simon; William Steiner Productions—Bill Steiner; Arrow—Doc Shallenberger; Associated Exhibitors—J. S. Woody; Banner—Henry Ginsberg; C. B. C.—Jack Cohn, David O'Malley; Chadwick—I. E. Chadwick, S. S. Krellberg, Harry Thomas; F. B. O—J. I. Schnitzer, Nat G. Rothstein, Al Boasberg, Chas. Rosenzweig; Lumas—Sam Sax, Budd Rogers; Jans Productions—Herman Jans; Sering D. Wilson—C. Lang Cobb.

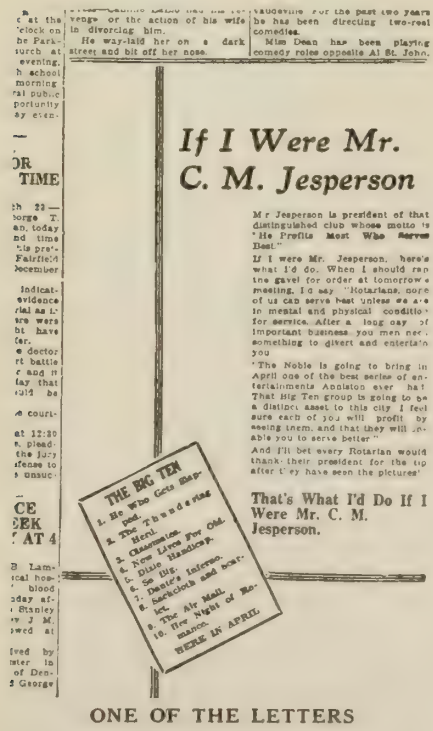
SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Uses Open Letters to Prominent Men to Sell a Theatre's Special Features

RECENTLY Roy Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., decided to sell ten big bookings as a series, and started a campaign on his "Big Ten Photoplays." His campaign was so well done and brought such good results that Lem Stewart, of the Paramount Theatres Department, with the approval of Harold B. Franklin, has made the campaign into one of his special "portfolios" which have done so much to improve selling on the circuits.

The campaign is very simple in its plan, and this simplicity is what makes for effectiveness, for the simplest plans generally are the best. In essence it is a series of "If I owned this paper" idea, but instead of using that precise angle the change is made to "If I were," with mention of some leading citizen.



ONE OF THE LETTERS

Mr. Smart had ten bookings that he considered to be of exceptional value. These were He Who Gets Slapped, The Thundering Herd, Classmates, New Lives for Old, The Dixie Handicap, So Big, Dante's Inferno, Sackcloth and Scarlet, The Air Mail and Her Night of Romance. These were made by Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn, First National and Fox, from which it will be seen that it was not purely a Paramount stunt.

The advertisements were exceptionally well set; particularly when it is considered that Anniston is not a very large place. Mr. Smart picked a typographical style within the limits of the office, but he got the best he could with the facilities at hand, and we do not believe that any of the large papers could do much better. Certainly Harry Reichenback got no better when he adapted the time-honored scheme to use in the New York papers.

Varied Appeal

The illustration shows the second in the series, that addressed to the president of the Rotary Club. The first was to J. T. Gardner, Jr., president of the First National Bank. He was supposed to have good judgment, and so he could appreciate the value of the series. Smart, in his place, would have called a special meeting of the directors to tell them about the Big Ten.

The third was addressed to the Exchange Club and then in order to the Kiwanis, Axis and Civitan clubs, and wound up with an "If I were YOU."

An unexpected result of the first letter was a three four and a halfs taken by the bank addressed in bold type "To any who can't see the big ten" on account of a lack of funds, and offering to arrange a loan if they would call at the bank, because "the pictures coming to the Noble Theatre in April are good enough to borrow the money to see." When a bank will come out as flat footed as that, it means something.

Mr. Smart prepared a special booklet on the Big Ten with a blank form on the face reading "I saw (space for name of picture) and did not think I received more than full value. I request a return of admission price."

Spaces for the name and address followed and the promise was made that any such slip presented at the box office would be redeemed without question.

To heighten interest and sink in the title, there was also a contest in which ticket prizes were awarded those who worked the ten titles into an intelligent sentence. There were 29 words in the title and the contestant was not permitted to use more than sixteen additional words, or 45 words in all. There was no gambling "first" about the idea. It was purely a "best" stunt.

This is just another phase of the Big Week idea, but it is a new handling and a better one. Save it up if you don't need it right away.

Told of Tarnish

Dewey Mousson, of the Knickerbocker Theatre, Knoxvillle, Tenn., got the paint dealer to suggest that a tarnished house could be brightened with his product. It was not a particularly apt hook in, but it got a big window display. You can't ask more than that.

Then he sold the Remington agency on the argument that the typist in the play looked so well pleased because she used one of their machines. This card started off with "Wherever you find a happy typist—"

Both came easy and aided a big house dis- The pillars were out of the stock room and play.

Taxi Heralds

Ray Coffin, of the downtown West Coast theatres in Los Angeles, has a new idea. He arranges with the taxicab companies to place heralds in their cabs. The fare has time to read the herald, and if he carries it away with him, the driver slips in another. This means passes for the drivers now and then, but it is well worth the passes. He puts out about 3,500 a week.

First National Releases

THE FIRST NATIONAL TWELVE SHEETS HAVE MADE A HIT

This photograph of a stand at Coney Island for The Lost World and Quo Vadis during their New York runs show how the Quo Vadis 24-sheets had to be cut down to make the space where The Lost World paper was an exact fit. Watch for more twelves.

Hoisted the Hennery

Edgar Hart, of the Opera House, Augusta, Maine, one of the Gray string, pulled a pretty one for his Easter stunt. He made a small cage from waste material, gilded it, and put in a hen and a rooster. This was swung from the underside of the canopy with a banner reading: "We can crow about our Easter program." The details of the booking were added. By picking out a lively rooster Edgar was assured plenty of crowing, and the stunt attracted no end of attention.

The hen laid an egg each day—or was supposed to—and this was presented at the matinee to some child to be taken home and colored for Easter. There was no drawing or anything. The egg was merely handed to some child.

The poultry cost $2 and the paint possibly a quarter. The nest was all salvaged stuff and represented no cost. It really pushed business up.

Hooks Camera Co. to Big Local Act

H. M. Addison's latest is an adaptation of the local talent stunt plus a hint from the radio. Binghamton, N. Y., is the home of the Ansco camera and in return for an Ansco Night the company gave Mr. Addison forty cameras to offer as souvenirs.

The Ansco show was a two-part musical comedy written in sets showing the offices of the company and presenting 25 local players in a medley of songs and dances staged by Kathleen Barry Addison.

If you know the pull that any sort of a local stunt exerts, you do not have to be told that this brought big business to the Binghamton Theatre. It did more than that; it packed them in.

Of course the big idea is that you, too, can tie some local concern to a special night, even though you may have no big manufacturer to work with. You can scale the stunt to the size of your town and its industries.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

"His Supreme Moment," the First National with Blanche Sweet and Ronald Colman, which sent its fast-moving story across the flicker sheet in one hour and fourteen minutes, was surrounded by two short subjects and five musical incidents. The result was a show of two hours and one minute that exuded a great deal of diversity. The short films were the usual Topic Review made up from Fox, Pathe and International news reels, and an Out of the Inkwell cartoon called "Big Chief Ko Ko."

The overture was a special adaptation of Offenbach's "LaBelle Helene," made by Emil Bierman, conductor of the orchestra, who put it very nicely into eight minutes. The lighting scheme: Apple blossom trees in the transparent windows at either side of the stage were taken out and replaced by mirror mosaic vases filled with silvered leaves. Entrance spots on vases, one light green and the other rose purple. Mestrum floods from dome, one medium green on hedge row at proscenium and the other pink on musicians. From the booth one purple flood on metalline draw curtains over production stage and the second also purple flooding whole set. Foots and borders of blue.

Harry Breuer, xylophonist of the orchestra, was incident No. 2 in a selection specially arranged, introducing "Twelfth Street Rag." He played from his accustomed place in the ensemble, under an amber overhead spot. Floods named above were dimmed off from the dome, leaving the deep colors from the booth. Three minutes.

Mayhew L. Lake's Romance Suite of three selections was given special staging. A black canvas drop with circle opening in centre was used. In the opening was platform, backed up by a plush drop against the back wall and with apple blossom trees holding the centre. A marble bench was only other property. On the stage, in front of the black canvas drop and at either side of the opening were two bay trees. The numbers: "Sweetheart of All My Dreams," sung by soprano on the stage with pantomime by "boy and girl" on the platform. Box lamps of blue from the sides. "When Summer Comes Again," by contralto, with "business" by two girls costumed as Indians. Box lamps of red. "Tomorrow May Never Come," by baritone, with premiere daneuse dancing one chorus and with the soprano and contralto aiding on the finish. Green and pink spots from overhead flooded the trees. Nine minutes.

After the Topical Review came an operatic tenor in an aria from Verdi's "Il Trovatore." He sang on the apron of the large stage, under an orange spot from the dome. A magenta Mestrum flood was on the musicians from the booth; large stage in blue. Gold draw curtains over the small stage, flooded by the magenta flood named above. Three minutes for the aria.

Chinese Jade was a ballet that lent an exotic touch to the program. Premiere danseuse and six dancers, in Chinese silks, in an original dance. Silver beaded curtains were used as a back drop, flooded medium green. Set dragons were at either side of the set. Front lights were various shades of green. Six minutes.

Estelle Carey, lyric soprano, appeared on the apron of the orchestra stage, singing "Count the Stars," by Gray. A lemon flood played on her from the dome. Large stage was in blue, and two deep blue floods were on the orchestra from the booth. Metalline draw curtains closed over the production stage. Four minutes.

Seven Chances

A really novel hook to Buster Keaton in Seven Chances was staged in Madison, Wis., where a safety first demonstration was arranged for the Strand Theatre.

Six trucks each carried an automobile in more or less damaged condition. The first was but slightly hurt but the sixth was an almost complete wreck. Each was labeled "Chance 1", and so to the sixth. The seventh chance was supposed to be represented by a hearse which followed the trucks and which was lettered "That party inside took one chance too many."

An ambulance would have been better.

There was also an essay contest on Safety with a fifty dollar prize, of which the house contributed $30 and a local casualty company the remainder.

A DIFFERENT AND STRIKING DISPLAY ON CLASSMATES FROM FORT SMITH, ARK.

This was planned by R. P. Newton, of the Capitol, but the effect of the coloring, which was the chief appeal of the display, is lost in this black and white. Perhaps you can visualize the effect of the shields, the long file of cadets on the left and the night scene on the right. The Army recruiters got back of the picture and donated nine A boards in the best locations in town.

Comparatively little work gave Charles H. Amos a striking display at the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., yet he could have done no better with the most elaborate hand painting. The cutout 24-sheet head gives the dominant note.

Took a Full Page in New York Paper

This full page from a New York Sunday newspaper on The Wizard of Oz, at the Cameo Theatre, made a sensation with those who saw it, for full pages in New York papers are seldom used.

A Chadwick Release

A NEW YORK FULL PAGE

But this is from a paper the average New Yorker never sees. The Bulletin is a two-cent evening paper with a rather limited circulation, but it issues a Sunday edition that shares with the Telegram, the Sunday afternoon sale, and it helped business at the Cameo since it largely circulates in the theatrical district. It is a well drawn layout, and should prove interesting from this angle, for The Wizard is a play that will yield a return on circus methods.

Phoned by Proxy

Answering phone calls about a coming play is not new, even when a window is used for the telephone booth, but down in Oklahoma City a new thrill was put into the old stunt.

The operator was none other than last year's Miss Oklahoma City from the Atlantic City contest, and while she did not wear her bathing suit she was still personable and soothing to the eyes. A card told you to call a certain number, and lots of men hustled to the nearest pay station so as to lose no time.

They could not know that the respondent was a girl chosen for her voice rather than her looks, but it was the fact. Too much trouble to hook up the phone in the window, so Miss O. C. just went through the motions while another girl did the talking down at the Liberty Theatre and praised The Price of Pleasure.

Traveling Radio Was Good Worker

Another radio idea was developed when The Mad Whirl was doubled at the Kings and Rivoli Theatres, St. Louis.

Al McGinnes, publicity man for William Goldman's houses, and Maurice Davis, Universalist, built up the idea, which was a giant reviving set fitting a small truck. Inside it was equipped with a phonograph and phone loud speakers. Antenna rigged to the top of the outfit and the bannering announced that it was a part of WIL, the St. Louis Star, the newspaper having given permission to use the name in return for the advertising it got.

The announcer would make announcement of some selection, which was supplied by phonograph, though announced as received from some regular source. After the selection would come the announcement: "This is station WIL, the St. Louis Star broadcasting. Reviewing The Mad Whirl, now at the Kings and Rivoli, the Washington, (D. C.) Post declared———." Half a dozen snappy criticisms and another selection would be put on while the "station" traveled to the next pitch.

It would seem that in a smaller town this could be worked into a regular nightly feature, with a little merchant advertising thrown in to absorb the major portion of the expense.

An Easter Greeting

E. A. Givan, of the Imperial Theatre, Sussex, N. B., sends in an Easter advertisement in which most of the space is given to an emblematical frame and an Easter Greeting. It is a nice handling of white space and very attractive.

He also sends in a "warning" card on Harold Lloyd, in which patrons are warned that they burst the seams of their garments or rip off buttons at their own risk while viewing Safety Last, which is described as having "as many roars as the Atlantic Ocean, but louder." That's a nice line to remember.

Used Three Angles in Selling Lincoln

New Orleans was rather late in getting the Rockett-First National Abraham Lincoln, the picture not coming to the Saenger house until Lincoln's Birthday, which helped to launch it.

The management, aided by Wayland Taylor, a First National exploiteer, drove on three angles, educational, industrial and entertainment values, and Wayland visited most of the industrial plants and sold the foreman on the idea of endorsing the picture to his forces to help their Americanization. New Orleans has a large foreign population, chiefly French and Italian, and this angle was important.

The school teachers were approached on the educational value of the picture and a special showing arranged for them the week before the opening. The library gave out 5,000 book markers on books on Lincoln, and the scores of antique stores hooked in with period displays.

The final punch was a prologue in which a young man who looked not unlike Lincoln, delivered excerpts from his speeches, winding up with an appeal to the South that swept the audience into the spirit of the picture.

Coffin Bats Another

Ray Coffin, publicity man for the downtown West Coast theatres in Los Angeles, is certainly earning his salary by using his well-equipped thinker.

For a couple of years local radio fans have been listening to a jazz bunch known as the Hollywoodland Community Orchestra, Hollywoodland being an annex to Hollywood proper.

When Inez from Hollywood was booked into the W. C., Coffin arranged with the publicity man of the real estate development to supply a special drop in return for the appearance of the orchestra; their first "in person" appearance.

That got all of the radio fans in and around Los Angeles for the mere cost of a painted drop, or rather repainting an old one.

Suspended Dix

Pat McGee, of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, got a simple and novel lobby display on Too Many Kisses. He used fifteen small heads of Richard Dix, each fastened to a broad ribbon of crepe paper and hung across the front of the lobby, below the house banner at varying heights to give an arch effect. A larger head was placed against the box office guard rail, with a large lettered heart directly above. It made a striking effect.

Pretty Soft

It comes pretty soft for Frank J. Miller when he can tag to the big local event, but it wasn't just luck.

He had The Thundering Herd coming to the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., and he was working all sorts of stunts. Along came the dawn-to-dusk flight of Army planes from Miami to Detroit. They were due for a stop in Augusta and Mr. Miller arranged to have a big bomber throw out his heralds. These announced the coming of the fliers and the coming of The Thundering Herd.

But Miller did not merely ask for and get the privilege. He got it because he works in with the Board of Commerce on everything that helps Augusta.

Had Personal Drive On Thundering Herd

When he saw The Thundering Herd screened Vinton Sholl, of the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, decided that he could oversell North of 36, and as a starter he wired his home office his opinion of the picture. It was not so much that he thought that the home office cared a lot, but he wanted the wire to reproduce in his local work.

Then he put in an order for 64 stands, 150 six sheets, 150 threes and some ones and window cards.

He printed up 5,000 heralds with his personal opinion and sent these out to the mailing list and the night before his Saturday opening he gave a special showing to the members of the Old time Trail Drivers' Association.

He got a window in a large department store for the display of the only buffalo robe he could find outside of a museum, and added to this a display of Indian and buffalo paintings by a local artist famous for these subjects.

One of his best stunts was a card in the buffalo pen at the Zoo, and a cutout at the Buckhorn Palace, where there is one of the finest collections of mounted heads and similar trophies in or out of a museum.

He used 20,000 paper napkins, and used 3,000 book marks through the library.

It did not surprise him to find that the picture ran a close third to Thirty-Six, which had been topped only by The Covered Wagon.

cares for itself. The question is merely one of refinement. This undoubtedly proved a good seller. The arguments are presented so that they may be read with the least difficulty, there is good display for star and title. We think, however, that the cuts were poorly selected, though perhaps these were the only ones Mr. Ackerman was able to obtain. However it is possible that he selected these as giving the best possible display to the type argument which he knew would sell better than cut matter on this picture. The cut on the right seems to have been planned for a two column display. Certainly it was not drawn to be used in a four or five column layout. We think it was meant for use in a long and narrow two in which the man and the vase balance the towers on the right. Used in this manner it is a good drawing, but it does not work well where the vase is left near the centre of the display. It would have helped a little to have cropped off the square edge at the left, but it was not meant to be a wide space and it does not fit well. But this is better than the cut on the left. There is not enough of this to make for effect, and it seemingly was intended to edge a smaller display. It would have made for a more sightly advertisement had this been left blank, for white space, would have been more impressive than a cut which gives two thirds of the space to only two lines. In the same spirit it might be suggested that in the copy it might have helped to have set the "Have you ever seen" which opens the first four paragraphs, in a bold or an italic. And then, with the cut base out of the way, the last paragraph might have been amplified. It is weak in its appeal as it stands. Better copy would have been: "This beautiful story of romance and adventure abounds in displays of unwonted happenings and almost unbelievable magic, of which the four effects noticed above are but a small part." Setting along these lines would have made a more sightly and attractive an advertisement, but we don't know that it would have sold many more tickets. We imagine that it got over just as it is, but there is some moral value to the best displayed space, and a neater arrangement certainly would not have hurt sales. United Artists generally offer a fine assortment of cuts, and it should have been possible to have obtained better cut material, though we think that Mr. Ackerman is wise in avoiding too much cut on this subject. Cuts are useful where you have little that can be talked about, and the Thief does not fall into this classification.

Makes Pretty Ads By Changing Cuts

This space from the Majestic Theatre, Mansfield, O., seems to have been made up with a pair of the plan book cuts, one three and one four working in the six column space. Getting a four and a three into a six may sound like putting three pints into a quart jar, but the cuts are made scant to permit them to be worked with borders, and the edge of the title cut appears to have been trimmed. The space is a little more than eight inches deep, and there is no general demand for cuts for this size, but the two work nicely in combination and look as well as though the design had all been drawn at one time on the same piece of board. Both cuts have been notched to let in the lower lines, but the work has been so well done that the effect is precisely as good as though these cuts had been drawn especially for the space and the cost of a pair of mats and the necessary notching is much less than the charge for special art would have been. An intelligent and willing compositor is much more of an asset to a house than a tame artist, for he does not want to hand letter everything. The Majestic has produced a far more sightly advertisement than most of the locally produced special art layouts, and it has done this at a fraction of the cost. The copy is written to get the interest of those who like the type of story, so it sells to the best advantage. Similar copy might not sell some pictures to advantage, but it will sell to those who like the semi-sophisticated stories that Connie specializes in when she isn't trying experiments, and the text tracks well with the Fourth-of-July title cut. It is a thoroughly good layout in all its features because it goes together so well. Both the house and the composing room have done their best.

It was hooked to "Scientists are agreed that under certain given conditions nine out of ten women would act alike" but that somewhere in Harrisburgh there was the tenth woman, and he and the local paper wanted to know all about her. The cooperative page was merely a by product compared to the interest the competition itself aroused, and naturally the contestants came to the show to see what this tenth woman had done. Of course the solution offered by the play was not to be the prize winner. It had to be something different. It was a fine chance to rake up old scandals. We are wondering what Steve unearthed.

helps the display. But with such a type layout we think the picture could have been put over without the cut, saving about sixteen inches of space. Here is a type display that carries no excessive all capital lines, that puts over a four line reading bank and gives full display to star, title and support. It has the display value of a 24-sheet in the newspaper page, not alone because the type faces are well chosen but because there is a reasonable proportion of white space. When a printing office can give such results as these, cuts become a secondary consideration. They may enliven the space, but they really are not needed. Victoria is rather a sleepy old town, but they have at least one good printer living there.

stronger through cutting the backgrounds from the cuts, but it serves well as it stands and gives a three column value to a two column space. This is because the eighteen point has nothing larger to fight. Possible larger lines in adjacent spaces are hedged off by the line panel, and this could go to the mat with a circus ad and not come out second best. It is just an application of contrast, but it saves at least a third of the space cost and gives rather more in attraction.

Sells Productions On An Endorsement

This three sevens for the Kings and Rivoli theatres, St. Louis is too crowded to be a good layout and hand lettering kills much of whatever value it might have. It is designed so that type could have been used easily and to the vast improvement of the display, particularly for the main selling appeal, which is the personal endorsement. Set into type this would have shown up through contrast as well as because of its greater legibility, but this clumsy art work nearly kills it, and hand stuff not only spoils the display, but costs more in actual money for lettering work and cut making. But the cost of the cut and labor is but a trifle compared to the money that is lost through not getting the appeal over. The guarantee reads "For the first time in it's history the management of the Kings and Rivoli gives a production its unqualified endorsement, because Smouldering Fires has the three elements which make a perfect picture, a great director, great cast and great story." It's a detail that the artist makes the usual error and letters it "it's" instead of "its." He's an artist, not a word expert, and probably doesn't know that "it's" is a contraction of "it is" and not the possessive of it." That's another thing we hold against most house artists. They don't know how to spell even when they get the proper copy. The house and not the artist will be blamed for the error. Had we been laying this out, we think we should have put the endorsement ahead of the picture, letting it go to the top, and we should have printed so it could be and we should have been at great pains to have it printed so it could be read.

Prize Contest for Situations Wanted

During the run of He Who Gets Slapped at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, prizes of cash and tickets were offered for the best written want advertisements submitted to the Georgian. It was run as a newspaper idea for the education of the public in the use of classified spaces, but He was prominently mentioned through the ticket hookup. The advertisements were not required to be inserted in the paper, but all paid insertions were automatically entered in the contest. As the top prizes was $10 a lot of entries were received, and a real interest in the classified ads was created.

All of the hotels distributed guest cards reading "Go to the show tonight" on one side with the suggestion that He was the best picture for those who sought entertainment.

The radio was used to tell about the story and 500 hands were used, lettered in white on a black ground. These were stuck upon windshields and gummed to the sidewalks.

"Friendly Enemies"

Famous Team, Weber and Fields, in Popular Stage Success, Should Prove Box-Office Bonanza

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Weber and Fields—unquestionably the most celebrated team of comedians that the amusement world has produced. For a generation this pair has been famous. Separating several years ago, the demand that they appear together again has been insistent and the few occasions on which they have acceded have resulted in crowded theatres. The fact, therefore, that Joe Weber and Lew Fields actually appear in the leading roles of the Producers Distributing Corporation picture, "Friendly Enemies," makes this a screen event of unusual importance.

So widespread was the interest in this famous pair whose names have become a tradition of the theatre that the story of their experiences was published in book form, achieving great popularity, and the Saturday Evening Post further broadcasted to millions of readers the fascinating biography of this pair.

In offering this famous team in a motion picture the exhibitor has therefore the advantage of not only exceptional possibilities for exploitation but of great interest already created for him. But in addition to this, the value of the picture itself should not be overlooked, for "Friendly Enemies" on the stage proved one of the most human and popular of the war plays and was a tremendous success.

From a showmanship angle alone it should therefore be an easy task for the exhibitor to fill his theatre. "Weber and Fields" and "Friendly Enemies" will get them in; this combination should prove a box-office bonanza.

As to the production itself. While it is a story of the early days of the great war, the plight of the kindly old German-American divided in his allegiance to his fatherland and the U. S. A. and striving to conscientiously serve both is still an appealing one. And Lew Fields gives a magnificent performance in this role, making it intensely real and lovable. No one can help sympathizing with the old fellow in his dilemma or refrain from laughing at the comedy in the scenes where he is perennially engaged in wordy battles with his old crony, portrayed by Joe Weber. Added to the human interest and comedy there is a strong appeal to patriotism. The machinations of the spy who secures money from the old man which he uses in blowing up the very transport on which his only son sails develops good melodrama, and the manner in which the spy is finally trapped has punch. The picture, too, is not without its romance between the children of the old cronies, but this has been subordinated.

George Melford has given this production excellent direction and the supporting cast is composed of well known players who all give good performances; but, after all, it is Weber and Fields in which the public interest will be centered, and Joe Weber, with much less opportunities, proves, as always, an excellent foil for Lew Fields in his comedy; and although the former Dutch character make-up is absent, the scenes in which they talk into each other's face are amusingly reminiscent of the old days.

Carl Pfeiffer, a wholesale shoe dealer, and Henry Block, a banker, came over from Germany in their younger days and have been life-long friends, but their greatest joy is in continually arguing with each other. The World War proves a fertile field for discussion as Block is wholly American, while Pfeiffer is torn between allegiance to Germany and America. When America enters the war, Pfeiffer's son, William, goes to a training camp but fears to tell his father. In a few months he is commissioned and ordered to sail. His father is so deeply hurt that he wanders for hours in the street and tries to persuade him not to sail, but finally tells him to go. In the meantime, Miller, a spy, has prevailed on Pfeiffer to give money to keep the troops from sailing, and uses it to place a spy aboard the Titan, on which William is to sail. Hilda, a secret service employe who has become friendly with Miller, learns of the plot, but too late to stop it. The transport is disabled and Pfeiffer is heartbroken at the thought that he has aided in killing his own son. Suddenly William reappears uninjured, and Pfeiffer and Block, who is also in the secret service, plan to trap Miller. This is accomplished through the aid of Hilda. William finds happiness with Block's daughter, June. The friendship between the old cronies is again cemented and Pfeiffer indicates that his allegiance is entirely with America when in an argument he objects to being called Carl and says his name is Charlie.

Universal Offers Jack Hoxie in Western of Average Entertainment Value

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Ridin' Thunder," Jack Hoxie's latest Blue Streak Western for Universal, affords average entertainment for audiences liking stories of the open spaces. It will not impress particularly because it is weak in dramatic material and also because the plot relies on the time-honored stunt of efforts to save a man unjustly condemned of murder.

Except for the excess footage, the picture has been well constructed by Director Cliff Smith, and the acting of Hoxie, Katherine Grant, Jack Pratt, Francis Ford and the other players is good. The backgrounds, while not notable for their beauty, as in previous Blue Streak Westerns, are attractive.

The opening scenes outline the characters. Those immediately following show galloping riders galore but do not hint at any development of plot. The audience is left in the dark until, suddenly, a murdered man is discovered and an arrest is made. Then the action proceeds swiftly and with telling effect until the convicted man's son begins his race against time with the pardon. This race is unduly prolonged.

"Ridin' Thunder," then, carries the conventional western story and is well acted, but there is not enough story material for the footage used.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Albany Showman Hasn't Missed Performance in Over Two Years

You exhibitors who are already looking forward to summer and all that it may mean in the way of vacations, how do you measure up to C. L. Gardner, who runs the Pine Hills Theatre in Albany and who hasn't missed a single show in two and one-half years? Not such a bad record and quite possibly the reason why Mr. Gardner is making a house pay that might easily otherwise have become a "white elephant." Mr. Gardner admits that he is a busy man, in fact so busy that he says he hasn't time even to be sick. Mr. Gardner before coming to Albany was in the same business in Connecticut, but is frank in admitting that in those days he occasionally took a day off.

An admission of 15 and 20 cents, which is never raised, and a daily change of pictures rule at the theatre. "Robin Hood" was the best picture Mr. Gardner ever ran from the standpoint of receipts, and this one is held over for a couple of days. Along with pictures Mr. Gardner doles out ice cream to his patrons during the summertime, while another little stunt is a balcony where the men may go and enjoy a cigar as they sit and watch the pictures upon the screen. Many a couple come to the theatre every night, the wife going to a seat on the main floor and the husband to the balcony, joining after the show.

Walter Hays, the "Big Chief" of the New York State M. P. T. O., was in town during the past week not so much upon state business as in looking after his own theatre holdings in Albany and Troy. Mr. Hays said that while the past winter was a bang-up good one he looked for an even better fall and winter next year.

Oscar Perrin of the Leland Theatre was all puffed up last week, and well he had a right to be, for didn't Sam Scribner, general manager of the Columbia Amusement Company and his former boss, climb up a steep pair of stairs to say "Hello?" Oscar worked for him for seventeen years.

The Graylin Theatre in Gouvérneur did itself proud last week when "The Man Without a Country" was shown under the auspices of the American Legion. There was an enlarged orchestra as well as a male quartette, and the members of the G. A. R. were also the honor guests, marching to the theatre with their colors flying at the head.

Jimmy Rose does not intend to run any more society pictures at the Columbia Theatre in Rensselaer. He took over the house only a few weeks ago and quickly ascertained that the railroad men who constitute a good part of Rensselaer's population wanted outdoor pictures and remained at home when the other sort were shown. Mr. Rose put on his first children's matinee at the Columbia last Saturday and the house was so packed that it would have required a shoe horn to have slipped another boy in. Mr. Rose is running serials at all of his houses on Saturdays and finds that they are panning out well. His brother, Harry, resigned after two weeks as manager of the Columbia and has been succeeded by William Aukett.

Joe Braff of the Lyric in Albany, dropped in at one of the exchanges last week and left a handsome rose or two for the girls.

Remember Harry Lauder's old-time song of how he hated to get up in the morning? Perhaps Betty Feuer, the 20-year-old miss who runs the Crescent in Schenectady, knows the words by heart, for she admits that she hates, yes, just simply hates, "to get up in the morning." She has a new car and the only chance she gets to learn to drive it is during the morning. Naturally, she hasn't received her driving license yet.

No Sun Dial?

If you ever happen to be in Schenectady and meet William Shirley of Farash Theatres, just ask him what time it is. He is well supplied with watches.

In fact, he carries no less than three, one upon the wrist, another handsome affair given him a year ago by Albany film managers and a third which he bought with his own cash.

Just why Mr. Shirley carries all the watches no one seems to know, but what holds good with the smaller time pieces holds good with the clocks, for at the Shirley home there are no less than six of the latter.

When Claude Fish of the American in Schenectady came to Albany the other day he found there would be a meeting of the Arab Patrol that night. Mr. Fish naturally stayed over, being a lieutenant in the Schenectady patrol, and when it came Tuesday night of course he went to the Elks. Daytimes he spends in fixing over his home.

Lew Fisher is branching out as might be expected. Mr. Fisher hails from Fort Edward and about every so often can be depended upon to acquire another theatre. Last week he took over the Bradley in Fort Edward and now he plans to get busy at once in remodeling the house and making it one of the best in that part of the state.

Charles Marshall, who runs the Bridge Theatre in Ausable Forks, hadn't been along Film Row for several months until last week when he did a bit of shopping and also left boxes of candy for the girls in a number of the exchanges.

Herman Vineberg, manager of the Mark Strand in Albany, was about as tired a person last week as one could find. It was not so much his duties around the theatre, even though Mr. Vineberg works from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m., but the additional task that came from moving into a new home. The Mark Strand will don its slip covers the last of the month and will again have the beautiful flower baskets hanging from the marquee. In fact, local florists started the baskets nearly a month ago.

Mrs. Catherine Farrell, who with her son Harold runs the Lincoln in Schenectady, doesn't believe in killing oneself in chasing the elusive dollar. For five years Mrs. Farrell has made a good living from the Lincoln, a 17-cent residential house, seating about 800 and always spick and span. Mrs. Farrell could have taken over a couple of other houses a few weeks ago, but as she explained it, she had been working hard all her life and wanted to take things a bit easy. They have just bought a new car and she is following out her precepts. A new frame in the lobby of the theatre carries the words: "Let us be neighborly. Patronize neighborhood business."

George Dwore, who runs the Cameo and Capitol theatres in Schenectady, has a brand new car. But let him get with Samuel Feuer, and there is just one subject of conversation as the two argue over which has the better car. Of course George is a lawyer and arguing comes pretty easy.

No wonder Earl Raifstranger, who runs the "Mohaiwe" in Great Barrington, Mass., looks the picture of health. The other afternoon he played a round or two of golf and then spent the evening in bowling.

H. E. Haff of Adams, Mass., who runs the Photoplay Theatre there, is remodeling his home at the present time. Mrs. Benjamin Taylor of North Adams, another exhibitor, who spent the winter abroad, is back on the job.

Here's the best of luck to you, John Garry, manager of the Empire in Glens Falls, and we hope that your married years may be both long and pleasant. Mr. Garry will take unto himself a wife during the coming month of June.

Lynn, Mass., Theatre Employes Surprise with Quiet Marriage

A real romance has been discovered in Lynn despite the alleged attempts of the two involved in it to keep the matter a secret. Congratulations now are in order for Miss Florence Lucy of the Mark-Strand Theatre, Lynn, and Royce J. Beckman of the Waldorf, also controlled by Moe Mark, in the same city. Sometime around noon on April 26, Miss Lucy and Mr. Beckman succeeded in locating a minister who was willing to join them in the holy bonds of matrimony. Both said their "yesses" and then—well, the Strand and Waldorf had to be opened at 3 p. m. as usual. So to the ticket office at the Strand goes Miss——— beg pardon, 'twas then Mrs. Beckman—and to the Waldorf hiked her hubby. Somehow the cat got out of the bag and soon the news of the marriage of this popular couple was broadcast throughout Lynn's theatre circles. But the following day—Monday—Mr. and Mrs. Beckman were among those missing. They'd gone on their honeymoon.

Mrs. Beckman has been cashier at the Mark-Strand in Lynn for about six years and her husband also has been employed by the Mark interests for several years. Before becoming house manager of the Waldorf, Mr. Beckman was assistant to Al Newhall, managing director of the Strand, Comique and Waldorf theatres. Mrs. Beckman also formerly was at the Comique.

A large audience in the Fenway Theatre in Boston watched the show at a recent performance, unaware of the close proximity of a blaze that filled the street about the Fenway with dense clouds of smoke. Managing Director Laurence F. Stuart decided it was best not to alarm the audience and his usual good judgment did not fail him.

Canada

Don Stapleton, manager of the Centre Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, pulled off a brilliant bit of detective work when the residence of his father, B. F. Stapleton, owner of the Centre Theatre, was entered by burglars on May 2, the goods taken including two ladies' handbags containing $164 and two valuable fishing rods. When the robbery was discovered Sunday morning, Don made a close examination and was rewarded by the finding of a piece of paper bearing a name. This proved to be a valuable clue. The burglars were arrested by local detectives within a few hours. They confessed and received heavy sentences. Don received front page publicity in the Ottawa Journal because of his success as a sleuth.

Articles of incorporation have been taken out under the Companies Act in Canada by N. and A. Lawand of Montreal, Quebec, for the two attractive houses which they now operate in that city, the Dominion Theatre and the Laurier Palace. These are handsome neighborhood houses which are conducted on an independent basis.

The Bridge Theatre, Natural Bridge avenue, St. Louis, is in charge of its new owner, J. Madison.

Callers of the week included: Tom Reed, Duquoin, Ill.; John Rees, Wellsville, Mo.; Green Luttrell, Jacksonville, Ill.; Jack Pratt, Fulton, Mo., and Mrs. I. W. Rodgers, Cairo, Ill.

Balaban & Katz Score Heavily With the Take-a-Chance Week

One of the finest bits of showmanship put over by Balaban & Katz was the Take-a-Chance week at the Chicago Theatre last week. For several weeks before the event publicity broadcast about the fine program for the mysterious seven days starting April 27 and the patrons of the house packed the house to the doors. Several unusual features were introduced, among them the orchestra playing the opening numbers of the musical program without the direction of a leader. The twin organs of the house were manned by Mrs. Crawford until they found Jesse Crawford in golf togs talking about his wonderful game of golf to a brother entertainer, and then he went down and did his bit dressed in his outdoor costume.

Two girls announced each act by number that they called off from two chance wheels erected one on each side of the big stage. There were plenty of musical numbers, two presentations and lots of dancing, with the feature, "Excuse Me," bringing the two hour and a half program to a close. Remember, they got all of this for 50 cents, first come, first served. Now that the Chicago Theatre has had such a great success of Take-a-Chance week in the face of daylight saving and slumps in many of the other houses, there will be a deluge of similar events, it is predicted.

Another big picture theatre is projected for the North Shore, this time at Waukeegan, Ill., by a syndicate composed of H. C. Burnett, David T. Webb, A. L. Brunnund and Lee McDonough. The site has been bought at the northeast corner of Clayton and Genesee street and the house when completed is expected to cost more than a million dollars. Marks Brothers of this circuit, who operate the Broadway Strand and other houses and who are building a new house at Devon and Sheridan Road here, have leased the house for a long term of years, according to the Daily News.

T. A. Reid, T. E. Yemm and Osie Yemm have organized the Duquoin Grand Theatre Corporation with a capital of $40,000 to operate the Grand Theatre and other places of amusement in that territory.

The Globe Theatre Company has been organized at Duquoin, Ill., by W. R. Hayes, Tom Reid and T. E. Yemm to operate the Globe Theatre and other houses in that territory. The new firm has a capital of $66,000.

The Dupo Theatre at Dupo, Ill., has been added to the Goldman circuit of theatres by Charley Goldman during the past week.

R. C. Williams has taken over the management of the Crescent Theatre at St. Francisville, Ill.

"Happy" Meiniger is back in Chicago and will announce his new connection at an early date.

George Burdick, for several years house manager of the McVickers Theatre under Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is now connected with Balaban & Katz as assistant to F. A. Shead, manager of the Roosevelt Theatre.

The many friends of J. W. Miller of the Madison Theatre, Madison, Ill., will be sorry to hear of his serious illness and hope for his speedy recovery.

All is normal again at the Lynch Circuit offices on Michigan avenue as Vincent Lynch, Frank Schaefer, Charley Casanave and Jack Miller of the Exhibitors Association have returned from a business trip to New York.

Will Bradley, owner of the Crescent Theatre at Ottawa, Ill., is remodeling his house and will install a fine new organ at an early date.

Wheaton, Ill., will soon have a 900-seat house, as work has started on the building by Adam Dernbach.

The many friends of Lee Turner, manager of the Strand at Eldorado, Ill., will be sorry to hear of his death last month after a short illness.

The Bijou at Carrollton, Ill., under the Denny management, was closed for two weeks while the house was undergoing repairs and redecorating.

O. P. Brunbock has taken over the Colonial at Moulton from Crason and Mace.

Ed Wegener has sold the Lyric at Valley Junction to Jack Cohen, who has reopened the house with pictures exclusively.

John Joorse plans to erect a picture theatre at Chicago and Alexander street in East Chicago, Ill., seating 800.

The LaSalle Theatre property on West Madison street between Clark and LaSalle streets, has been sold by S. W. Straus & Company to James O. Mills of Cleveland for $1,150,000. The new owner says he will not tear the old buildings down for the present.

The Argmore Theatre on the northwest corner of Argyle and Kenmore avenue has been leased for ten years by Joseph Pastor from Gustav Hochstader for a term rental of $95,400. The house formerly was part of the Gumbiner circuit.

Murray Wolbach has purchased the southeast corner of 22nd street and Cottage Grove avenue from M. S. Spencer for a reported $75,000. This lot has an entrance on both 22nd and Cottage Grove avenue and it is reported that plans are being made for a large theatre and business building for the site.

A. H. Barry has bought the Family Theatre on East Broadway at Quincy, Ill., from George Herzog.

Another theatre company has been organized by the Orpheum Circuit here, with Mort Singer as vice-president and managing director. Joseph M. Finn and B. B. Kahane, secretary of the circuit, have organized the Chicago Orpheum Company with a capital of $50,000 to own and operate vaudeville and picture houses. The offices of the new company will be in the State Lake Building at 190 North State street.

Bruce Fowler, managing director of the McVickers, reports that the attendance last week during the run of "The Dressmaker of Paris" and the tie-up with the Fashion Show was one of the best weeks so far this year. There was almost a quarter of a million dollars worth of gowns on the stage

Editor, Exhibitors' News and Views:
I would like very much to locate a Mr. Knoble Hearns, who was a photoplay house manager for the Universal at Los Angeles in 1923. I will appreciate what you can do. This gentleman is a personal friend of mine and it is to his interest if I can locate him.
Very truly yours,
ISADORE HARRIS.
619 South Gayosa street, New Orleans.

Denver

A fire in the projection booth of the America Theatre caused considerable excitement. Women and children fled to the exits, causing a near panic, the auditorium having been immediately filled with smoke. The fire was confined in the projection room owing to its being equipped with automatic shutters and the quick action of Howard Burtis, the projectionist. Damage did not exceed $175.

Max Schubach has recovered from his illness and has added another theatre to his chain. Max is associated with the Midwest Theatres Company, operating several theatres in Colorado. The theatre just taken over, the Cameron, is one of the most modern in South Denver.

Film Row has been alive with exhibitors. Charles Klein of the Black Hills Amusement Company, owners of a chain of South Dakota theatres, was here buying new service. Charley's company has taken over the Elks Theatre at Rapid City, S. D. This theatre was formerly owned and operated by A. J. Rose. Paul Krier of the Star Theatre, Walsenburg, Col., and his brother, E. J. Krier, manager of the Curran Theatre, Boulder, Col., were also here. Among other visitors were: Frank Fairchild and Max Kohn, of the Fairchild & Kohn chain of theatres; Johnson & Bangs, operating theatres in Rawlins, Wyo.; Earl Nye, manager of the Carl Ray Amusement Company houses in Cheyenne, Wyo.; M. C. Gerhart, owner and manager of the Empress Theatre, Ft. Collins,

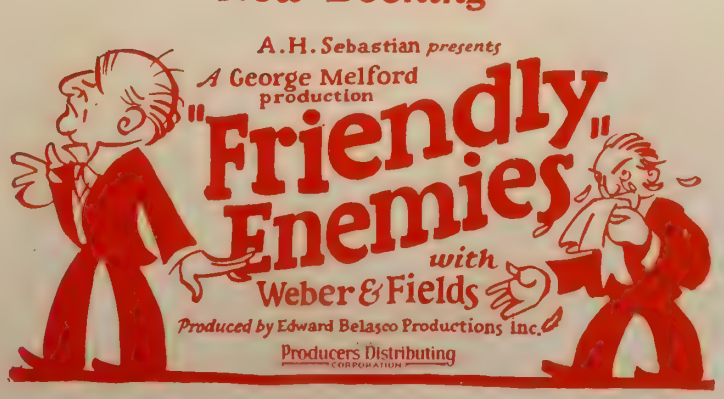
J. E. (Tommy) Tompkins of the America Theatre, Colorado Springs, was here arranging a tip-top program for the coming tourist season. Tommy says arrangements are being made for a record season of Colorado Springs and Pikes Peak tourists.

Lou Gullette of the Paris Theatre, Santa Fe, N. M., did not come in his aeroplane as he had expected, owing to unfavorable weather conditions. He is probably the only exhibitor in the territory who owns an aeroplane.



Seattle

The lease taken by a Tacoma church on the Tacoma Theatre for Sunday services a year ago is about to expire. Manager Herald has not yet announced what policy he will follow when this transpires. During the year it has been impossible to give either a road show or picture performance on Sunday, at the only legitimate theatre in town, which has undoubtedly been a handicap from the showman's angle. It is rumored that extensive improvements will be made on the house during the summer.

Purchase of the Grand Theatre, Salem, Oregon, has been announced by Calvin Heilig, Northwest theatre owner. The change of ownership becomes effective September 1 and adds another link to the growing chain of Heilig theatres in the Pacific Northwest. Extensive repairs and remodeling are being planned for the house, which will probably be renamed the Heilig, as are other theatres acquired by these interests. Archie B. Holt, for several years connected with the Grand and a former manager of a house in Klamath Falls, will be manager.

R. E. Connell of the Connell Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash., has no intention of having anybody in town overlook his house when seeking entertainment. He has strung electrics for the full length of the block leading to the Connell, and uses the same colored lights he is employing in his sign, making the entire effect one spectacular display. Considerable new patronage has been attracted.

Roy Boomer, formerly manager of Universal's Spokane exchange, before that branch closed, has been returned to Spokane as manager of Universal's newly acquired Clemmer Theatre in that city. Mr. and Mrs. Boomer drove up from California, where Mr. Boomer has been manager of the Cameo for eighteen months.

Herbert Sabotka has been named manager of the Neptune Theatre, Seattle.

Ed Dolan, manager of the D. & R. chain of theatres in Aberdeen and Hoquiam, an interest in which was purchased several months ago by the Moore Amusement Company, of Tacoma (Jensen-Van Herberg), has left for a vacation trip to California.

"Charley's Aunt" is lining up crowds at the Liberty Theatre in Seattle, where a tremendous advertising campaign has brought everybody to town. Manager LeRoy Johnson used his full quota of billboard display space in addition to 2,000 half-sheet tackcards, and otherwise exploited the picture.

Robbers removed the safe of the Legion Theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., from the theatre office to another room where they blew it open with nitro-glycerin, obtaining about $1,500, on Sunday night. The loss was not discovered until employes arrived at work. The house is owned by the local post of the American Legion. Frank Talabar is manager.

Kansas

Few exhibitors were seen along Kansas City's Movie Row Wednesday forenoon. Well into the wee hours lasted the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri convention banquet and it is rumored some of the boys much preferred the relaxing pastime of "subconscious indisposition" in preference to buying films. But there were no dull eyes seen in the afternoon. Nice fellows, the whole crowd.

The new Centre Theatre, a suburban house at Fifteenth street and Troost avenue, Kansas City, has been remodeled and refurnished by its new managers, J. D. Lynn and W. D. Vaughan. In addition to new lighting effects, a new pipe organ has been installed. The capacity of the remodeled house is 1,500.

Although there still is an avalanche of talk "pro" and "con," it generally is agreed that Milton Feld, managing director of the Newman and Royal theatres, Kansas City, will succeed Frank L. Newman, who has sold his houses to Paramount and who will manage three Los Angeles theatres for Paramount, Rialto, Metropolitan and Grauman. Mr. Newman is not slated to leave Kansas City until the middle of the summer, but the word comes from an authentic source that Mr. Feld will be Paramount's Kansas City manager of theatres.

"Trading talent for publicity" has almost become a side industry between exhibitor and the Kansas City Star. This week the Pantages Theatre, first-run downtown house, reaped some liberal space and a cut of Ted Meyn, organist at the theatre, who is giving novelty concerts over the Star's radio broadcasting station.

Miss Catherine Murdock, secretary-treasurer at the Garden Theatre, Kansas City, this week identified a man by the name of Elmer Smith, held at police headquarters, as one of the bandits who on April 13 robbed Miss Murdock of $800 in checks and cash. She identified some torn $1 bills which she had patched together with a peculiar brand of paper, the money being found on the alleged bandit.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City territory last week were: Herb Thatcher, Lyric, Abilene, Kans.; E. E. Gosline, Sunflower, Peabody, Kans.; S .E. Wilhoit, Jefferson, Springfield, Mo.; Charles Sears, Sears Circuit, Nevada, Mo.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kans.; F. G. Weary, Farris, Richmond, Mo.

"Tell all the film peddlers that I am not at home, so they won't waste time and money," reads a postcard from D. Fillizola, manager of the Empress Theatre, Fort Scott, Kans., who is in Galveston, Texas.

The Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, managed by Walter Finney, is receiving fair returns from a popularity contest with Harry Carey and Tom Mix as the principals for the fans to choose from. The five best answers forwarded through the mail will be good for tickets to the show.

San Francisco

A. M. Bowles, for two years in charge of the Northern California interests of West Coast Theatres, Inc., and who has been made general manager of the entire circuit of theatres, with headquarters at Los Angeles, was tendered a farewell banquet at the St. Francis Hotel on the evening of April 28 by several hundred film and theatre men and personal friends. The affair was the greatest demonstration of its kind ever witnessed in San Francisco and was a rousing tribute to the popularity of the new manager of the largest theatre circuit in the West.

Among the theatre men who gathered were Homer Curran, Herbert L. Rothchild, Fred Dahnken, Louis R. Greenfield, M. F. Naify, J. A. Brehany, Sam Harris, Irving Ackerman, W. J. Citron, J. A. Partington, Cliff Work, Harry Campbell, Bert Levey, George Mann, Nat Holt, Charles M. Thall, Frank Whitbeck, Bob Harvey, Elmer Hanks and Maurice Rosendorn.

Eugene H. Emmick of the Golden State Theatre and Realty Corp., San Francisco, has returned from an extended eastern trip made with Mrs. Emmick.

Frank Newman, manager of the State Theatre at Stockton, Cal., was a recent visitor at San Francisco.

R. R. Boomer, for more than a year manager of the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, and who won for himself the reputation of being one of the most astute showmen in the business, has been transferred to Spokane, Wash. to take charge of the Clemmer Theatre, recently acquired by Universal.

San Francisco's Film Row had a visit late in April from A. F. Taylor, of Hayfork, Trinity County, Cal., who came down on his yearly film buying trip. While Trinity County covers a considerable area it is as yet untouched by a railroad. In order to get to San Francisco Mr. Taylor was compelled to take a stage to Weaverville and transfer to another to Red Bluff, from which it is a twelve hour ride to the California metropolis. Films must be shipped four days in advance of the play date and are thus out of the exchange nine days. Shows are presented every other Saturday, except during the winter, when Hayfolk is isolated.

Charles Wescott of the Fortuna Theatre, Fortuna, Cal., misses his guess occasionally and is glad that he is sometimes wrong. The population of Fortuna is about 500, his house seats 300 and he figured that he would do well if he got one full house with "Charley's Aunt," which he booked at the minimum rental figure, with a percentage clause added. When the engagement was over he found that he had played to 700, drawing from the country around, and that the exchange was entitled to more percentage money than rental.

With the approval of plans for the building of the Duboce tunnel, opening a new residence district in San Francisco, the Golden State Theatre and Realty Corp. has awarded contracts for the erection of the Sunset Theatre on Irving street, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth avenues. This theatre will be of Spanish and Moorish design and will seat 1,800.

Samuel H. Levin, who has built several suburban picture houses in San Francisco, has arranged to erect one in the Sunset District, at Balboa and Thirty-eighth avenue.

Jack Eminhelser, manager of the Southwestern Pacific Theatres Corp., with a chain of theatres in the southern part of the state, was a recent visitor at San Francisco.

A picture theatre, hotel and dancing pavilion is being erected at Boyes Springs, Cal., by R. G. Litchenberger.

A picture house will shortly be opened by C. E. Wallace at Barstow, Cal. The theatre is a new one.

Associated Exhibitors

NOW OR NEVER. Star, Harold Lloyd. This was a repeat, but went over in good shape and is as good as any that Lloyd has ever made. New prints and good paper made this a good pulling card. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

RACING LUCK. (5 reels). Star, Monty Banks. This is a good comedy but awfully slow at getting started. It would seem that the last three reels would have made a show and complete story but that they put in the first three reels to make it long enough to sell as a feature. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

F. B. O.

AFTER THE BALL. (6,500 feet). Star cast. A very good program picture. Received many favorable comments on it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. R. W. Hines, Hines Theatre, Loyalton, South Dakota.

FOOLS IN THE DARK. (7 reels). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. Very good comedy drama, mostly comedy. Tom Wilson again shows he is there in the colored parts. You can safely play this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

GALLOPING VENGEANCE. (5,025 feet). Star, Bob Custer. Personally I think this is the poorest Custer that I have run of this series to date. Too much posing for a western, the flood scene is not convincing in the last reel. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Not much audience appeal. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

LET'S GO. Star, Richard Talmadge. Here is a dandy action picture. Lots of action, this will please most any audience. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

MILLIONAIRE COWBOY. (4,841 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. A fair picture. Broke box office records. "Lefty" sure is a drawing card here. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farm class town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

NO GUN MAN. (4,522 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. These are very good program westerns for small town use and should please the type that want westerns. Don't try and feature these westerns but run them and say little. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty-five per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

NO GUN MAN. (4,522 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Another good western full of action that will please all western fans. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

NORTH OF NEVADA. (5,000 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A good western that will please all that like a western picture as the acting is good. Tone, fair. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

ON THE STROKE OF THREE. (6,757 feet). Star, Mary Carr. A fair picture but not what the people expected from it. Did not go over for me. Will do if you can buy it right. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

SILENT STRANGER. (5,000 feet). NORTH OF NEVADA. (5,000 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Fred Thomson well liked here, will say Silver King, his horse, is liked better than Tony. Elmer D. Keyes, Randolph, Vermont.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. This certainly pleased our Friday and Saturday night audiences. Lots of action, some comedy, thrills, and very good settings. A good bet for any small town. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,915 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. One of the biggest and best westerns I have ever played. You can't lose with this one. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 10-25-35. Herbert Tappe, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star cast. A very fine picture and one that will build prestige for any house. All the many fine reports on this one are all true and it should be a box office winner where put over in a high class manner. Go after the educated type on this one and you will bring many new faces in. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

ANNA CHRISTIE. (7,631 feet). Star, Blanche Sweet. I and the customers expected more in this picture. Of course it is not bad and it will please as program. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Miners town of 1,500. Admission. 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

AS A MAN DESIRES. Star, Milton Sills. A good picture. Will please a Sills audience. Plenty of action and some fine scenes. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

FRIVOLOUS SAL. (7,307 feet). Star, Mae Busch. A good story of the pioneer mining days with thrills galore. Interest is sustained to the very end. If your audience likes westerns give them this one. They won't kick. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

IN HOLLYWOOD WITH POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (6,750 feet). Star cast. Pleased a good majority of the audience. Will say it is okay. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 10-25-35. Herbert Tappe, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

ISLE OF LOST SHIPS. (7,425 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A dandy program picture that will please in large or small towns. Good acting and scenery. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

MADONNA OF THE STREETS. (7,507 feet). Star, Milton Sills. This is a wonderful picture. You can invite the clergy to see this and they will boost your theatre. A sermon in film, remarkably well done, full of human interest. Boost it. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, eighty per-cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,036 feet). Star cast. Good picture, good business. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Georgia.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. A picture that will draw on account of the book, about the same as all Coogan pictures. Will please. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

ONE WAY STREET. (5,600 feet). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. I am so enthused over results on "Sally" which I played just ahead of this "foul ball" that it's hard to give a bad report, however, I can state that "One Way Street" is as poor as "Sally" is good. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

SALLY. (8,636 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. You fellows, who think you have seen Colleen Moore in "good" pictures have a great surprise in store for you in "Sally." This great little star (much abused word at times) sure eats up the role of "Sally" and I don't know when I have played a picture on which I can truthfully state pleased one hundred percent. I played this up big too and they expected much and got it. Was a real pleasure to stand in front at the break of all shows and accept congratulations, and they were plenty, everyone tickled to death with the show, played it an extra day and at a slight raise over top admission and cleaned up. Unless I am very badly fooled "Sally" is going to be one of the biggest and best money makers of the late releases. Leon Errol and whole cast excellent. Praise must be given director Alfred Green and June Mathis. A few more "Sallys" and Colleen Moore's would make life worth living for the exhibitor (mostly bitter of late). Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture, but did not do the business I expected. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,800. Admission 10-25-35. Herbert Tappe, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

SILENT WATCHER. (7,576 feet). Star, Bessie Love. Good picture. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

SONG OF LOVE. (8,000 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Very good production which brought forth many good words of praise. Only kick heard was that certain fans were sorry to see Norma in a cigarette smoking, half nude role. Plenty of action in this story and would advise all small town exhibitors to play it if it can be bought right. Tone okay here. Sunday, maybe. Special, yes. Strong audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. Can be classed as A-No. 1 program picture that pleased one hundred per cent. Paid a little too much for it, however, and made no money although attendance was fair. Good moral to this picture and it abounds in thrills, with suspense that, at times, was almost painful. Play this one, boys; it is all there. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fine program, though. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. An exceedingly fine picture with a very fine cast. It keeps you interested, with no drags. Boost it, for it will sure make good. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. Family and transient class-city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

THUNDERGATE. (6,505 feet). Star cast. Here is about the poorest picture on the market from First National. Will not please any small town. Too much Chinese scenes; in fact, all that. Lots of kicks. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

TRILBY. (7,321 feet). Star, Andree Lafayette. Used to fill in, and that is all it did. Lafayette to me is beautiful but dumb. Tone poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Farmers, town of 412. Admission 10-25. J. C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

WHITE MOTH. (6,550 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Pretty good but cannot be played as special according to price of it. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

WOMAN ON THE JURY. (7,231 feet). Star cast. Very good. Rather draggy in spots but got by nicely. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

Fox

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star cast. Here's one for the whole family. Thrills, action and comedy. Don't miss this one if you can buy it right and receive film rental at the box office. Elmer D. Keyes, Randolph, Vermont.

DAUGHTERS OF THE NIGHT. (5,470 feet). Star cast. Had this booked for a week but had to take it off after three days. Picture failed to draw. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

ELEVENTH HOUR. (6,819 feet). Star, Charles Buck Jones. Carter ate about one too many rarebits before he started dreaming this one. If I had looked before I booked I sure wouldn't have booked. In the tale, two people are disposed of by taking a swim in a large crucible of molten metal. Another is thrown to the lions and what churches there are left are tossed into a furnace. If these playful little skits had been omitted it would have been a good picture of its kind, although impossible as steady diet. Tone debasing. Sunday, no. Village and rural class, town of 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

FLAMES OF DESIRE. (5,438 feet). Star cast. Lost money here. Fox will have to get known stars before his pictures will go over here. Picture all right and few who saw it seemed to enjoy it. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. All classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

GENTLE JULIA. (5,837 feet). Star cast. My idea of nothing. Shelve it. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

GOVERNOR'S LADY. Star cast. Another one that was forced on me. No box office value. Rental asked too much. Lost money. Picture is slow, draggy; poor direction. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Very poor audience appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HEART BUSTER. (4,500 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Just the same as all the Mix's. Personally wouldn't give a dime to see them all, but I don't buy pictures for my own entertainment. Tom Mix's name packs the house no matter what the title of the picture is. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Best Mix show seen. Played to full house one day. Everyone enjoyed it and didn't hesitate to say so. You can't go wrong on Mix. All classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. About two hundred feet cut off this, all in one place, and a few more places where it was cut out, but it was a very good picture at that. First electrical storm of the season held down crowd. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MAN'S MATE. (6 reels). Star, John Gilbert. The picture would not be bad if the print was good. We had a rotten one and some fans went out and came back to see the comedy. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no.

Lloyd Hamilton, the star of Educational-Hamilton comedies, in his current scream.

Miners, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

ST. ELMO. (6 reels). Star, John Gilbert. Good melodrama, with no weak spots. Gilbert is exceedingly good in this one and has excellent supporting cast. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

TEMPLE OF VENUS. (8 reels). Star cast. Another one that I took when I did not want it. Rental too high for this town. Good spectacular picture and worth seeing. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,732 feet). Star, Charles Buck Jones. Substituted for show that was pulled and did a very good business for three days. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

WINNER TAKE ALL. (5,949 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Since Buck went back to westerns he is getting more popular with each succeeding picture. This one was liked even better than any of his former pictures. Tone okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

YOU CAN'T GET AWAY WITH IT. (6,152 feet. Star, Percy Marmont. One of the hardest knocked pictures reported in this department, but we got away with it satisfactorily. While this production cannot be classed as the special Fox said it would be, it certainly pleased as a program picture. Due to high price we were compelled to raise admissions slightly, and the only complaints were "the picture was good but the admission was too much." This is the last Fox '23-'24 special, thank goodness. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Metro-Goldwyn

CIRCE, THE ENCHANTRESS. (6,882 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Just like all Mae Murray's. These pictures are like a circus. See one and you see them all. The same vamp stuff, and a little dancing. My people say too much posing and the star overacts, but she wouldn't be Mae Murray without it. Tone poor. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal fifty per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

ETERNAL STRUGGLE. (7,374 feet). Star cast. A good evening's entertainment, of the Northwest Mounted Police, which holds your interest at all times. Good print. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty per cent. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

GREED. Star cast. A splendid picture for its kind. Not as filthy as we expected. We advertised it as one of the filthiest, dirtiest, most obnoxious pictures screened. Curiosity will get them. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

REJECTED WOMAN. (7,761 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. A nice program picture. It would have been better if it was shortened about one thousand feet. It is draggy in spots. Tone good. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty per cent. Miners, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

SILENT ACCUSER. (6 reels). Star, Peter the Great. A nice picture in which the dog deserves most of the credit, but somehow can't seem to make money on anything I run. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Suitable for special in most towns. Tone good. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

YOLANDA. (10,125 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Made film rental; had to pay help and house expense out of my own pocket, so I'll leave it to you to judge. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair audience appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

Paramount

EMPTY HANDS. (6,976 feet). Star cast. A very good drama but did not draw them in for some reason but pleased those who came. Tone, good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 900. Admission 10-25-30. Charles L. Nott, Opera House Theatre (400 seats), Sutherland, Iowa.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Better than expected. Did pretty well first day but fell off second. Betty no drawing card here. Most of them pleased. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idle Hour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star cast. Fine comedy drama. Will please any audience if not too critical. Title pulled them in here. Good print. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Coal miners town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo and Kopuster, Livingston, Illinois.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. This proved to be one of the biggest pieces of cheese ever put on in our house. We have yet to hear the first good comment on it. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Small town class town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Not to be compared with "The Humming Bird." In fact, I considered it very ordinary. "House of Youth" night before showed this up, and half the price. Tone doubtful. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

MANHATTAN. (6,415 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Just an ordinary program picture that will perhaps get by as such and please your theatre fans. Don't go after this one. Let it take care of itself and no one will be disappointed. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal sixty-five per cent. Small industrial city. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

MANHATTAN. (6,415 ft.). Star, Richard Dix. Full of action. A stream of humor that pleases; pathos and sentiment mixed with romance and a rough and tumble fight makes a good picture. Richard Dix possesses a personality that wins friends. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, 100 per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

MANSLAUGHTER. (9,061 ft.). Star, Thomas Meighan. Positively one of the finest pictures we have ever had the pleasure of exhibiting. There are several punches in this picture. While the name "DeMille" means nothing here, patrons know that this picture was considerably above the average. Splendid print we had on this picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Merchants and farmers, town of 440. Admission, 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,453 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A comedy knockout that ranks with the best. It's a crackerjack show that we bought at a fair price and played to a profitable business. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. High audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Artistically one hundred per cent. Box office value, no per cent. Audience appeal here, one-half of one per cent. I'm glad all Paramounts are not specials. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal questionable. Small town class, town of 1,369. Admission 10-15, 20-25, 30-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A fair picture with more cattle. Did not draw at all. Priced like a real special. My receipts were one-third of my rental. It is not the kind that sends them out talking up more business, but turning it back. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, twenty-five per cent. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. Some patrons like it better than "The Covered Wagon," some liked the "Wagon" best. Anyway you look at it, "North of 36" is an unusually good picture and an extremely good drawing card. Netted us more than "The Covered Wagon," in fact, stands second in our history so far as net profits are concerned. But why in thunder do producers put out posters that depict scenes omitted from the picture. I didn't discern one scene in the film that was depicted on the posters, although I haven't been called down by any patron for that deficiency. Get "North of 36," advertise it as good as or better than "Covered Wagon" and it will do your heart good to see them pile in, though it won't draw much over sixty per cent. of what "The Wagon" did. At least, that's our experience. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Unusual audience appeal. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30, special 15-40, 25-50. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. Better than "Covered Wagon" as far as I am concerned. Heard a number of others say same thing. Broke all records and had a hard time handling crowds. This picture well advertised should make money for any exhibitor, big or little. Too much cannot be said for it. Ran on Friday and Saturday. Admission 15-25. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. (7,500 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. This one gave entire satisfaction, in a town where our audience is mostly made up of Western enthusiasts. A trifle long, but did not get tiresome. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. General audience appeal. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30, special, 15-40, 25-50. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

SIREN CALL.. Star, Dorothy Dalton. An excellent northern picture with many beautiful scenic shots. Plenty of action. A good small town picture. Can be bought right. Tone, okay. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

Pathe

HOT WATER. (5,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Played two days to fair business. This is the poorest Lloyd we have had. It is not up to his former pictures. We paid a big price for this show and received a poor print. There were eight splices in the title and every one was improperly made. They were not matched properly. The film was dirty and oily. It looked sloppy on the screen. When an exhibitor pays one-fifth the price of a new print in rental he should receive a decent print to present his audiences and not one which is oily, dirty and so cut up that the action jumps all around at the end of the reels. It ain't right! What is the good of a good drawing card when one does not receive a real print to satisfy them when you have them in your house? Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SAFETY LAST. (6,400 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Time and again I have noticed in these columns reports on Lloyd features to the tune of "exchange gets it all." I failed to take these warnings and paid big money for this and got stung. I thought this and his previous feature length pictures great, but somehow he doesn't seem to draw big here. If Pathe gets another one into my house, they'll have to about give it to me. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Suitable for special in some places. Great audience appeal. Village and rural class, town of 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

WHY WORRY. (6 reels). Star, Harold Lloyd. I consider this one of the best pictures Lloyd has made. It is not too much Lloyd, as the giant takes a lot of the laughs and the two together make a fine combination. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

BEYOND THE BORDER. Star, Harry Carey. Very good western picture and better than the pictures that he has made. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,425 feet). Star, Syd Chaplin. Without a doubt the best comedy that has ever been shown on or off the screen. This picture went over a hundred per cent and pleased young and old, highbrows and roughnecks, and what more do you want? You cannot boost this picture too hard as it is all there. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. A good crook drama with action but not the kind that Carey belongs in, but it is a good picture. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

TRY AND GET IT. Star, Bryant Washburn. Good comedy drama; clean, without a trace of smut. Something to wonder at as they seldom make 'em that way. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

WANDERING HUSBANDS. (6 reels). Star cast. Good picture, but no big special. Will please with good two-reel comedy. The flapper girl was great. Kirkwood and Lee good, too. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

United Artists

AMERICA. (14,000 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture but cost me too much money. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,800. Admission 10-25-35. Herbert Tappe, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

ROBIN HOOD. Star cast. Good picture of its kind but no business and only pleased forty per cent. here. Majority did not like it on account of the length and it being a costume picture. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Teatre (250 seats), Sanderville, Georgia.

RULING PASSION and MAN WHO PLAYED GOD. Star, George Arliss. Boys, have you ever booked George Arliss? No? Well then you have a treat coming to yourself and your patrons. Order "The Ruling Passion" and "The Man Who Played God," and you will enjoy most delightful stories, refreshing and a mental tonic. Nothing maudlin in these plays but full of beautiful sentiment and a worth while sermon that will give you real happiness. It should please all sorts and conditions of men. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

THREE MUSKETEERS. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Did not please. Costumes don't go here. No business second day. Fair first day. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

THREE MUST GET THERES. Star, Max Linder. An amusing burlesque of the "Three Musketeers" in five reels of really good comedy with Max Linder the famous Frenchman as Dart-In-Again, Bull Montana as Cardinal Rich-lou and Jobyna Ralston, now Harold Lloyd's leading lady as the heroine. Everybody has read Dumas' story and as the photoplay follows closely the adventures of the original it is bound to please. City and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

WOMAN OF PARIS. Star, Adolphe Menjou. No good for a small town. These kind of pictures are killing business in the smaller towns. If you want more business lay off this one. Tone, no good. Sunday, no. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

Universal

FAMILY SECRET. (5,076 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. A program show that went across fine for us on a Saturday. Peggy is a great drawing card with the kids. Our last Peggy feature I am sorry to say. Good tone. N t a special. Fine audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FIGHTING FURY. (4,491 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Nothing to brag about just a picture. Wish Hoxie would act instead of posing trying to be cute also more action would help a lot in his pictures. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

MEASURE OF MAN. Star, William Desmond. Why don't they put Desmond in a real western? He has become unpopular here on account of these backwoods pictures. Good picture of its kind. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

OH DOCTOR. (6,507 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Will get as many laughs as the average Lloyd production, is as clean a a "hound's tooth" and can be bought for about one third what we are asked to pay for the Lloyds. If your patrons don't get many a laugh out of this, advise them to see a doctor at once for they certainly need one much more than Reginald did. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. This is a good comedy drama.

Blanche Sweet in "The Sporting Venus," Marshall Neilan's latest picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Three days to fair business. Picture an ordinary program show. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

RIDIN' KID FROM POWDER RIVER (5,727 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A fair western not the best he has made but will get by in most houses. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. An interesting show. We did not have enough business to pay the high rental. It did not draw well. The railroad atmosphere was commented upon. Tone, okay. Not a special. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. Good entertainment. The story is at all times interesting. Many beautiful scenes. A whirlwind finish. Audience enjoyed every reel. Tone, good. Strong audience appeal. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

STORM DAUGHTER. (5,302 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A good sea story with a good cast and lots of good acting. I think it is a pretty good picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

STRAIGHT THROUGH. Star, William Desmond. A pretty fair western with lots of action and this Desmond makes all good ones. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

TURMOIL. (7 reels). Star, Eleanor Boardman. Good entertainment. Acting is good. Story interesting. Some fast action between Eileen Percy and Pauline Garon. Audience enjoyed it. Tone, good. Audience appeal, good. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

TURMOIL. (7 reels.) Star cast. This is a good portrayal of a rather serious story. It is well handled but too heavy for the average movie audience I believe. No one will regret running it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

WHITE TIGER. (7,177 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Poor print. Abrupt ending. Business fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty-five per cent. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Georgia.

Vitagraph

CAPTAIN BLOOD. (10,680 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. Lost lots of cold cash on this picture. Did not take in film rental. Asked too much for it. It does not have the box office appeal for a big special. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,000 feet). Star, John Bowers. A very excellent outdoor picture that was pleasing to all. Am not sure whether this was reported by me before therefore will not go into detail but will advise all small town exhibitors to buy this one and you can't do other than please 'em one hundred per cent. Tone, okay. Strong audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

ON THE BANKS OF THE WABASH. (7,156 feet). Star cast. Some good scenes but in the main too mushy. Probably would please a bunch of sentimental old maids but not the average fan, what comments I got were on that order. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

REDEEMING SIN. (6,227 feet). Star, Nazimova. Good picture of the Parisian underworld type. This does not seem to be on top of the subject with my audience, but the

Although it is not a report on a motion picture, the following tip has been sent on our blank by one of our dependable tip senders. It is on a theatrical performance which played the reporting theatre.

Because some of "Our Gang" may be booking such shows the report is published in this fashion:

ABIE'S IRISH ROSE (Road attraction, Ann Nichols). Wonderful show, which kept the small audience in an uproar for two hours and fifteen minutes. Played two days and matinee, to very unsatisfactory business at two dollar top. Very good tone. It is suitable for special play. Appeal is a hundred per cent. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

acting was excellent and Nazimova pulls a real come back. Vitagraph is a very square company to deal with in this neck of the woods. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Warner Bros.

FIND YOUR MAN. (7,300 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin. This dog picture certainly a wonderful box office bet. They all came and the picture was good from all angles. A very fine picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

FIND YOUR MAN. (7,300 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). American Legion boys gave this picture the big laugh because the Red Cross workers were shown with "45s" strapped on their hip. It was not done that way. No Red Cross worker was armed. (They were not supposed to be but we have it on authority that some did wear arms.) Story has several ridiculous situations. The mob at the jail, the sickening attitude of the villain in trying to make up. The dog is wonderful and makes the story really worth while. Without Rin-Tin-Tin it would be more like a comedy burlesque of the Ben Turpin type. General class city of 18,000. Admission forty cents. Ben. L. Morris, Temple Theatre (1,000 seats), Bellaire, Ohio.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, JR. (6 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. A good program picture for Saturday night. Drew fair business for Lent. Print was in poor shape. Why don't they give better prints? Tone, good. Not a special. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LIGHTHOUSE BY THE SEA. (6,700 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin. Best dog picture we have run. Step on this one. You can't go wrong in recommending that everyone see it. This dog seems human in this picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Great audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

LITTLE JOHNNY JONES. (6 reels). Star, Johnny Hines. This star goes good here in anything. This, however, is very good picture. Plenty of action and also lots of good comedy. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Fine audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

LOVER OF CAMILLE. (7,180 feet). Star, Monte Blue. Did not register at box-office. A fair picture. Nothing unusual. Monte's acting is splendid but this isn't enough to get the crowd. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission, 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

LOVER'S LANE. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Nice little pastoral drama featuring rural life in New England. Will appeal especially to folks who have been "down east." Only program value. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

NARROW STREET. Star, Tom Moore. An excellent comedy drama that pleased all who saw it. Matt Moore is especially good. It failed to get the business. Tone, okay. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

NARROW STREET. Star, Dorothy Devore. The best Matt Moore picture we ever ran. A very good picture. Some very good comedy scenes. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

NARROW STREET. Star, Dorothy Devore. A clever comedy drama that pleased a big Sunday night audience. These are the kind of productions which sends them home happy and wanting to come back to see others. Power to these kind of pictures. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

TENTH WOMAN. (6,250 feet). Star, June Marlowe. Fine program picture that pleased all. Title led many to believe that the picture would be different from what it really was. Stars not known here hence picture didn't pull although the acting by all characters was fine. Very good fast riding climax made 'em grab their seats. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

THIS WOMAN. (7,000 feet). Star, Irene Rich. A good picture but nothing special. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

THREE WOMEN. (8,000 feet). Star, May McAvoy. Not a special but a fair program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, questionable. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

Comedies

BLACK AND BLUE. (Educational-Christie). Another mirth provider. A laugh in every foot. Run these Educational comics they get the laughs. Factory class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

BRONCHO EXPRESS. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. As stupid a comedy as has ever been made. "Ham" is going stale with every picture. Really not a laugh in this. General class city of 18,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, (1,000 seats), Bellaire, Ohio.

BUSHER. (Educational). Star, Lee Moran. The best comedy we've shown in a long time. The baseball game in it is a scream. This one should help pull them in and please them all. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Coal miners, town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo and Kopuster. Eagle Theatre (300 seats), Livingston, Illinois.

CHARLIE CHASE COMEDIES. (Pathe). This boy sure has built up a name for himself in the one reel comedies. I say they are the very best one reelers made and I hope his two reelers are as good. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

CRUSHED. (Educational). Star, Lolyd Hamilton. Should have been titled, "A Subway Nightmare" as most of the action took place in and around subway cars. Hamilton needs a director who can keep him in new gags as there was a good deal of repetition in this one. However, the crowd took this one easy and there was a lot o' laughter in the air. It's okay where Hamilton is liked. H. H.

Little Joe Cobb and Farina in a scene in Hal Roach's current Our Gang comedy, "Shootin' Injuns," a Pathe release.

Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FAST AND FURIOUS. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. Talk about your action comedies. Well, this is one. Action was so well filled with fun that the production kept the audience in a howl of laughter. This is one of Lige Conley's best and will put any audience anywhere, in a happy frame of mind. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FAT CHANCE. (Educational). Star, Walter Hiers. Fairly good comedy that brought out a few giggles. Hiers not very well known as yet but should create a following if he continues to play in action comedies. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HER BOY FRIEND. (Educational). Star, Larry Semon. A fine comedy. Our first Semon and it was well received by everybody. The kids laughed all the time it was running. Tone, okay. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HIGH GEAR. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. Shake hands, Bobby! You've rung the bell again for the 'th time. This comedy kept the patrons in an uproar and a'so kept their nerves a tingle due to the risky driving seen in the fast auto race. Action from start to finish and Bobby was in the mid-t of it all the time. Get this one, fellows and they'll go out smiling even if the feature is bum. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred and one per cent. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HIS FIRST CAR. (Educational). The laughs were plentiful with this one. While I do not consider it his best it will do very well on any program. No tone. Sunday, yes. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

HUSBANDS AND STRIFE. (Arrow). As a two reel comedy this is the poorest I have run in many moons. If there is a laugh in the whole 2,000 feet I could not detect it, there was not even a snicker in the two reels. Not suitable for any day. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

INSIDE OUT. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. One or two good stunts in this Cameo one reeler. The film was brand new and we can be glad for that. It can be shown decently. Tone, okay. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

JONAH JONES. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. A dandy Hamilton comedy. The Ford episode was great. Some other good gags pulled in this one. Better than his last one. Tone okay. Fine audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

KILLING TIME. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. A regular scream. Somethin' to laugh at all through the two reels even though it is silly stuff it will make you laugh. Factory class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MERRYMAKERS. (Educational). tar, Cliff Bowes. Brought some genuine laughs from our audience. Print was so new that the waxing caused some trouble for me. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

NERVOUS REPORTER. (Independent). Star, Billy West. A very good two reel comedy. Print new. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

ROUGH AND READY. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. A fine Mermaid comedy. Everybody seemed to be tickled with it to the last one. We find Educational pictures good for our house. Tone, okay. Good audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SITTING PRETTY. (Pathe). Star, Charley Chase. This one reel is real funny, most Chases do not satisfy our audience but this one did, if you can judge by their good natured laughing. Factory class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Serials

RIDDLE RIDER. (Universal). Star, William Desmond. The sixth episode and it is getting better. Eileen Sedgwick and Desmond and good supporting cast is good. They liked it better than the "Wolf of the North." Tone, good. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Miners town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

DANCING GIRLS OF INDIA. (Fox). This is way below the average of a generally pretty good series. It might appeal to a very few, but I believe that most would vote it a real lemon. Only a half reel, which is a good thing in a way. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, not good. Village and rural class town of 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

KINOGRAMS. (Educational). We have played Kinograms for about a year now and find them good. The men are always looking for the news reel and this one is okay. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fine audience appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

OUT OF THE STORM. (Pathe). Supposed to be a detective story. Well it is but is absolutely rotten. It is one of a series of four. Lay off of these. Print new. No appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

UNREAL NEWS REEL NO. 4. (Fox). A burlesque on the real News reels and it was rotten. The first comedy we have ever run that caused a few patrons to walk out until it was over. It goes against our grain to knock a man's product too hard, but this lump of nothing fell flat. People want comedy with a plot and if this had a plot, it would take a super compound microscope to see it. Hope Bill Fox doesn't make any more like it as Fox comedies as a rule are excellent. Tone, fine. Sunday, sure. No audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35, on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Independent

AFTER A MILLION. (State Right). Star, Kenneth McDonald. Another good picture from this star and he is getting very popular here. Should make money for you. He is equal to Richard Talmadge in stunts. No tone. Sunday, no. Not a special. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

BEAUTIFUL SINNER. (State Right). Star, Eva Novak. Good action picture and carries a punch. This picture is a good Saturday bet, although the title is misleading. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

BLACK GOLD. (State Right). Star, Pete Morrison. A pretty good western with lots of comedy and action. Will please the majority. Tone good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

COYOTE FANS. (State Right).. Star, Jack Perrin. One of the regulation westerns of about the same old stripe, and will get by with the majority of western fans. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

DOUBLE ACTION DANIELS. (Artclass). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. A fair western, but nothing like the rest he made. About the worst one that I ran of his series. But it will do. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

EARLY BIRD. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. Johnny Hines pictures are always good bet for us, and this one was no exception, and pleased fully eighty per cent P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

FIGHT FOR HONOR. (State Right). Star, Eva Novak. A fair railroad drama with little action and nothing else much. Will do for its kind. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

FOOL AND HIS MONEY. (Columbia). Star, Madge Bellamy. Good picture. Compares very well with the rest of the Columbia pictures. Tone, yes., Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

HEARTS O' THE WEST. (State Right). Star, Lester Cuneo. Very poor western. Cuneo was once upon a time starred in fast western productions, but the only things fast about his pictures now are the subtitles. Cuneo's previous series was full of pep and he created a nice following, which caused us to book the present series, which have fallen down as box office stimulators. Cuneo deserves a good director and a good looking girl to carry off the heroine's part. The, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Weak audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville Louisiana.

INNOCENCE. (State Right). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Very good picture that pleased everybody. The Independents have some good pictures and allow you to make some money on them. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

MIDNIGHT EXPRESS. (Columbia). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Played to three days good business despite Holy Week. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

NOT BUILT FOR RUNNER. (William Steiner). Star, Leo Maloney, A western that pleased ninety-five per cent. of those who saw it. Lots of action and some very good stunts and comedy. Run it. It's good. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

PAYING THE LIMIT. (State Right) Star, Ora Carewe. A very well made feature of the lumber camps, and as such will get over good on a program date. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

PELL STREET MYSTERY. (State Right). Star, George Larkin. A pleasing Chinatown story. This is a great picture for transient trade houses. Get out all your Chinatown lobby stuff for it and you should clean up. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore Maryland.

PRICE SHE PAID. (Columbia). Star, Alma Rubens. While this is no knockout it is a very good picture and will please very near all you can get in to see it. For some reason it did not draw very well for me. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

RACING FOR LIFE. (State Right). Star, Eva Novak. William Fairbanks also starred in this fair Saturday night program picture, which had some pretty good shots of a thrilling auto race, but for some reason or other the suspense was weak. Will go okay, though, as an action program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SURGING SEAS. (State Right). Star, Charles Hutchison. This is an action stunt picture and is good for Saturdays, or working class. Not for the highbrows. It will, however, satisfy those who like stunt pictures. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Newspapers Give High Praise to "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent"

NEWSPAPER comments on "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent," the latest of the Harold Bell Wright thrillers made by Principal Pictures Corporation, have been more than liberal in their acclamation that Wright's book was well made as a screen play.

In Los Angeles, where it played for two weeks at Loew's State, every one of the seven papers in that city spoke of it in no uncertain terms as to its merit. The same was true in Chicago, in Des Moines, in Indianapolis and other key cities. In 'Frisco the papers reviewed it in the following manner:

The Bulletin wrote, "The picture is replete with love interest, and Helene Chadwick and Kenneth Harlan have very congenial roles. . . ."

The Chronicle chronicled its opinion with, "Mary Carr . . . does the very best work she has given the screen since "Over the Hill."

The Morning Examiner said "Harlan is excellently cast as Briant Kent. . . ."

When the film played Boston it also received a heart accord, and all the newspapers in the Hub City praised it highly. An outstanding example is the way the Transcript reviewed it, quite lengthily. The following is the manner in which the reviewer studied the film in connection with the book:

"From the material, Mr. Sam Wood, the director of this Principal Picture, has constructed something that is pleasing to the eyes and not offensive to the intelligence. . . ."

The general concensus of the picture is such that nowhere, as yet, has a single adverse criticism been scored against the Wright novel, as brought to the screen by Irving and Sol Lesser, Principal Pictures' officials.

To Broadcast "Stop Flirting"

Arrangements were made this week by Producers Distributing Corporation to "go on the air" in a big musical tie-up, as advance publicity for Al. Christie's new feature, "Stop Flirting."

Through the courtesy of Breau & Tobias, music publishers who are bringing out a new fox trot song hit under the same title as the Al. Christie feature, and Joseph Knecht, leader of the Silvertown Cord Orchestra, one of the biggest and most popular orchestras broadcasting through the most powerful radio stations, the new song, "Stop Flirting," with its lyrics and tempo conveying the spirit of the motion picture production, will be broadcast to every corner of the entire world.

"Stop Flirting" was composed by Russell Tarbox and the lyrics were written by Henri Sloane. The orchestrations of the number are now being printed and as soon as these are off the press the ethereal exploitation of the new Al. Christie feature will begin.

Weiss Bros. Press Book on Buddy Roosevelt "Western"

INAUGURATING their sales campaign for 1925-26, Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation will issue an unusually elaborate press book on "Reckless Courage," the initial feature in the new Buddy Roosevelt series of five-part rough riding romances.

The new book will be printed in two colors and will consist of ten pages of full newspaper size, presenting a complete line of advertising accessories, with a publicity and exploitation campaign worked out in detail for exhibitors of all classes of houses.

In effect, the press book will furnish publicity and advertising data for the entire Buddy Roosevelt series, although a separate four or eight page press book will be made up for each release. Similar campaign books will be prepared on the new Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Wally Wales (the Cowboy Prince) series, also to be released by Artclass, each of which will consist of eight five-reel acrobatic stunt dramas.

With these new series, which are much more elaborate in story and settings even than the popular Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt series released during the past season, Weiss Brothers plan to make a definite bid for bookings in a class of theatres that hitherto have not handled Westerns or action stunt features.

They are led to this decision by the growing popularity of this type of picture, when presented in a high class manner, with a logical, if fast-moving, story and settings that will compare favorably with the big first-run attractions. By producing these features at a cost which enables them to sell to the independent exchanges, and they in turn to the exhibitor at a reasonable price, Weiss Brothers believe they have found the solution of many of the present manufacturing and marketing problems in the State Right field.

Trailer for Langdon Comedies

Bruce Fowler, Managing Director of McVickers Theatre, Chicago, realizing the tremendous drawing power of Harry Langdon, the Mack Sennett-Pathe comedy star, is providing his theatre with special trailers for this comedy brand.

The first picture that Mr. Fowler used his special trailer on is Harry Langdon in "Boobs in the Woods." In addition to the trailer he is also giving the screen comedian equal billing in the "lights" with the feature picture.

New California Exchange

Wade Pollard, Dale Hanshaw and H. B. Carpenter have opened a new independent exchange, with offices at 935½ South Olive Street, Los Angeles, Cal., under the firm name of Zenith Pictures, Inc. Mr. Wade Pollard will be the executive in charge of the Los Angeles Exchange.

Louis L. Mayer has been appointed eastern representative for the above exchange.

Hawkinson To Start East

John Hawkinson starts East next week from Los Angeles where he has been for the past four weeks making new Grantland Rice "Sportlight" subjects for Pathe release.

Sills Edited Astor's First

Milton Sills is responsible for the editing of "The Lover's Oath," the first of a series to be made and released by Astor Distributing Corporation.

"The Lover's Oath" has as its featured players Ramon Novarro and Kathleen Key, and is the photoplay made by Ferdinand P. Earle under the original title of "The Rubaiyat."

Banner Starts Production on "Love Gamble" for Ginsberg

THE Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation announces that "The Love Gamble" the first of the Banner Productions for the coming season produced by Ben Verschleiser was started this week. Edward Lesaint who directed a number of Banner Productions last season will act in the same capacity and Sam Briskin will remain on the coast until the picture is completed.

The production is being made at the studios of Principal Pictures, Hollywood, and plans are set for a most pretentious production. Featured in the cast is Lillian Rich, while the featured players include Robert Frazer, Pauline Garon and Arthur Rankin.

Special sets are being constructed for the elaborate night life and society scenes while the out door shots have been carefully selected.

"The Love Gamble" adapted from the widely read novel of Mazie Greig, was selected by Banner heads for the first production as it is believed that the story offers something absolutely new in the way of a theme. It is a story of the night life of cultured Boston's Beacon Hill district which in itself is a new locale for a story of this type. While essentially a narrative of modern youth, love and frivolity, it visualizes the modern girl as a "go getter," an ambitious, impulsive yet never vicious type determined to surmount difficulties regardless of convention.

A strong campaign of advertising and exploitation is now being planned for the picture under the direction of Ray H. Leason.

Vitagraph to Make Feature of "The Black Diamond Express"

WARNER BROS. announced that they will make a feature picture to be called "The Black Diamond Express" under the Vitagraph trade mark. There is more in this than appears in the bare announcement. Back of it is history and romance and the growth of the motion picture industry.

"The Black Diamond Express" was the first picture made by Vitagraph and the first motion picture to be publicly exhibited in the United States. It was Albert E. Smith's and J. Stuart Blackton's first effort to introduce a new entertainment to America.

Back in the days when railroads were making their bids for de luxe trains and fast time, "The Black Diamond Express" was the crack train of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. It was "The Twentieth Century" flyer of its day. There was romance and speed and a new era in railroading when it was announced. Smith and Blackton, wise showmen, selected it as the first subject for their new motion picture.

It was just a few hundred feet of film showing the famous train approaching from a distance and moving to what is now known as a close-up. It was the beginning of motion pictures back in 1897.

New Chicago Exchange

Ellman Opens Independent Office for Northern Illinois and Indiana

A new independent exchange has entered the distribution field in Chicago. It will begin operations in the Northern Illinois and Indiana territory for the distribution of Independent pictures within the next ten days. This company will maintain offices in Chicago and Indianapolis.

Henri Ellman, president and general manager of the New Capitol Film Exchange, Inc., started in the film business fifteen years ago as a shipping clerk for Warner Bros., and successfully graduated into the position of city salesman for Pathe, Selznick and Universal in Chicago and also successfully operated several theatres in Chicago.

When Joe Brandt, president of the Columbus Pictures Corporation, was in Chicago recently he closed a contract whereby Capitol Film Exchange, Inc., will distribute the six Columbias, six Waldorfs and six Perfections in the Northern Illinois and Indiana territory. Mr. Ellman also has acquired other features product of exceptional merit and some unusual short subjects. He is working on a plan whereby the exhibitors will be assured of a substantial program of standardized product for the coming season.

C. B. C. Sells South America

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation announces that it has sold the rights on its recently acquired artistic melodrama produced by Norman Dawn and released under the title of "Justice of the Far North" to Max Glucksman for the territory included in Argentine, Paraguay, Uraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Northern Girl Wins the Lead In Pathe Baseball Serial

MORE than two-hundred and twenty-five young women of Miami applied for a part in the new Pathe baseball serial "Play Ball," written by John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, and not one out of this large number measured up to requirements. It was then found necessary to send to New York to get a girl to play the part.

The idea of selecting a Florida girl for one of the leading roles in the picture was promoted by the Illustrated Daily Tab of Miami and was for the purpose of giving some local girl an opportunity of breaking into the movies. For weeks this newspaper ran considerable publicity on the subject tying it up with the production of the picture, and it was confidently believed by the Pathe producing organization that a Florida girl would be found suitable for the part.

The Pathe producing company, under the direction of Spencer Bennett, while disappointed in the talent that responded, went through with its plan of giving a screen test to every girl that looked as if she might have a chance, in hopes that one of the local candidates would at least approximate the screen standards set by the company. However, this failed. It was found necessary to wire Frank Leon Smith, the Pathe production manager at New York, to get a professional actress for the part.

The young lady selected for the part is Mary Milnor. She left for the South last week and is now with the producing company. Miss Milnor is an Atlantic City contest beauty and has appeared in many screen productions.

Friendly Enemies

star does not appear in his familiar role of a ranger, but is cast as a cowboy who has been led by his supposed father to believe that he is a half-breed with an Indian mother.

The story interest is centered on the familiar angle of a fight between cattle ranchers and powerful interests who seek to get control of the land.

Considerable liberty has been taken with the audience sympathy in this picture. For in the apparent effort to make the story different, the hero's supposed father turns out to be the villain, while the capitalist is shown as being in the right, and actuated merely by revenge for a wrong committed years ago, and proves to be the real father of the hero. In this manner, sympathies which would naturally result from familiarity with stories of this type and from incidents in the earlier reels, are sought to be exactly reversed in the climax. This weakens their dramatic effect and makes the story more than usually illogical.

Plausibility is also stretched in the romance between the girl who loves the hero even though she believes him to be a half-bred, and having it develop that she is the adopted daughter of the financier so as to provide for the inevitable marriage is a situation that is more convenient than convincing.

Audiences that demand the familiar type of western action and overlook story weakness where this is present, will find that from this standpoint "The Texas Bearcat" measures up to the average, with an abundance of fighting, and fine horse-back riding, etc.

Sethman.....Carleton King
Murdock.....Lee Shumway
Dave Sethman.....Bob Custer

Story by F. J. Rhetore.
Adapted by George Plympton.
Directed by Reeves Eason.
Length, 4,770 feet.

Story

Dave has been raised to believe he was a half-breed son of Sethman, a cattle rancher who is the leader of a group opposing the plans of Crawford, an eastern capitalist, to buy up the surrounding ranches for a big project, operating through his lieutenant, Murdock, an unprincipled man. Crawford comes west with his daughter, Jean, and Dave saved her when the firing of his pistol to frighten Murdock off his father's land causes the horses to run away. Murdock denounces him as a half-breed, but Jean invites him to call. Later he again saves Jean, this time from the unwelcome attentions of Murdock. Sethman, to get even with Crawford, prepares to rustle Crawford's cattle and sell them. In the fight Crawford wounds Sethman but Dave shoots Crawford in the hand. Sethman, dying, reveals the fact that Dave is Crawford's son whom he stole from him as a baby. Dave is disconsolate over the fact that Jean can only be a sister to him until he finds out that she is only Crawford's adopted daughter.

"The Prairie Wife"

Rawlinson, Dorothy Devore and Gowland in Quiet, Appealing Domestic Drama

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Good characterization, much human interest and flashes of drama at the proper moments make Hugo Ballin's "The Prairie Wife," a Metro-Goldwyn picture, an interesting box office attraction. While the big city theatres with their sophisticated audiences may not especially care for the quiet tone of this picture, it should go great with the class of patronage liking real domestic dramas lightened by bits of humor and wholly without jazz and sex appeal. The writer enjoyed it thoroughly as somewhat of a novelty.

Ballin has done a good job in the direction. It was necessary that the characters in Arthur Stringer's story be stressed rather than the plot, but Ballin, while doing this, has realized the exact moments when there is a need for drama or humor and he has supplied one or the other. For instance, there are well acted scenes of a dispute between husband and wife, and then a fist fight with one of the farm hands who has abused a horse, or a grass fire to be extinguished.

Toward the end the picture temporarily becomes morbid through the use of too many scenes of a man who has hung himself. These are too unpleasantly realistic though handled by the use of shadows.

The principal players are Dorothy Devore, Herbert Rawlinson and Gibson Gowland and they are uniformly effective. Gowland's characterization, that of an ignorant man haunted by visions of a murder he has committed, is particularly deft.

The picture purports to show the more intimate side of homesteading in the old days. This can be mentioned in the advertising, but it would be well not to stress it too much because it is really more of a domestic drama of everyday life. There are excellent scenes of the prairie.

Chaddie Green, a society girl left penniless, laughs at the suggestion of Duncan MacKail, western farmer, that she will tire of the prairie and marries him. Business takes Duncan away and Chaddie is left alone with Ollie, a Swedish caretaker, who frightens her. Percy Woodhouse, an Englishman, is taken ill at his homestead fifteen miles away and Chaddie goes to nurse him. Her horse bolts and she has to spend the night there. Duncan finds her asleep under a wagon outdoors but is jealous. Chaddie gets Percy moved to her home partly because he is ill and partly because his presence may restrain Ollie. Duncan leaves in a jealous fit but returns with Olga, a servant, for a peace offering. Percy and Olga fall in love. Ollie hangs himself, leaving a note telling how a murder had preyed on his mind. Chaddie has a baby and is happy.

"Raffles"

With House Peters in Title Role Universal Offers Story Based on Famous Fiction Character

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

When E. W. Hornung wrote his first novel dealing with the adventures of Raffles, the amateur cracksman, he created a character that immediately fascinated the public. This was followed up by other novels and then by a play by E. W. Presbrey and Universal is now offering a Jewel production under the title, "Raffles," adapted from both the novels and the play.

So popular did this character become that "Raffles" has come to be a household word, designating a mysterious and unusually clever gentleman thief who succeeds in outwitting the authorities, and this naturally creates great public interest in the film production.

Universal has made an entertaining picture, but it does not seem that the full possibilities of the subject have been realized. Only two of his escapades are shown, one aboard ship where a necklace is stolen and returned in a package of cigarettes and another at a country house where under the very eyes of a great detective Raffles secures a string of pearls and wins the love of the owner's daughter. The battle of wits between detective and crook is carried on largely by means of witty subtitles, with the sympathy always with the crook because of the conceit of the detective. Raffles does not, however, come out with all of his colors flying, for the detective discovers his identity and even captures him, although Raffles finally eludes him and escapes to Europe with the girl, giving up his life of crime.

Many of the admirers of Raffles will probably be disappointed at the fact that he does not make a better showing than this, and had more situations which indicate his cleverness in eluding the authorities been introduced it would have added additional punch to the picture, which is not as actionful as many would expect from a story of this type. It would seem that Director King Baggot has staked more on the appeal of the matching of wits than on physical action. Melodramatic punch is therefore only paramount in the climax.

House Peters does good work in the title role, but seems to be lacking in some of the snap and suavity of the Hornung character. The supporting cast is capable, with Miss Dupont in the role opposite the star.

Length, 5,557 feet.

Story

On board a vessel bound from India to London excitement is caused by the news that the mysterious cracksman who has astounded London by his daring thefts is probably aboard. Among the passengers is Raffles, a popular young chap, and his friend, Bunny. Raffles warns one of the passengers to look out for her necklace and soon after that it is stolen. A search fails to reveal it, but it is returned in a box of cigarettes on reaching London. Raffles goes to a house party which is also attended by Capt. Bedford, a noted criminologist, who guarantees a famous string of pearls cannot be stolen. The pearls, however, disappear and Capt. Bedford suspects Raffles, arranges a trap by means of a burglar whom he has freed and finally corners Raffles. In the meantime, Lady Gwendolyn, with whom he has fallen in love, comes to warn him. Raffles, asking permission to pack, eludes Bedford and makes his escape, taking Gwendolyn with him. They get married and wire her parents, who owned the pearls, which Raffles had already returned, and are forgiven.

"Zander the Great"

Marion Davies Scores as Comedienne in Amusing and Refreshing Human Interest Comedy Drama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With the release of "Zander the Great" by Metro-Goldwyn there is revealed a radical departure in the type of pictures starring

Marion Davies. In place of the big spectacular costume productions which have served as her vehicles for some time, she is presented here in an intimate little comedy drama.

Adapted from a stage success, the story opens with the star as a young girl in an orphanage who is constantly getting into trouble because of her mischievous disposition. There is a lot of very effective comedy here that is sure to get laughs, and at the same time there is pathos and appeal to the sympathies. Next, she finds a home with a woman who has an infant son whom she immediately calls "Zander" for short. These scenes develop strong pathos and human interest angles. Finally the girl's search for the little boy's father takes her to Arizona where she meets three strange characters who turn out to be border smugglers. With one who poses as the chap's father, a romance is developed and finally there is an exciting sequence in which the girl is captured by a band of border bandits.

Miss Davies in this story has the best opportunities of her career and she fully measures up to them, proving to be an excellent comedienne and making every situation register. Noted for her beauty it will surprise her fans to see how well she has succeeded in making herself unattractive looking as the little orphan, but this adds materially to the comedy effect; it also serves to enhance her beauty in the later scenes.

The supporting cast is an unusually fine one. Harrison Ford scores in the role opposite the star as the leader of the border smugglers, a new type of role for him. Holbrook Blinn in the few sequences in which he appears scores heavily. A lot of excellent comedy is contributed by the stage comedian Harry Watson with Harry Myers assisting. George Seigman is effective as the bandit leader, while little John Huff is excellent in the title role.

The production has been finely directed by Victor Schertzinger with some striking settings furnished by Joseph Urban. It presents a nice balancing of human interest, romance and thrills with comedy and pathos. In many of the scenes the pathos and comedy are closely intermingled with a smile for every tear, but there are also straight cut and refreshing scenes in which the comedy stands alone. While the titling is effective, the picture does not have to depend on it for the laughs as they are legitimately developed in the situations.

In our opinion, "Zander the Great" will prove one of Miss Davies' greatest successes, add immensely to her circle of fans and prove thoroughly enjoyable entertainment for patrons of all classes.

Story

Mamie Smith, a homely little girl, is an inmate of an orphanage in New Jersey. Her love of fun leads her into pranks that cause the cruel matron to beat her. Mr. Pepper, a kindhearted trustee, gets her a home with Mrs. Caldwell, who has a tiny baby whom Mamie calls Zander. Mrs. Caldwell's husband has left her and after a few years, as she is about to die, a letter arrives from him. Mamie makes it appear that it is an affectionate one. Mrs. Caldwell makes her promise she will take Zander to his father, so when the townspeople want to send him to the orphanage Mamie slips away in a flivver. Nearing her destination in Arizona she stops for food at an old rancho, the headquarters of three hard looking men. Murchison, the leader, poses as the father of the boy to save himself from the sheriff and realizes he must keep Zander as a blind. Mamie revolutionizes the place but discovers the three are engaged in bootlegging and threatens to tell the sheriff. Murchison, to silence her, sends Zander to Juan, his friend, and locks Mamie up. Mamie escapes and meets members of Black Bart's gang, who tie her to a tree. A desert sand storm enables her to get free and jumping on a horse she rides for Juan's with the gang in pursuit. Murchison and his pals, together with the sheriff, start after Black Bart, the desperado. Arriving at Juan's they capture the gang and find that through a ruse Juan has succeeded in killing Black Bart and saving Mamie. Murchison tells Mamie he is not Caldwell, but that Caldwell was killed several months before. Declaring his love for Mamie, he takes her in his arms.

"Soul Fire"

Originality of Theme and Emotional Intensity of the Drama Make This One of Barthelmess' Best

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

"Soul Fire," Richard Barthelmess' newest starring vehicle for First National, is a stirring drama of great emotional intensity and decided originality and should prove one of his best box-office attractions.

Adapted from a stage play by Martin Brown entitled "Great Music," not only the theme but the treatment of this picture is unusual. The opening shows two critics at a concert listening to and discussing the composition of a new musician. Then the scene fades into a recital of the composer's life history, with every now and then a fade-back to the orchestra and the critics.

While the pictured story is continuous it is somewhat episodic in nature, depicting the high lights of the hero's career and his continual search against odds to give vent to the great music that he feels he is capable of writing. We see him in Italy rebuffed by his parents who desire him to take up commercial life; next in Paris mixed up in night life, the author of popular successes that bore him. The refusal of his sympathetic friend, a Russian princess, to share his poverty causes him to disappear and next he is among the low dives of Port Said where in a brawl he shoots a man. Escaping on a vessel he deserts and swims to a tropical island where he finds peace and love and almost tragedy, and it is the shadow of the latter which enables him to compose his great work.

Right up to the very end there is a note of sadness in the hero's struggles against almost overwhelming odds to really find himself, and as we watch him, our interest is held. None of the action is obvious; there is continual suspense as to what will happen next and as each situation unfolds there is an increase in the dramatic intensity and a heightening of the suspense up to the tremendous emotional climax where on the eve of his wedding day he discovers his sweetheart is afflicted with what he believes to be leprosy.

The various shifting of the scenes from Italy to Paris, to the dives of Port Said and the South Sea Island makes this picture unusually colorful. John S. Robertson's direction of this story is superb, his backgrounds are pleasing; he has kept the interest continually mounting, and we do not recall having witnessed a more intensely dramatic effect than the climax; the horror of the hero at the thought of his fiancee's affliction, his playing the piano all night with the girl at his feet and in his unselfishness composing his great music, with the natives keeping up their continual beating of drums outside and then, the sudden shifting of the scene to that of the drummers in the orchestra playing this composition.

As the musician, Barthelmess has a congenial role and gives a notable performance, making you feel the depth of the character. The supporting cast is high-class. In each episode there is a different woman. In the Paris scenes, Carlotta Monterey is extremely effective as an adventuress type. As the keeper of the dive in Port Said, Helen Ware gives a very fine portrayal of the dramatic role of the dive-keeper who aids the musician. The leading feminine role, however, falls to Bessie Love as an English girl raised by the natives. Miss Love's work is excellent and she makes every situation register. Her simplicity and lack of affectation as the island girl is in striking contrast to her horror when she believes she has leprosy and attempts to take her own life.

We believe that the majority of patrons will find "Soul Fire" deeply moving and impressive and consider it one of Barthelmess' best.

Based on play "Great Music" by Martin Brown.
Scenario by Josephine Lovett.
Directed by John S. Robertson.
Length, 8,262 feet.

Story

Two critics at a concert are discussing the music of a new composer. As the orchestra plays the music the scene fades into the story it is depicting and show how young Eric Fane went to Paris to study music and then how his parents lose patience with him and want him to return and go into business. Encouraged by a Russian Princess he goes to Paris and swept away by the night life writes popular successes, but his soul rebels. The Princess however, refuses to share his life of poverty while striving for artistic success. Eric disappears and is again seen at Port Said almost a derelict, playing in a low dance hall. Feeling the urge of his music he suddenly starts a beautiful number. A sailor resents this, a fight ensues and Fane shoots the sailor. With the aid of the woman who runs the resort he escapes assuming the sailor's identity. In the South Seas he deserts the ship and lands on an island where he is found by Teita an English girl whose parents have died. There he finds peace and happiness and love, As the natives are preparing for the wedding feast and playing their weird music, Eric discovers a mark on Teita's shoulder. Horrified, and believing it leprosy he sends for a doctor, and all night long he plays the piano with Teita at his feet and determines to stick by her no matter what happens. From his unselfishness comes his great music. The doctor arrives and pronounces it only a minor ailment. Fading back to the concert the critics call the music the work of a genius.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Wild Papa"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Brothers-in-law as business partners in a cloak and suit establishment with a ravishing model as go-between start off "Wild Papa," a Hal Roach comedy featuring the "Spat Family," with much hilarity. The comedy is just as "meaty" throughout with a great concoction of laugh punch at the end in the guise of a breach of promise suit. The married member of the firm scoffs at his partner's declaration that the beautiful model is in love with him. He proves otherwise when she enters the room. But she entwines her arms about his neck just as his wife appears on the scene. Much amusing slapstick stuff thereafter prevails. In the courtroom the plaintiff's version of the story is introduced on the screen. It shows her as an unsophisticated maiden romping about in the land of cows and grass. The defendant takes the stand and is about to tell the true story when he is instructed to read the defense concocted by his lawyer. In this he is pictured as the possessor of a lap dog and roller skates. The attorney releases a swarm of bees and the defendant is acquitted on the grounds of being "bughouse."—T. W.

"Queen of Aces"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Century Comedy officials certainly give the vivacious Wanda Wiley vehicles in which she is kept busy every minute, and this is well, for she is an excellent comedienne with a distinctly pleasing personality. In "Queen of Aces" released through Universal she appears as an athletic young woman whom her prospective father-in-law characterizes as a he-woman and forbids her to come to a party in his home. Wanda puts on male attire even donning a mustache. Father takes a shine to the "boy" when "he" says the party is too tame and they slip away to a poker party. The place is raided but they make a getaway and there is a general mix-up when the "boy" is seen slipping into a girl's bedroom. All ends O. K. with father's consent to the marriage when Wanda pantomimes that she was the "boy" and will tell all about the poker party. It is a rapidly moving comedy with plenty of action and incident that keeps to the "plot." There is considerable slapstick including a fall from a high building without injury, and although the idea is not new and the farce comedy situations are familiar, it is amusing.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 20"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

In "Pathe Review No. 20" a most unusual and interesting theme is the life of the May-fly, comprising another installment of the "Secrets of Nature" series. This film tidbit is also a rarity, especially for those interested in insect-life. "Black Art" presents life-like silhouettes by an Italian artist. In the "Visiting Our Own America" series, "Savannah" is the subject. This is done in Pathecolor and presents some of the main sections of that beautiful Southern city.—T. W.

"Hair Cartoon"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—300 Feet)

Cartoonist Marcus, in Hair Cartoon K-K distributed by Red Seal, has fun, for which he apologizes to them, at the expense of his fellow cartoonists, by drawing cartoons which he deftly changes into familiar characters, including Outcault's "Buster Brown," Opper's "Happy Hooligan," Goldberg's "Mike and Ike" and Bud Fisher's "Mutt and Jeff." This should prove one of the most popular of the Hair Cartoons.—C. S. S.

"Roaring Waters"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

It is a story of the Northwestern Mounted Police that is unfolded in this Universal picture released under the Mustang brand. The action follows along conventional lines and concerns the daughter of the keeper of a trading post who is loved by Jerry, a member of the Mounted and also by Roberts who is supposed to be a trader. Roberts lures the girl away with a forged note and Jerry rescues her, at the same time developing the fact that Roberts is the man who has attempted to kill another member of the Mounted. George Larkin is featured in the role of Jerry with Josephine Hill as the girl. It is an average production of its type.—C. S. S.

"Skinners in Silk"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

"Skinners in Silk" is an A-1 slapstick comedy, produced by Mack Sennett, featuring Billy Bevan and introducing Thelma Parr, a very shapely and winsome vamp. Where Sennett's comedies have proven popular this two-reeler should register a decided hit. It is one where the pep is kept up in the superperlative all the way through. One scene in a cabaret where a dancer on a swing falls into a soup "basin" and starts the patrons wallowing around in the pasty mess, is illustrative of some of the established laugh-getters used. Another scene depicts a fat woman getting a warm pie smudged over her face. The comedy follows the outline of a sketch of two brokers, about to go on the rocks, who are suddenly re-capitalized when stock which they deemed worthless decides to go sky riding in the market. Billy Bevan takes advantage of the numerous opportunities offered him to indulge in hair-raising antics. He rides through "brick walls" on a motorcycle and hangs in mid-air on a clothes line suspended between two high buildings.—T. W.

"Tender Feet"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

The title of this Walter Heirs comedy distributed through Educational gives a hint as to its nature, for it is a burlesque western with the rotund comedians accidentally finding himself as the hero of a "thrilling" encounter with a band of "bad" bandits who have kidnapped a baby. The start of the comedy gives no hint of this as Walter is shown pushing a flivver through the rain up a long hill to a gas station only to find it has been closed by the sheriff. With his wife, played by Duane Thompson he takes refuge in a cabin and finds a kidnapped baby. The bold bandits return and there follows a "fierce encounter" in which Walter is of course victorious. He finally escapes through the roof and followed by the band he mounts a spirited horse. Riding wildly with the child on his back he leads the gang into a trap and is acclaimed a hero. There is plenty of action and quite a lot of laughs in this comedy which is filled with good-natured banter directed at "western" thrills. It should prove amusing for the average spectator.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 19"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

The fourth chapter of the "Origin of Man" series, concerning Roy Chapman Andrew's expedition into Mongolia heads "Pathe Review No. 19." This is one of the most interesting of these installments. Several splendid "shots" of the Sacred City, showing the natives and one giant over nine feet tall, are included. "The Making of a Man" is a cartoon by Hy Mayer in which that cartoonist uses egg spheres to bear out his version of the human anatomy. The Pathecolor is of Washington, D. C., one of the "Visiting Our Own America" series.—T. W.

"Fares Please"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Educational's newest Mermaid Comedy, a Jack White production, featuring Al St. John presents him as a messenger boy who inherits a dilapidated street car company and tries to run it against the opposition of a villainous competitor. Al does some good trick bicycle riding in the early sequences. The fact that he gets catapulted out of a lunch wagon without paying for his meal gives Babe London the owner a chance to chase him with her wagon which gets on fire and is finally driven into a lake. The action then changes to the car company where the villain meets his deserts when he tries to blow up the car barn; his faithful dog retrieves the dynamite. The first car is wrecked, but Al builds another with a cafateria trailer. All goes well until a lion comes aboard. Then the slap-stick comedy gets fast and furious between the lion, a negro porter and Al, ending in the car being wrecked and the lion still on the job. There are a lot of good gags that will get the laughs and certainly no shortage of comedy action. However, the idea is not as novel and the laughs are more of the obvious machine-made type than in the majority of Al St. John offerings. It should please the slap-stick fans.—C. S. S.

"The Wild West Wallop"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Here is a Western that is handled in a different manner from the usual run. An Easterner goes to visit friends in the West, expecting to find it wild and woolly and they decide to stage fight, hold-ups, etc., to give him his wish. This gives opportunities for familiar western action with chances for humor in place of the usual punch. This comes later when the hold-up and kidnapping of the girl turns out to be real, and the hero turns the laugh on the others by rescuing the girl. Edmund Cobb is well fitted for the role and Olive Hasbrouck is entirely satisfactory as the girl. Except with dyed-in-the-wool Western fans who demand action and thrills above everything the introduction of the comedy angle should make this a pleasing offering.—C. S. S.

"A Fast Worker"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Cartoonist Terry introduces a novelty in his animated cartoons in "A Fast Worker." He makes one of his animals a magician safe-cracker. This cat when he meets Cop Dog changes himself into a shapely canine charmer. At another time he assumes the lines of an auto. When the cop steals upon him while he is about to open the bank door the "magician" turns himself into a string of bologna. The cartoon is right up to Terry's usual standard.—T. W.

"Only a Country Lass"

(Educational—Novelty—One Reel)

Described as a colorful fable in rhyme, Educational is offering another novelty reel in which the entire action is carried on by mechanical figures representing denizens of the insect world. This one tells the story of a lady beetle who was a regular drudge who is rescued by a handsome bug but decides on seeing a great lady that she will go to Paris and enjoy the mad whirl. Months later she returns repentant ready to accept the country hero but finds he already has a wife and baby. Due to the novelty of the subject, the clever manipulation of the mechanical "actors" the fact that the picture is filmed in color, and also has an amusing set of titles in rhyme provided by Morris Ryskind that tells the whole story clearly; this reel should satisfy audiences that like novelties and especially please the children.—C. S. S.

"Luna-cy"

(Pathe—"Stereoscopiks"—One Reel)

"Luna-cy" is another of Pathe's "Stereoscopiks" series. The scenes are of a well known amusement resort. Depicting depth, through special red and green gelatine spectacles, an audience experiences almost the same thrill as the rider seen in the roller coaster or merry-go-round. A girl in a swing seems to sway herself right out to within a few inches of a fan's nose. A "hot" dog vender passes out one of his delicacies within reach of everyone. This one-reeler should prove its entertaining qualities with any class of audience.—T. W.

"The Night Club"

Raymond Griffith Scores in Paramount Farce Comedy that is One Continual Round of Laughs

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As the result of the big hit scored by Raymond Griffith in supporting roles in "Miss Bluebeard," "Forty Winks" and other recent pictures, Paramount is now presenting him in the leading role of "The Night Club," an adaptation of a William DeMille stage play, "After Five."

"The Night Club" is an out-and-out farce comedy full of laughs and should prove an excellent audience attraction. Griffith creates an excellent impression and shows that he is thoroughly at home in roles other than the silk-hatted ones in which he has scored so heavily. As those familiar with his work know, he has developed an unusual type of comedy that is unlike that of any other screen comedian, and has an inimitable style with decidedly amusing mannerisms.

In "The Night Club," which title by the way has little bearing on the story and is only introduced in the opening subtitle, he has been given free rein to develop comedy along all lines from subtle wit, through burlesque, to slapstick, and in every style he gets the laughs.

Not much dependence is placed on the story interest which follows the not unfamiliar lines of the chap who, turned down by a woman, becomes a woman-hater, finds himself in a situation where to inherit money he must marry a certain woman, tries to run away from her, finally falls in love and finds it is the woman he is supposed to marry and then has an awful time squaring matters as the girl believes he is marrying her for the money. This, however, furnishes a framework for a wide variety of comedy situations which have been further developed by having the hero seek to end his life to prove his love.

The picture is crammed with gags, most of them new, that follow each other with such quick succession and have been so well worked up from every angle that if there is any criticism along this line it would be that there is really too much material, and a shortening of some of the scenes would snap up the action. While this might eliminate a few laughs there would still be plenty left.

So numerous are the comedy situations that only an idea of them can be given here. Among the most laughable are the hero's attempts to get away from the horde of women who infest the hotel. This leads him to the cafe of a blood-thirsty brigand who accuses him of making love to his sweetheart. Escaping he is chased by a motor-car driven by a woman, the one with whom he falls in love, and we must not overlook the opening scenes showing him deserted by his bride at the altar. In his attempts to commit suicide the old melodramatic standby, the saw-mill scene, is amusingly burlesqued, then there is a sequence where a bull escapes from an arena and chases hero and heroine through the streets, and finally a wild chase up a hill between hero and heroine in an old auto and the bandit on a bicycle, ending in the auto tearing down the hill backwards with the bandit still pursuing the empty cab after the occupants have gotten out.

Wallace Beery does exceptionally good work as the bandit, his comedy proving just as fine as his heavy work in so many films. Louise Fazenda as the bandit's sweetheart and Vera Reynolds as the heroine also prove very effective.

"The Night Club" was built for laughs, without any regard to probability, and it certainly succeeds in producing a continual round of merriment. If they want to laugh, this picture should satisfy them.

Story

Bob White, charter member of "The Night Club" composed of avowed bachelors proceeds to fall from grace. Just as the minister is about to say the words that will make him a husband, his fiancee's old sweetheart appears and he is left in the lurch. He becomes a woman hater and even when he finds he will inherit a million if he marries Edith Henderson he seeks to get away from women. After touring a far country he stops at a hotel and finds it full of women. Seeking to get away he runs into a fiery bandit who accuses him of making love to his sweetheart. Escaping, he is almost run down by an auto which chases him around and then proceeds to fall for the fair driver whom he afterwards discovers to be Edith. She believes he is marrying her for the money and turns him down. Bob discovers that if he dies the money goes to Edith and he tries several means to end his life without success. He then goes to the bandit and pays him to kill him, but Edith won't stay to see him prove his love this way and pronounces it a cheap trick. A bull escapes from an arena and to save Edith, Bob grabs her and embraces her. She slaps him. Finally she becomes convinced he is sincere. The bandit again appears and Bob jumps in an auto with the bandit following on a bicycle and a chase up a hill starts. The auto stalls and the bandit insists that Bob marry his sweetheart Carmen. Bob refuses. The auto starts running backward down hill. After a wild ride, Bob manages to get Edith out, leaving the bandit chasing the empty machine.

Summer Season Presentation

THE Summer season is about ready to make its entrance. June, July and August used to signify the period for inactivity in the show business. With the installation of efficient cooling systems the theatre has been enabled to turn this period of seeming loss into one of profit.

But, with all the comforting influences installed to make the theatre an attractive place there is an element of competition which is seasonal, and presents a serious aspect to the exhibitor. The general public demands theatrical performances during this season, but their apparent obligation to patronize the house is not as marked during these months as may be noted during the regular season.

The lure of the highways, the parks, resorts, bathing beaches, etc., all serve to combat the theatre manager. To overcome these and eliminate the chances of being "in the red ink" the programs offered must be unusually attractive, given a circused exploitation with features which embody extreme novelties.

This assertion is based on an analysis of various types of houses which have succeeded in combatting the seasonal competition. Some exhibitors are content with a straight picture program, including the elimination of presentations and musical features, while those who know values increase their activities and present features which are particularly applicable to this time of the year.

These months are ideal for special productions, such as Beauty shows and contests; Summer reviews with bathing girl features; Summer fashion shows; Jazz orchestras en masse. These months also render available many leading stars of Vaudeville, Musical Comedy and Grand Opera who can be played for "names," or used in regular features. These artists can usually be secured at a lower figure than paid them during the regular season.

The scenic effects can be linked with color schemes in "rainbow tints" and predominate throughout the house. The lobby, mezzanine and orchestra may be given certain decorative treatment which will link itself with the stage.

All subject matter should particularly emphasize the light, happy vein, eliminating all heavy, ponderous numbers. It is an excellent opportunity for the producer to deal in extreme contrasts, producing such presentations as are attractive, easy to look at, popular in their appeal and uncomplicated in their mountings.

Drama and the more classical musical excerpts should be given a vacation; comedy, dance, syncopation should predominate.

Hang out the "non-stop" slogan; emphasize bigger presentations for this particular season. It is comparatively easy for the producer to make good in his assertions to his patrons with the wealth of material available.

Favoring the White List of Dealers

WHEN this department suggested a few weeks ago, "A White List of Reliable Dealers" which should be prepared and submitted to producing managers, it brought forth comments both for and against such a plan.

The idea embraced a plan in the nature of a reporting system indicating the merchants who supplied the theatre with production necessities, classifying them as to their merchandise and what part of the theatre they could serve best besides rating them according to the serviceable qualities of their products.

The average producer feels the need of such a list while several think that it would be a veiled attempt to boycott certain dealers, thereby acting as a boomerang. Imparting valuable information and various tips to brother producers relative to supplies will never act as a boomerang but will greatly diminish the buying risks and forestall the repetition of costly mistakes.

A certain well-known manager was preparing the production of a big dance feature in which he wanted to use an "all-over-spangle-on-net" drop. The enterprising salesman connected with the drapery firm that had sold material for the auditorium decoration (but not scenic equipment) overheard the producer's inquiries relative to the cost of such a drop. The inquiry was being made of a reliable scenic studio representative. A price, apparently satisfactory, was quoted, but the producer demanded samples before giving the order. The drapery company's representative made glowing statements as to what he was sure his firm could do, giving them "the same thing" for 25 per cent less.

The producer, seeing an opportunity to make a substantial saving gave the order to the drapery company. It was understood that the drop was to be of certain dimensions and delivered ready to hang at a specified time, a week before opening.

When the time for delivery drew near, the favored contractors telephoned giving a perfectly feasible alibi for nondelivery, and two days before opening the drop was delivered. The crew unwrapped it and as they prepared to hang it on a batten, found that it had no grummets or tie lines. This necessitated the work being done by the crew, and when the drop was finally placed and taken away it was found to be too short and not wide enough for the opening. The various lengths of material had been sewn together in a drapery work-room without having been previously hung on a grid floor; and there were wrinkles, puckers, odd lengths and other blemishes which gave to the drop the appearance of a crazy quilt. The webbing had been sewn on the bottom but with no pockets for batten or chains.

The drapery company made a hurried effort to correct the mistakes but found difficulty in securing extra material to match as they had stocked only enough to make the drop.

The presentation finally went on without the drop. The big effect planned for by the producer as a climax had to be eliminated. The drapery company reluctantly deducted the labor charges from the cost of the drop, but the producer paying for the material, and an ill-feeling existed thereafter which terminated business relations for further drapery business as well.

The scenic studio representative felt that he had not been given a fair deal and refused to accept further orders from this theatre, then it became necessary for the producer to secure the services of a high-priced artist plus the cost of installing a paint frame and sewing room in his theatre to get work equal to that previously given by this scenic studio at a reasonable figure.

This is only one example and perhaps every producer in the country has had similar experiences in one way or

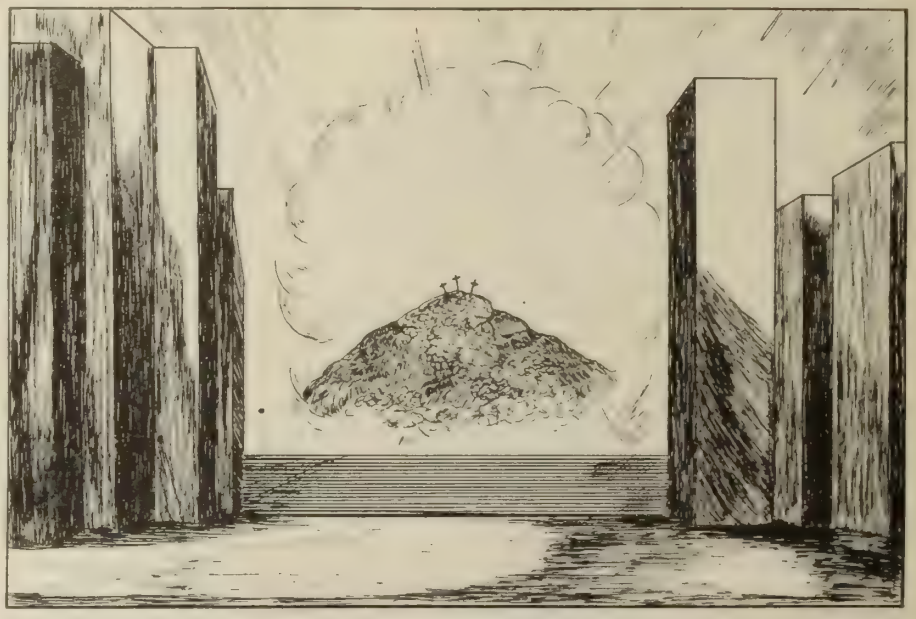
"IN REMEMBRANCE"
A Symbol of Memorial Day
A "Moving Picture World" Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman



MEMORIAL DAY will be observed on Saturday, May 30, and it seems fitting that we should suggest a presentation calling particular attention to the observance of this day set aside to honor and revere memories of the men who sacrified their lives for America on the battle-fields.

While Memorial Day has always been particularly related to the Civil War it was given a new meaning to the present generation following the World War.

It is not harmful for theatres to take cognizance of this day, as the injection of the more sober thoughts are often welcome as a contrast to the usual colorful programs, and also silently appreciated.

In devising this presentation particular note was made that it should be impressive, and to achieve the effect the note of symbolism has been added. The action which transpires may be told with a preceding trailer or programmed.

The setting suggests a wall bound area; large granite toned shafts placed at either side with a stairway up center give a suggestion of length and vastness. Back of this is a blue cyclorama, with a transparent center and a set piece and platforms depicting a hilltop which is revealed later in the act.

As the action opens, a woman, THE MOTHER, clad in long gray flowing robes appears up center and sings a song of "mother love" to the YOUTH beside her who is garbed in a golden cape which envelops him.

At the rise soft clouds are seen floating over the blue expanse, light amber highlights the top of the shafts.

In the distance can be heard the beatings on a drum. As the sounds becomes louder, the shafts become tinged with orange amber and red appears at the base of the cyclorama, with a suggestion of lightning flashes coming in from left.

Finally the drum beats drown the song and as the MOTHER looks off right she places her arm around her boy and hurriedly draws down extreme left. Flame effects are brought in at right and high-light the top of the shafts as the rumbling of thunder can be heard in the distance.

A figure, wearing a Benda mask symbolizing WAR, clad in an armoured uniform enters, beating a war-drum. He is followed by four characters symbolically garbed to represent SUFFERING, PESTILENCE, FAMINE and GREED. The Mother gazes upon these spectres in horror. War reaches the top of the stairway while the characters that followed him, dance madly at center each depicting the symbol they represent. War beckons to the youth who breaks away from the mother and starts to follow despite her entreaties.

The mother attempts to follow her boy but a large figure of DEATH clad in black robes, comes from left and stands between her and the boy.

War and its followers exit with the youth following and as the mother reaches the top of the stairway the thunderous roar dies away and the lights again reflect a softness on the granite shafts.

As the singer (the mother) comes down center her song number is introduced in which she lauds the patriotism of her boy and recounts the sacrifice that she has made; that she is representing all mothers who have borne sons to defend the cause of liberty.

The back drop takes on a sunset tone and at the conclusion of the song, the singer (the mother) turns and the outline of a hill is visible up center and silhouetted against the rose and gold of the sunset may be seen three small crosses on the top of the hill; the cloud effects lending the appearance of a vision in the skies.

A muted medley of old battle songs is heard in the distance and the outline of a young Colonial soldier, carrying the standard of the Revolutionary Armies reaches the top of the hill, kisses the flag, goes down back center into the supposed valley. The music slightly increases in volume as two young soldiers, one of the Union Army, the other of the Confederate Army, carrying their Standards come up from opposite sides of the hill, meeting at the top, clasp hands and disappear down the back of the hill center.

The music reaches its final crash; the mother rushes up toward the foot of the stairway as the youth, dressed in his field uniform of the World War carrying the standard, reaches the hill, followed by the shadow of Death—the mother fearfully endeavors to warn the spirit of her boy. He turns, facing his mother, and as he stretches his arms out toward her the shadow of Death which now stands behind him, throws open its black shroud revealing itself in glistening armour and a smiling shining face as the symbol of VICTORY, and overshadows the Youth.

With the finale comes the introduction of the theme song, during which the green hill becomes transformed to a field of blooming poppies—great shafts from the setting sun back of the hill shooting heavenward. The lyric of the special theme song follows:

Preserver of my country
And Ruler of the sea,
Be Ruler of the battling heart
I bring this night to thee.

Oh, lead me up a mountain
Beneath a quiet star,
And let me hear and understand
Thy message from afar.

Then down into the valley
With glad feet will I go,
To comfort other war torn hearts
That bled and fell below.

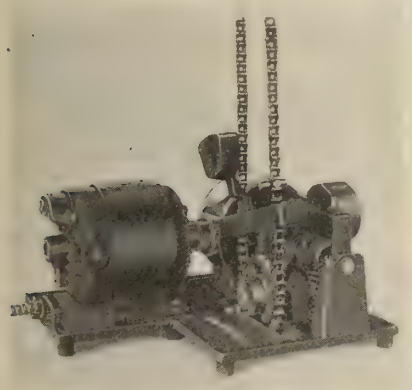
PRODUCERS' FORUM

Mr. Harriman desires to hear from all producers and will appreciate their opinions, ideas and suggestions on all matters appertaining to general production work, publishing same in this section with credit to the author.

Welsh Perfects Curtain Control

J. H. WELSH of New York City, who specializes in mechanical and electrical stage equipment, has just published a booklet which he is giving to theatre managers and producers who request same, which contains descriptions of some of the valuable accessories he manufactures as an aid in production work. Mr. Welsh is not a beginner in the stage rigging business but has successfully built his business to extend throughout the United States and Europe. No matter what the present stage conditions may be in a theatre this vital part of the house can be fitted with some sort of electrical or mechanical equipment that will help in giving the show that is not all "film."



One of the best devices recently offered on the market and a boon to many houses is his Remote Electric Draw Curtain Control (illustrated in accompanying cut) and Noiseless Steel Track. The Control machine is built on a grey iron base 13 x 16 inches as a single unit, all parts being substantially constructed and aligned. The driving mechanism consists of a leather cone attached to motor shafts. The driven mechanism consists of two adjustable friction discs made of cast iron. This combination of leather and iron causing noiseless and sure operation. A uni-directional ¼ horse power motor, 110/20 volts, elminates complicated wiring systems and switches. The mechanical eccentric thrust on the friction disc shaft gives a directional opening or closing motion to curtain travel, thus making this a purely mechanical device that can be operated either electrically or by hand without making any changes. The curtain can be controlled from as many points as desired. The curtain operates on a noiseless steel track which is fabricated of 2½ x ⅝ x 3/16 inches channel steel, with specially prepared and polished maple lining firmly secured on lower lip of the channel. The curtain travellers having rotating fibre discs are spaced one foot apart. The best grade ¼ inch steel tiller rope is used as a draw line for the curtain, a double pulley sheave at one end and a single pulley sheave at the other, thus forming an endless line that cannot jump or jam. The Fibre discs riding over maple slides assure noiseless operation and long life.

Color Combinations For Costume

The following suggestions are offered for the consideration of such producers who wish to combine colors for the individual costume or for ensembles. To costume an elaborate production it would be well for the producer to consider the purchase of a color keyboard and color harmony chart, such as used by costumers and artists. We will be glad to recommend an authority on the subject.

For Delicate or Chiffon Color Combinations:

Combine green, yellow-green and blue-green.
Combine blue, blue-purple and blue-green.
Combine with red, red-orange and red-purple.
Combine with yellow, yellow-orange and yellow-green.
Combine with purple, red-purple and blue-purple.
Combine with orange, red-orange and red-purple.

For Moderate or Silk-Satin Combinations:

Combine green, blue and yellow.
Combine red, orange and purple.
Combine yellow, green and orange.
More subtle effects can be achieved with such combinations as blue-green, blue-purple, and red-purple.

For Striking Contrasts:

Suitable for heavy fabrics although one sees them in lighter materials.
Red, green, yellow, purple.
Blue, orange, yellow-orange and blue-purple.
Red-orange, blue-green, yellow-green and red-purple.

For Non-Contrasting Blend:

To combine three colors for artistic loveliness instead of definite contrast:
Red, yellow, blue.
Purple, green and orange.
Blue-green, yellow-orange and red-purple.
Yellow-green, red-orange and blue-purple.

Odd Uses for Rope

The short ends of lash line and rope that are no longer useful for their original purpose may be put to other uses back stage. Handles for boxes or crates may be made by passing the rope through two holes in the side of the box and knotting inside. A chair seat may be made by running several strands of rope across the chair and either drilling holes in the surrounding frame or nailing the rope in position. Nailing rope at the bottom of doors and windows will eliminate draughts from entering. A short stub of rope makes a temporary cork for dip bottles, etc. A mat can be made by making a circular formation and sewing the strands together with twine such as a rag rug treatment. A rough brush may be made by fraying the ends of a piece of rope, clamping in a tin tube in the center, and winding twine around the upper end to make a handle. The end of the brush should be trimmed off square.—Science and Invention.

The Use of "Tacet"

In many instances "tacet" (musical) can be used to good effect. For example, a prize fight scene occurred in a recent release shown at a Broadway theatre. Realism was introduced by the sounding of a gong at the beginning and end of each round. The fighting was spirited and entirely held the interest of the audience. Music was not necessary and was not missed. At the end of each round, as the gong struck, the orchestra played a lively number, which then tended to serve as a relaxation. "Tacet" can also be used during funeral processions provided it does not cover too great a space of time.

Effect of Lights on Color

In arranging color schemes for curtains, sets and costumes, it is necessary to bear in mind the changes effected with the stage lighting treatment. Changes are not so great under the general lighting equipment of foots and borders as under the glow of the spotlight with varied mediums. The effect of various colored lights on colors is as follows:

Under a RED LIGHT, orange becomes reddish yellow. Yellow changes to orange. Green fades to a purplish gray. Blue changes to violet. Violet changes to purple. Black takes on a rusty shade.

Under a GREEN LIGHT, a greenish hue is given to yellow and blue. Red becomes a yellow-brown. Orange assumes a grey-green tint. Violet changes to blue-gray. Black becomes greenish.

Under an ORANGE LIGHT, red or yellow takes an orange tint. Green-blue becomes reddish-gray. Violet becomes purple. Gray and black assume a brownish tinge.

Under a VIOLET LIGHT red is changed to purple. Orange assumes a red-gray. Green becomes a blue-gray. Blue changes to a bluish violet. Yellow takes on a purplish tint. Black changes to violet.

Under a BLUE LIGHT, pastel greens become violet. Violet and black change to blue. Red becomes purple. Orange takes on a bluish brown. Yellow becomes grayish.

Under a YELLOW or CANARY LIGHT, orange and green absorb more yellow. Red assumes an orange-brown. Blue is touched with slate color. Pure black becomes olive.

Under the glare of the white lights red changes to scarlet, scarlet to orange, orange to yellow and yellow to a paler yellow, yellow and bluish-green losing some of their yellow. Green, ultramarine and violet become a purer blue, while purple becomes redder.

As the lights are dimmed, red assumes more purple, scarlet more red, orange more brown, yellow attracts an olive tint. Yellow or blue becomes greener. Ultramarine absorbs more violet. Violet deepens to purple. Purple lightens to violet.

White is the only color (and that is absence of color) that retains its individuality under light.

Big First Run Presentations

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Pictures: "Zander the Great" (Cosmopolitan)

Music

Capitol Grand Orchestra, conducted by David Mendoza, give an excellent rendition of Offenbach's "Orpheus" as the overture feature. Eugen Ormandy, Concertmaster, executes solo number most artistically. The musical score for the picture is arranged by Victor L. Schertzinger.

Divertissements

S. L. Rothafel presents four numbers this week which are distinct contrasts.

(a) Lottice Howell, Coloratura, appears in front of dark fabric drop hung in one, lower half flooded with red, deep blue at top. She sings, "Il Bacio" (The Kiss)—(Arditit,) dressed in evening gown. Canary spot on singer.

(b) Doris Niles, assisted by James Parker Coombs and four members of the Capitol Ballet give an excellent interpretation of Tchaikovsky's "Danse Arab." The setting depicts the rich interior of an Arabian tent. Heavy red plush border is hung in two, with two red plush legs drawn back in heavy folds. A painted drop which emphasizes various contours of the tent with fringed canopies and convexed opening at center is hung back in three. This is backed with a painted drop showing the corner of another tent set upon a long stretch of desert, with the horizon, a purple blue ascending into blue and light blue. A green flood highlights the upper area of the setting with red shot in from the sides on the dancers who are dressed in characteristic costumes of native dancing-girls. Action opens with the four dancers carrying the first movement of the dance, as Miss Niles, squatting on the floor intones a rhythm with the tambourine. An Arab, shrouded with a striped garment and headdress, enters and sits inside the doorway of the tent. The four dancers exit as Miss Niles uses and renders a most artistic dance. The atmosphere of the desert night, the slow rhythm and spirit of the musical composition has been caught and transferred in a manner which results in a scene of impressiveness.

(c) The Capitol Female Quartette: Gladys Rice, Marjorie Harcum, Lela Saling, Nell Eslinger, assisted by Margaret McKee, whistler, render, "Sing, Sing, Birds on the Wing" —(Godfrey Nutting.) The set for the scene has been used before but is highly effective. A cut drop hung in two, a large tree with flowering branches on net covering the entire opening. A flowered ground row runs across stage at base of drop. The back drop is given an ivory tone with a tinge of rose directly back of the tree. Three of the singers are seated in front of the tree, the fourth one standing beside them, dressed in chintz costumes. An amber spot is used on the whistler who enters after the introduction of the song by the Quartette. Purple to flood with amber and canaries highlighting from off-stage.

(d) Frank Moulan and Male Ensemble. This was a fitting climax to the group of artistic selections, introducing "The Jolly Friars" —(Augustus Barratt.) The scene depicts the wine cellar in an old monastery, an arched beam is suggested with a leg hung down in one, and picked up at center with the border. At left is a platform coming on stage to left of center with a spindle railing which is used by the friars as they enter the wine cellar. The back drop is painted showing the ends of mammoth casks of wine. A leaded window up left center is toned with blue which also highlights the back drop. A keg, barrels, tables, chairs, etc., typical of monastic furnishings are used to dress. The set is toned in browns with ambers to flood from the sides. A band and chain chandelier with candle lights is hung from center. The characters are dressed in friars' costume.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Soul Fire" (First National)

Music

The featured overture is "Excerpts from 'Faust' "—Gounod, played by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, Carl Edouarde, Conductor. For the finale the trio is sung by Kitty McLaughlin, Amund Sjovik and John Powell, as "Marguerite," "Faust" and "Mephisto." The curtains are drawn revealing a narrow panel hung in about two representing a stone wall of the person with a barred window up midway. Dark plush drops are used to dress on either side. Canary is thrown in through the window highlighting the cut-out bars and the head and shoulders of Marguerite. Blue is thrown in from the sides hitting the base of the drop and characters. Red shafts from the right and left highlight the singers during the finale. Particular interest is attached to the picture as it marks the debut of Carl Edouarde and his orchestra as motion picture players. Some excellent shots of the orchestra and close-ups of Mr. Edouard are in the picture.

Presentations

Joseph Plunkett presents three little cameos in a highly effective manner using the revolving stage as a base.

(a) "In the Arbor of Love," a Plunkett-Gruenberg composition sung by Pauline Miller and Everett Clark. The scene consists of a bench beneath an arbor and trellis work, with a low board fence back of the bench. The arbor is trimmed with vines and hanging clusters of grapes. White and green predominate in the color scheme. White is used to high-light the singers. Black background predominates. With the last movement of the song the male quartette is heard off-stage and then appear from behind fence singing with the two soloists towards finale as lights appear back of the grape clusters and the scene on the revolving stage turns away and dims out.

(b) "The Shoppers." Dainty little number introducing three members of the Mark Strand Ballet Corps. A fantastically designed set piece representing the front of a tiny French hat shop with curtained window doorway occupying most of the space. Three girls, clad in early French period costumes each carrying two hat boxes do a dance number, with light amber and canary to high-light.

Featured Picture: "Friendly Enemies" (Producers Distributing Corp.)

Music

The third "Symphonojazz" arranged by Louis Katzman is played by the Colony Orchestra. This popular feature includes in its arrangement, "Swanee Butterfly" (Donaldson) and "Ida" (Marks), Eddie Leonard's song hit. The organ solo is "Gypsy Love Song" (Victor Herbert) with John Priest at the console.

Mlle. La Torricella

The premier danseuse with Pavlowa is introduced in an original terpsichorean jazz novelty. Black drop is hung in two, a set tree with flowering top is up left and two flowering bush set pieces are placed, one on either side of the tree. A chair covered with an orange and yellow grass mat is in front of the tree. Canary and amber with pink added highlights the set pieces. The dancer wears attractive dance costume of deep blue, yellow and green.

Presentation

A well arranged Russian number introducing the Russian Cathedral Quartette in a cycle of folk-songs and Paul Tisen and his String Ensemble in native music. The quartette garbed in silk Russian blouses of vivid colors tied with black sash cords, wearing black trousers, appear in front of gold curtains hung in one. Red and blue mixed in foots and borders with light amber flood from front. At the conclusion of the second number the gold curtains are drawn revealing the orchestra, dressed in colorful Russian costumes seated within a fabric setting of fantastic design in Russian motifs. Two large fabric columns are placed on eighteenth inch bases right and left of stage. The columns are very attractively designed with impressionistic scenes of Russian towers, etc. The down stage columns highlighted with green, the up stage columns with orange amber. A large painted tapestry is hung up center and the black cyc is used to mask in. A gilt grand piano is center with the musicians grouped around it. Orange amber and magenta is thrown from the sides, with light blue from the spot border, all of which lends an attractive scheme to the variuos costumes. The quartette accompanied by the orchestra sing the "Volga Boatman's Song" as a blend from their numbers to the selections rendered by the orchestra. Two selections, one popular, are played by the orchestra of six musicians. J. De Rosa who staged the number has secured a good effect with a blend of the two acts.

CAPITOL THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "Waking Up the Town"

Francis A. Mangan offers a diversified program for the current week. The Capitol Grand Orchestra conducted by Albert E. Short play two numbers as the overture feature (a) Selections from Puccini's "Madame Butterfly," Aubert Gamble, trumpet soloist playing "One Fine Day," (b) Classical Jazz with "Hungaria" theme. The following divertissements are offered: (a) "Mother" introducing "Pal of my Cradle Days" with two characters, the man and the mother, (b) Ruth Glanville, saxaphone artist, (c) Libonati, xylophone selections, (d) "Mephistophelis," featured Arthur Imperato as Memphisto assisted by the ladies as "the angels." Banks Kennedy appears at the console of the organ.

STRATFORD THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "Dangerous Innocence"

The Stratford Versatile Orchestra with Edouarde Perrigo conducting present the following selections, (a) Overture: "Merry Wives of Windsor" (Nicolai), (b) Classical Jazz with the theme "By the Waters of the Minnetonka." Mr. Mangan offers as his presentation features, "Mother" introducing David Reese, tenor, singing "Mother O'Mine" and Marjorie Pringle, soprano, rendering "Songs My Mother Taught Me." "A Review In Dance," (a) "Steps in Plastic" presenting three groups, Plastic, Radium and Vi-Lite. (b) "Black and White" by Cooper and Thompson. Francis Renault, well known female impersonator, appears in an offering entitled "The Slave of Fashion." Leo Terry presents "The Midnight Waltz" as an organ feature.

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Night Club" (Paramount)

Music:

Particular cognizance of National Music week has been taken by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld in the arrangement of his program for this theatre. As an overture feature "Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody" (Liszt) is played by the Rialto Orchestra, Willy Stahl conducting, and Lilly Kovacs, talented young soloist, at the piano. A "Hair Cartoon" by Marcus is included in the "Rialto Review," picturizing several musical masters. James Fitzpatrick presents another subject of his Famous Music Mesters Series, "Franz Schubert," which introduces the following excerpts from Schubert's compositions as interpretive themes for the picture, "Ballet Music from Rosamunde," "Moment Musicale," "Who Is Sylvia?" "Serenade" and "Unfinished Symphony." Two singers in the orchestra pit assist in the musical accompaniment. A dance feature similar to the one of last week, which includes five dancers doing eccentric dancing, using the platform over the rail of the orchestra pit, and finish on the stage with the same background of last week for a setting.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Gloria Swanson in "Madame Sans Gene" is held over its third and final week. The original surrounding program is offered and particular interest has been attached to the prologue preceding the picture. The production was staged by Judah Zuro, director of presentation for Dr. Hugo Risenfeld, and the settings designed by John Wenger. This stage feature is an ideal suggestion for other produecrs who are to play this picture.

another.

So often we find dealers making glowing assertions using fancy price reductions as the bait, and failing to deliver. The trouble has been that such experiences are generally localized and dealers too often repat these actions with the result that other managers fall into the trap, not having been warned.

The drapery house referred to rendered excellent service in the house proper, but knew nothing whatsoever of the requirements of stage equipment, and should not have solicited the order.

It is not only a matter of dollars and cents protection that such a list would be valuable, but it will inspire a confidence between the theatre manager and the dealer he finally does business with, in that he will know that a dependable service will be rendered in exchange for his hard earned cash.

We are very glad to assist managers in such matters as we feel that we have our hand on the pulse of the national merchandising business as it applies to the stage, and can prevent the producer and exhibitor from taking the costly step.

This is simply another phase of the fraternalism which emphasizes the cooperation we are constantly striving for.

WENGER'S WORK POPULAR

John Wenger, art director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion Theatres, New York City, has designed several settings for current Broadway shows. His settings in Ziegfeld's Follies are very attractive, and he has achieved some beautiful effects with the three sets in "Princess Ida." Mr. Wenger may be called the "first artist in presentation work" who has achieved international recognition for his various designs. His success has come since he first began to reveal his artistry in the Riesenfeld-Paramount houses.

No Presentation Can Be Better Than Its Mechanical Equipment

Special Plunkett Prologues

Other Theatres Than the Famous Mark Strand Listed in This Category

Joseph Plunkett enjoys the distinction of being the originator of prologues used to co-ordinate with special Broadway runs of featured motion pictures.

The first elaborate prologue-presentation which he produced was for the picture version of "Thais." The success which accompanied that showing resulted in a demand for his services as a producer of this particular form of production.

Mr. Plunkett has given special prologue productions in connection with "The Sea Hawk," at the Astor Theatre; "Quo Vadis" at the Apollo Theatre, and for the New York run of "The Lost World" at the Astor Theatre.

These productions were devised particularly for First National Pictures Corporation, of which Moe Mark, head of the chain of Mark Strand theatres, is a franchise holder, and it was through the courtesy of the Mark Strand management that Mr. Plunkett was requested to supervise the presentation details.

Another interesting feature which has marked Mr. Plunkett's activities is that he has produced auspicious prologues for three featured pictures of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The prologues for "Monsieur Beaucaire," "The Sainted Devil" and "The Swan" were patterned after the principal scenes in the motion picture, and the costumes worn by the characters in the picture were loaned by the production department of the Paramount organization to be used by the characters in the prologue.

One advantage Mr. Plunkett enjoys, to properly present his presentations is the well-equipped stage of the Mark Strand Theatre. The stage is as large as that of any average legitimate theatre, and is capable of effectively mounting a production of any size.

Mr. Plunkett is the first producer of prologues to have three productions running simultaneously on Broadway, namely his regular prologues at the Mark Strand, the prologue for "Quo Vadis" at the Apollo, and the popular prologue to "The Lost World" at the Astor Theatre.

Producer's

We are desirous of securing suggestions for special Summer Presentations. The subject matter can be briefly described or a detailed outline of the presentation submitted accompanied by drawings. We will be glad to give space in this department to such suggestions received.

Particular emphasis is given to the request that we welcome articles and photographs on all matters appertaining to presentations and special music features.

Three scenes from Joseph Plunkett's presentation and prologue to the Paramount picture, "The Swan," recently shown at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York City. The simple design was highly effective with the lighting treatment given it. The scene opened in darkness; lights were gradually brought up, revealing the front of the setting. The change came, with lights in front dimming down as the lights back of the set were brought up full, revealing a group of dancers garbed in the picturesque costumes of the picture production. A song followed, with a big finale where the guests came from the ball room and witnessed a love scene of "The Swan."

A. H. Sebastian presents a George Melford production, "Friendly Enemies," by Samuel Shipman and Aaron Hoffman, with Weber and Fields and an all-star supporting cast. Produced by Edward Belasco Productions, Inc. Released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Producers Distributing Corp. Is Busy Perfecting Big Plans for New Season

WHILE no definite announcement has yet been made by Producers Distributing Corporation, it is understood that this company will release forty-four or more features during the coming fiscal year beginning August 1st.

Following his policy of withholding official announcements until full and complete data can be given on each subject, John C. Flinn, vice-president of Producers Distributing Corporation, in charge of production, has so far announced only the titles of the first three productions to come from the Cecil De Mille studio, and the first productions that will be made by Hunt Stromberg, Al Christie, Frances Marion and the newly organized Metropolitan Productions, Inc.

Cecil B. DeMille's first personally directed production through Producers Distributing Corporation will be "The Road to Yesterday," in which America's most distinguished young stage star, Joseph Schildkraut, will play the leading role supported by Vera Reynolds and a specially selected cast from the De Mille stock company. "The Road to Yesterday" will be an adaptation by Jeannie Macpherson from the famous stage play of the same title by E. J. Sutherland and Beulah Marie Dix.

The first two productions supervised by De Mille will be "Hell's Highroad" and "The Coming of Amos." "Hells Highroad" will star Leatrice Joy, supported by Edmund Burns, Robert Edeson and Julia Faye. The story will be an adaptation by Eve Unsell and Leonore Coffee from the novel by Ernest Pascal, author of "The Dark Swan" and many other well known stories. It will be directed by Frank Urson and Paul Iribe. This production will be a society drama with a luxurious background. Its theme is that of a young girl who believes that wealth is vital to the conservation of love.

"The Coming of Amos" will be Rod La Rocque's first starring vehicle, with Jetta Goudal featured opposite the star. It will be directed by Paul Sloane. The story is from the famous novel by William J. Locke and adapted by James Creelman and Garret Ford. This is a rollicking tale of a wealthy but unsophisticated Australian sheep-rancher who is suddenly transplanted into the ultra-cultured circles of Cannes and Monte Carlo.

Hunt Stromberg's first offering of the coming season will be "The People vs. Nancy Preston," starring Priscilla Dean and directed by Tom Forman. The story is from the novel by John A. Moroso, author of "The City of Silent Men." The screen adaptation will be made by Harvey Gates. It is a melodrama dealing with a woman's regeneration and was selected for production because of its many intense dramatic situations and its note of tenderness and human appeal.

The first Al Christie Special will be "Seven Days" adapted from the famous stage play of the same title by Avery Hopwood and Mary Roberts Rinehart. This is an exceptionally fast-moving farce comedy. It will be directed by Scott Sidney with an all star cast that will include Lillian Rich, Creighton Hale, Lilyan Tashman, Tom Wilson, Eddie Gribbon, Rosa Gore and Mabel Julienne Scott.

The first Metropolitan picture will be "Without Mercy," adapted by Monte Katterjohn from John Goodwin's novel of the same title. This will be a George Melford production with Vera Reynolds, Dorothy Phillips, Rockliffe Fellowes and Robert Ames in the leading roles. The story is a vivid drama written around the intrigues of powerful financial and diplomatic families.

Two or three other producers with international reputations will contribute to the coming year's program of this releasing company.

William Fox and His Able Executives

William Fox Forging Ahead Faster During 22nd Year Than Ever Before

New Announced Policy of No Program Pictures Epitomizes Its Progress—Foundations Were Laid Back in 1904

THIS is the twenty-second anniversary of Fox Film Corporation, and in many respects it is by far the most important in its history. Expansion, which has been the company's watchword since its inception, shows a realization that constitutes an astonishing record in film history. Today it can boast the brains of the world among its contributors, and its personnel runs into the thousands—an army of highly paid, expert craftsmen organized into one great smooth-working unit.

In its twenty-second year the curtain is lifted on an imposing array of authors, directors and stars. Most significant of all, perhaps, is the company's announced policy of "no program pictures." This means that the upward trend, so rapid in the last five or six years, has reached its climax in a product of equal quality. All feature pictures in the future come under the head of "specials."

William Fox, president and founder of Fox Film Corporation, has just returned from a lengthy stay at the West Coast studios where he has been supervising the production of the pictures for 1925-1926, and it is his opinion that the coming season will initiate an era of prosperity never equalled in the industry. While there he was joined by John Golden, the eminent play producer, and together they supervised the film conversion of great Golden stage successes contracted for by the company.

Started in 1904

The acorn that today is a great oak with its branches reaching to the uttermost parts of the earth was planted by William Fox in 1904 when he created the Greater New York Film Rental Company. In 1908, when he realized that the then infant industry was in danger of becoming monopolized, Mr. Fox instituted a legal battle against General Film Company and Motion Picture Patents Company which he ultimately won. Next came the organization of Box Office Attraction Company, which absorbed the previous concern, with Mr. Fox as president. Then in 1915 came Fox Film Corporation, which absorbed Box Office Attraction Company, with Mr. Fox as president and dominant force.

From that time on the company's progress was rapid. The following year studios and laboratories were established on the West Coast and foreign business was expanded by the opening of a European headquarters in London, England. So fast did operations move that in 1917 production activities were double those of the year previous.

Extends Foreign Service

Accompanied by his general manager, Winfield R. Sheehan, Mr. Fox went to Europe in the spring of 1919. From the London headquarters he extended the foreign service throughout Great Britain and other countries. Today it can be truthfully said that the sun never sets on the Fox banner.

Up to this time the company had been working in the East under a severe handicap caused by lack of office and studio space. It had been the dream of Mr. Fox to establish all of his working forces under one roof, and upon the return of Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan from Europe, the cornerstone of the big Fox picture plant in New York was laid. This ceremony brought leaders in civic affairs, theatrical lights and men prominent in business life. The Stars and Stripes were hoisted over partially completed structure on June 6, 1919.

On May 24, 1920, the formal opening took place. The distinguished visitors who attended saw a modern structure of commanding aspect occupying the entire block front on Tenth Avenue, from 55th to 56th streets, designed in a manner that marks it as one of the most efficient plants in the film industry. The former scattering of forces was at an end, bringing with it an enormous saving in all departments. Although it involved an investment of $2,500,000, the economy resulting from the concentration of the various working units has been reflected in a lower cost of production.

Studios Attract Notables

So great an attraction have the Fox Studios in New York proved that scores of notables on visits to the city have included in their itinerary a visit to the building. Here, for instance, is a studio floor that can comfortably take care of twenty companies simultaneously. Its laboratory on the ground floor, presided over by Vice-President Jack G. Lee, is one of the largest in the world and contains every modern device of proved efficiency for the developing, printing and titling of film. Its output capacity totals 3,000,000 feet of film weekly. Here, too, is Mr. Fox's office and study, as well as projection rooms, sales department, scenario department and every other branch that goes toward the making of a picture. Despite of its vastness, the company's expansion was so rapid that one year later it was forced to acquire another building one block south of the main plant, which is known as the annex. This houses Fox News, Fox Varieties, auditing, cashier's, poster and other departments. It also has a complete reserve studio and projection rooms.

Fox News was taken into the Fox family in October, 1919, after three months' organization work. In the face of competition from other news reels long established it proceeded to rise steadily in its field until today it claims the greatest assembly of news cameramen extant.

Fox Varieties

Its success brought about the inception in 1921 of Fox Varieties, which has been extending its scope farther and farther each year until now it numbers expeditions into unexploited lands, magic delvings into the realm of science and a quality of product that makes its single reels one of the greatest of screen novelties.

The history of Fox Film Corporation charts the career of William Fox. In every one of its important steps forward—it has never once fallen backward—he has been its prime mover and its guiding force. Beginning life as poor boy, through his indomitable will and seemingly unquenchable store of energy he has culminated as the head of a mammoth organization that bows its head to none in the vast industry that it represents.

Never, however, since he came to be a recognized factor in the film world, has he lost sight of the fact that those who sometimes appear as the most humble can, if given the opportunity, rise to the heights. This is seen in many of the stars and directors who under the Fox banner have been lifted from comparative obscurity to enviable positions.

Although occurring at a time when his business needed all the concentration he could possibly give it, Mr. Fox did not hesitate when the call came to give every effort to the call of patriotism in behalf of America during the great war. Characteristically, Mr. Fox is mum when asked about his endeavors at this time. The fact remains, however, that after receiving repeated governmental appreciation, he in 1918 was in charge of the entire section of the final Liberty Loan drive representing the motion picture interests of New York. When it was all over, the results showed that he and Mr. Sheehan, as his chief aide, had scored 100 per cent. with the teams they had organized.

A Dream Come True

Mr. Fox's reward has come to him at last. His dreams have all come true, unless, which is likely, he is secretly planning even greater achievements than those represented in this twenty-second year of progress. Certain it is that he will never stand still or be entirely content, for that is foreign to his nature. The great brain that brought the company that he heads to the zenith of success and Gibraltar-like security is now in its prime, for Mr. Fox is still in his early forties.

A captain of industry with no project too colosal for him to tackle, Mr. Fox is withal a man of simple tastes and intense love of home and family. One of his greatest recent joys was contained in the news flashed to him while at the West Coast that he had become a grandfather twice over with the birth of bouncing baby boys to each of his cherished daughters.

Another Year Finds Fox Production Again Exceeding All Past Records

Schedule Shows Thirty-five Specials, Seven from Tom Mix, Seven from Buck Jones and Many Short Subjects

ONCE again the annual announcement by Fox Film Corporation sees that company exceeding all its previous efforts in production and distribution.

For the 1925-26 season Fox will release to exhibitors thirty-five specials, seven Tom Mix starring specials, seven Buck Jones starring specials, eight two-reel pictures from stories by O. Henry, eight two-reel comedies based on the Van Bibber stories by Richard Harding Davis, eight two-reel comedies based on "The Married Life of Helen and Warren," written by Mabel Herbert Urner; twenty two-reel Imperial comedies; twenty-six Fox Varieties, one reel each, gathered here and there "from the world we live in," and 104 Fox News issues.

As announced recently, there will be no program pictures on the Fox release schedule for the coming season. That the day of the program picture is over is evident to every observer, Fox believes, and the Fox company in line with its progressive policy has decided not to wait for the handwriting on the wall to abandon these pictures. Pictures of the future must be more than merely time-passers, and must stand or fall on their ability to interest and entertain the motion picture theatre-goers.

Therefore, the all-special dramatic schedule, the trio of comedy series from the works of three of America's most popular authors, and the tried and proven short subjects whose growing popularity is attested every day by the new demands for them from exhibitors.

The Fox dramatic schedule for the coming season, of course, is headed by "The Iron Horse," fresh from a year on Broadway at the Lyric Theatre and its triumphs in Chicago and Los Angeles. Then come "As No Man Has Loved," the epic production based on Edward Hale's classic, "The Man Without a County," and the screen version of Channing Pollock's dramatic stage success "The Fool," both direct from established successful runs on Broadway.

With this triumvirate there are thirty two other special productions of positive merit, including adaptations from the best stage successes and novels obtainable.

Heading these is the John Golden Unit of Clean American Plays, which the Fox company is producing in conjunction with the theatrical producer. This group is headed by that record shatterer, "Lightnin'," the play that broke all world records from a box office standpoint. The other plays in the Golden group are "The Wheel," "The First Year," "Seventh Heaven," "Thank You" and "Thunder Mountain," which is an adaptation of "Howdy Folks."

"Marriage," by H. G. Wells, the celebrated English novelist and philosopher, is another of the ambitious picturizations on the Fox program for the coming season. This is the first Wells story to be brought to the screen, and on its successful adaptation rests the fate of the other potential screen material that has come from the pen of the great author.

Wells for many years has turned a deaf ear to producers seeking the film rights to his works. He only capitulated when a well timed argument by a Fox representative assured him that his story would have the most respectful treatment and would be givn over to the most capable persons to adapt.

Peter B. Kyne, popular magazine and novel writer, is another contributor to the Fox 1925-26 program. Kyne, for a period covered by contract, has given Fox the exclusive rights to his services, and the coming season will see four Kyne stories released to the exhibitors by Fox.

Other productions on the Fox schedule are:

"Havoc," from the international stage success of the same name, which will be one of the most ambitious offerings in the history of Fox productions. This picture, while it has the war as a background, is not in the true sense a "war play." The story, in the main, concerns a love vampire who causes "havoc" in the hearts of brave men whom she deceives.

"East Lynne," acknowledged for fifty years to contain one of the most absorbing love stories ever written. As a novel and play its success has seldom been surpassed and its screen presentation is sure to be popularly received.

"The Fighting Heart," from Larry Evans' story, "Once to Every Man," a romance of the prize ring.

"Part-Time Wives," from a story by Bes-

Four Kyne Pictures From Fox in Year

ONE of the master strokes of Fox Film Corporation in connection with its 1925-26 product was securing, as an exclusive feature, that popular writer of popular fiction, Peter B. Kyne. As a box office magnet the name of Kyne ranks high, and by the terms of the agreement Fox gets exclusive rights to produce for the screen adaptation from Mr. Kyne's numerous works during the period of the contract. In addition to having the privilege of drawing from this vast source of potential screen material, the contract contains the stipulation, made at the author's own suggestion, that he will co-operate in preparing the screen treatment of each of his stories to be picturized, co-operate in writing the continuity and titles, aid in the actual direction of the filming and co-operate and supervise the final cutting of the film.

For its 1925-26 program of releases Fox will produce four Kyne stories, and at present the author is at the Fox West Coast Studios making preparations to get his first one under way.

That Tom Mix and Buck Jones will each get a portion of the Kyne product is practically certain. Kyne is a writer of red-blooded stories such as these stars are in the habit of portraying.

Whether or not Jones and Mix are in when the Kyne melon is cut, sure-fire entertainment is assured. Kyne's first consideration when writing is to entertain. Talking of this he says: "When a producer buys a story from me he expects it to entertain audiences. If I don't do that I'm not an honest business man. I would rather destroy 25,000 words than fail to be entertaining."

Kyne first attracted national attention by his stories in which the now celebrated Cappy Ricks was the outstanding character. For the past ten years he has been regarded as one of the most popular writers in America. His international popularity was attested to a few days ago when a survey of the United Kingdom showed that his works were selling four to one as compared with the most popular English authors. He is a native of California, a veteran of two wars and as two-fisted a he-man as any of the heroes of his novels.

William Fox Stars for 1925-1926 a Galaxy of Proved Box Office Names

THERE is unduplicated popularity with the fans and real box office value in the names of the stars and featured players gathered at the West Coast Studios of Fox Film Corporation and working or preparing to work in the numerous dramatic specials that company will produce for its 1925-26 schedule of releases.

Leading the list, as he would lead any list where popularity or box office value is concerned, of course, is the one and only Tom Mix, kingpin of western stars, who is now touring Europe adding to his laurels and legion of admirers.

That this trip abroad will even increase his popularity in America, if it is humanly possible for him to be more popular than he is at the present time, is evident by the glowing publicity his tour is receiving in special cabled dispatches to all the big newspapers and news disseminating organizations.

Tom will make seven special productions for Fox the coming season, and the very best writers of outdoor stories have been secured to supply him with vehicles. One of his most ambitious picturizations for the coming season, however, will be the portraying of that gallant Spanish cavalier, Don Juan. The success of his interpretation of the gallant Dick Turpin, England's most celebrated bandit of the eighteenth century, has led Fox officials to believe that the cowboy star is the right man to bring to the screen the dashing, daring hero of Old Spain.

Sharing starring honors with Tom Mix in Fox productions next season are Buck Jones, only second to Mix in popularity as a portrayer of he-man characters, and Earle Foxe, who by his exceptional achievement in the two-reel comedies from the Richard Harding Davis Van Bibber stories, has won for himself stardom in eight more of these delightful short subject reels that will be released during the coming season.

For featured roles in the other special productions that form the gigantic Fox release schedule there has been aligned a group of players, every one of whom is worthy of starring honors and who has, in the past, been a star in his own right.

Heading this list is smiling George O'Brien, the young star who was introduced with great success to the public last season by the Fox company. O'Brien has the leading role in "The Iron Horse" and "The Fighting Heart," already completed, and is now working in "Havoc."

Then come Alma Rubens, Madge Bellamy, Jacqueline Logan, Pauline Starke, Billie Dove, Shirley Mason, Florence Gilbert, Judy King, Margaret Livingston, Edmund Lowe, J. Farrell MacDonald, Diana Miller and Jay Hunt—a veritable starry firmament of unsurpassed brilliance.

Miss Rubens is one of the most accomplished leading ladies of the screen and has been starred in her own right many times. She will be remembered for her excellent work in the Fox productions released this season, such as "Gerald Cranston's Lady" and "The Dancers." One of her first pictures for the coming season will be "East Lynne," in which she will portray "Lady Isabel." She will also be seen in "The Johnstown Flood" and "The Trouble Hunter."

Madge Bellamy, considered the most beautiful girl appearing in pictures, is another player on the Fox roster who is a star in her own right. She was signed to a Fox contract for her exceptional work in John Ford's epic production, "The Iron Horse," which will be released to exhibitors early next season, and in "The Dancers" last season. Miss Bellamy is one of the most versatile screen actresses and for many years attained success on the speaking stage. She

STARS AND FEATURED PLAYERS APPEARING IN FOX RELEASES FOR THE 1925-26 SEASON

These box office personalities don't really need identification, but in the unlikely case that one may not be promptly recognized, they are: (1) Buck Jones, (2) Alma Rubens, (3) George O'Brien, (4) Madge Bellamy, (5) Edmund Lowe, (6) J. Farrell MacDonald, (7) Earle Foxe, (8) Shirley Mason, (9) Jay Hunt, (10) Jacqueline Logan, (11) Margaret Livingston, (12) Florence Gilbert, (13) Judy King, (14) Diana Miller, (15) Carole Lombard, (16) Billie Dove, (17) Pauline Starke.

Buck Jones and Elinor Fair in "The Timber Wolf," a Fox picture is slated to appear in three Fox releases for next season, namely, "Lightnin'," "Havoc" and "The Dixie Merchant."

Lowe, who is the featured player in "The Fool," which is creating a sensation on Broadway, will have many suitable roles assigned to him in the coming Fox productions. Promoted from program pictures to specials, this player is now working at the West Coast Studios in "East Lynne" opposite Alma Rubens. He will also play opposite her in "The Johnstown Flood" and "The Trouble Hunter."

Jacqueline Logan, also, has featured roles in "The Johnstown Flood" and "The Trouble Hunter," and is in line for many more enviable parts during the coming season.

Petite Shirley Mason, who, like Lowe, is again making her bow in special productions after a few years as a star in program pictures, is all on edge waiting for the announcement of her first role. She will have many of the leading parts yet to be handed out. They will be announced later.

Lucky Jay Hunt, as the world knows, has the job of bringing to the screen the role of "Lightnin' Bill Jones," in the screen version of "Lightnin'," and when he has finished that he will be featured in "The Dixie Merchant."

J. Farrell MacDonald, who captured New York as the result of his screamingly funny interpretation of "Corporal Casey" in "The Iron Horse," will also be seen in "The Fighting Heart," "Lightnin'" and "Kentucky Pride," all three being directed by John Ford, who was responsible for "The Iron Horse."

Margaret Livingston will have important roles in "The Wheel" and other productions. She has just been signed to a long term contract with the Fox company.

For other leading roles, "heavy" and character parts, the Fox company has aligned a group of sterling actors, the like of which it would be hard to duplicate. This group includes such well known names as Paul Panzer, Ethel Clayton, Charles Edward Bull, Will Walling, Fred Kohler, Cyril Chadwick, Gladys Hulette, James Marcus, Francis Powers, James Welch, Colin Chase, John Padjan, Jack Ganzhorn, Frances Teague, Edward Piel, Brenda Bond, Mary Thurman, Edward Herman, Lucy Beaumont, Harvey Clark, Henry Walthall, Gertrude Astor, Alice Calhoun, Robert Cain, Freeman Wood, George Berrell, Virginia Madison, Francis Ford, Jack Herrick, Victor MacLaglen, Wallace MacDonald, Richard Travers, Otis Harlan, Walter McGrail, Marian Nixon, Fred De Silva, Harrison Ford, Claire Adams, Lou Tellegen, Frank Keenan, Marjorie Daw, Leslie Fenton, Lydia Knott and Richard Headrick.

In addition to the foregoing there will be a host of character actors of high merit playing roles in the many big productions now in the making.

Fox Presenting Six Big Stage Successes

SIX of the biggest stage successes America has ever known will be presented to exhibitors in screen form by Fox Film Corporation through a contract made with John Golden, the theatrical producer, which marked the greatest single deal in stage history.

Known as "The John Golden Unit of Clean American Plays," this combination brings to the screen such record-breakers as "Lightnin'," "Howdy, Folks," "Thank You," "The First Year," "Seventh Heaven" and "The Wheel."

Mr. Golden, by the terms of the contract, has already made a prolonged stay on the West Coast to supervise the screening of some of these productions and co-operate with Mr. Fox in the important work of picking suitable casts and settings for each picture.

Every motion picture producer of note used the utmost endeavors, it is said, to secure the Golden plays, but it remained for Mr. Fox to bring this about. What this means to the exhibitor can be realized by a brief resume of the plays and their records:

"Lightnin'," by Winchell Smith and the late Frank Bacon. This play broke the world's record with 1,291 continuous performances in New York, surpassing the previous record by 500 performances. This previous record has stood for twenty-five years.

"Howdy, Folks," by Pearl Franklin, had two seasons in New York, Boston and Chicago and contains a story packed with thrills. The picture will be released under the title, "Thunder Mountain."

"Thank You," by Winchell Smith and Tom Cushing," ran for two full seasons in New York, and was four years on tour. As a voluntary proposal by Mr. Golden, Mr. Smith and Mr. Fox, a share of the receipts from the picture version of this play will be donated to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States for its Service Pension Fund for Aged and Infirm Ministers, through the co-operation of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

"The Wheel," by Winchell Smith, ran a full season in New York and had a triumphal run throughout America. It contains ideal material for a great screen production.

"The First Year," by Frank Craven, gave 729 performances in New York. It recently completed its fifth year on tour.

"Seventh Heaven," by Austin Strong, ran three full seasons in New York and was shown in all the leading theatres in America by three companies.

One of the hardest tasks undertaken by Mr. Golden and Mr. Fox was the choosing of an actor to portray the role of "Lightnin' Bill Jones," which was played by the late Frank Bacon. Finally, out of hundreds of applicants, Jay Hunt, veteran performer and one of Mr. Bacon's closest friends, was chosen because of his remarkable resemblance to the late actor and also because of his fine career in character parts. Also in the cast will be Madge Bellamy, Ethel Clayton, J. Farrell MacDonald, Otis Harlan, Edythe Chapman and James Marcus.

John Ford, whose production, "The Iron Horse," has been proclaimed one of the outstanding pictures of the year, is directing "Lightnin'." The screen story was prepared by Frances Marion. This painstaking care to secure only the best possible human material for the picture will assure exhibitors, Mr. Fox believes, of a production of the highest possible class.

Another one of the great John Golden Unit also well under way is "The Wheel." The production of this giant special has been given into the expert hands of Victor Schertzinger, the widely known director who was recently added to the Fox ranks. The screen version of this vividly human story of temptation and high pressure life was written by Gerald C. Duffy. A specially picked cast is headed by Harrison Ford, Claire Adams and Mahlon Hamilton. The supporting cast includes names well known to exhibitors and their patrons.

Brains and Creative Genius Assured By Fox 1925-6 Roster of Scenarists

MAGAZINE writers, novelists and literary experts of the first water are represented in the brilliant staff of scenarists in charge of the scripts that form the basis of the big Fox specials for next season. As with all other departments in the organization, the list shows a number of new names that stand at the head of their class in this branch of the film industry.

Frances Marion's name looms at the head of the scenarists. This extraordinary woman writer has been in the film industry since 1914 and has prepared dozens of scripts for all the prominent motion picture companies. Although her parents were well able to pay her way through college, she refused to take a penny from them. Instead she devoted her spare hours to writing short stories and scenarios. At the end of her studies she had not only paid for her tuition, but had a neat little bank account besides. At one time in her career Miss Marion directed a few pictures, but finally decided to devote herself exclusively to writing scripts for the screen.

Duffy Experienced

For the coming season she has to her credit a notable list of adaptations in the Fox special productions, among them being "Lightnin'," "Thank You," "The First Year," and "Lazybones."

Gerald C. Duffy, another of the most prominent on the Fox staff, has been writing for the screen for twelve years. He is a well known magazine writer and is credited with more than 200 published short stories. He was formerly a magazine editor and a personal friend of O. Henry. Because of his acquaintance with the king of short story writers, Mr. Duffy will supervise the preparation of continuities of the O. Henry stories to be screened by the Fox organization.

Mr. Duffy's work for the Fox company next season will be seen in "Thunder Mountain," "Part-Time Wives," "Marriage," the great H. G. Wells' story, and "Siberia."

Edfrid Bingham was a veteran newspaper man when he turned his writing endeavors to the screen. A graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University, he was twenty years a newspaper man in Denver, New York and on the Paris branch of the New York Herald. He joined forces with Fox in June of last year and this season has to his credit the scenarios for "The Rainbow Trail," and "Riders of the Purple Sage" for Tom Mix, and several others. His work in the new big specials will be seen in "The Wheel" and "The Dixie Merchant."

Charles Kenyon, who wrote "The Iron Horse," will contribute his brilliant endeavors to "The Johnstown Flood," one of the biggest of next year's offerings, and "Three Bad Men." Mr. Kenyon is a veteran at the screen writing profession with an enviable record. Formerly a newspaper man, he graduated into a short story writer of great prominence. Finally he joined the scenario writing field, where he has built up a name that is included with the best in this branch of the industry.

J. Clarkson Miller, who is responsible for the screen versions of "The Trouble Hunter" and "The Best Bad Man," two of the big offerings for next season, can point with pardonable pride to a brilliant record in the literary world. Born in Des Moines, he is a graduate of the University of Iowa and started his literary career as a newspaper writer in his home town, Chicago and Los Angeles. Then he turned to short story and verse writing. Up to the time he entered the film he was a regular contributor to The Saturday Evening Post, Smart Set and a host of other magazines. He is also the author of several vaudeville sketches.

It was through the advice of her sister, Seena Owen, the screen star, that Lillie Hayward entered the ranks of scenario writers. This was about six years ago, and up to that time Miss Hayward had studied to be a professional musician. Her sister's advice, however, proved to be very good, for Miss Hayward immediately showed a special bent for the work. Miss Hayward in her short career has headed the scenario staffs of three prominent film organizations. For the future big Fox specials she is writing the screen versions of "The Silver Treasure," from Joseph Conrad's great novel "Nostromo," and "The Fighting Heart."

Robert Lord, a newcomer in the Fox ranks, can point to a decidedly diversified career. Educated at Harvard, he went immediately to the stage, joining the Bramhall Players, in New York, and later playing several parts in the Morosco Stock Company, in Los Angeles. Tiring of the stage, he became dramatic and music critic on The Boston Telegram, and took to play and short story writing. Mr. Lord at the present time is engaged in arranging continuities for several of the important releases for next season.

Chandlee Well Known

Harry Chandlee, who started his career as special writer for The Washington Star and The Washington Times, is also a well known short story writer, his principal contributions appearing in McClure's and Pearson's magazines. He has been writing for the screen since 1914, when he started in the scenario division of the old Lubin concern. A newcomer in the Fox ranks, Mr. Chandlee's first work will be seen in "When the Door Opened," James Oliver Curwood's thrilling story of the great Northwest.

Others writers of note on the Fox scenario staff are C. Graham Baker, formerly a screen director, newspaper man and artist: C. Wyndham Gittens, who prepared the scenario for the new big Tom Mix special, "The Everlasting Whisper," and Lenore J. Coffee who is preparing the screen version for "East Lynne."

The scenario staff in the East is presided over by Hamilton Thompson, and Hetty Gray Baker has charge of editing the films.

Fox News Literally Covers the World

FOX NEWS, "Mightiest of All," was adopted as a slogan when it became apparent that the semi-weekly reel of current events issued by the Fox News division of Fox Film Corporation had attained its present enviable position. Since the adoption of the slogan which so clearly defined the role which Fox News was to play in order to maintain its position, a record of achievement has been established during the past two years which has clearly demonstrated the fact that "Fox News, Mightiest of All," was a phrase well coined.

Today Fox News literally covers the world. Its army of staff and field cameramen is the largest maintained by any organization of its kind. This particular branch of the department is handled so thoroughly that every event of news interest is covered with the same precision and care that are observed by the leading newspaper press associations and newspapers.

And in order that each issue of the news reel may contain a diversity of subjects, every cameraman and every member of the editorial staff is constantly on the lookout for the unique and unusual subject. It has a name for presenting subjects that would seem to the layman to be unobtainable by the camera.

That Fox News covers the world, as is asserted in all advertising, is an established fact. Cameramen are located in the British Isles, Continental Europe, the Far East, Africa, Australia, South America, Mexico, the Philippines, Japan and China and a corps of staff and field men in every important center in the United States. Thousands of feet of negative film arrive at the New York office every day. This negative is screened and considered for its news and entertainment values by the most thoroughly trained staff of editors in the industry.

Heading this staff is Truman H. Talley, the director-in-chief, with William A. White as associate director, James E. Darst as associate editor, Harvey Smith as news editor and Harry Lawrenson as foreign editor.

The Editorial Advisory Board is composed of the following persons, who contribute their ideas and suggestions and comprise this imporant body because of long experience in newspaper work: Edwin C. Hill, Gerald K. Rudolph, Miss Elizabeth Picket, Ray L. Hall, Charles Sarver and John Weier.

Because of the rapid strides made by Fox News during the past two years, Mr. Fox decided to appoint Fred C. Quimby, one of the leading sales executives in the motion picture industry, to the position of sales manager of Fox News and Fox Varieties. Mr. Quimby assumed his duties about three months ago and since has been engaged in the development of plans for the coming season. He has already visited a number of branch exchanges and is enthusiastic over the future possibilities for greatly increased distribution. A number of special salesmen handling only Fox News and Fox Varieties will be sent into all sections of the United States and Canada.

William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, and Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, have issued explicit instructions to Mr. Talley and Mr. Quimby to leave no stone unturned in their respective and cooperative efforts to continue to produce the best news reel in the industry and to see that it is presented in the greatest number of theatres possible.

During the past two years Fox News has scored a great number of exclusive "beats" on competitors, and hundreds of letters have been received from exhibitors over the country complimenting the staff upon the superior quality of the reel in general.

"Kentucky Pride" Is Thoroughbred Story

Never before has the racehorse been shown in all of its beauty, its almost human intelligence and devotion as in the romantic production "Kentucky Pride," released as one of its leading specials by Fox Film Corporation for the coming season.

In company with an exciting story of love, the lure of the racetrack, and dramatic situations throughout, the life of the racehorse from birth to old age is portrayed. All the outdoor scenes are laid in the country of the Kentucky blue grass, so the horses are shown in their natural surroundings.

In addition to the thrilling race scenes, the Fox company believes the world-wide love of the horse will prove an irresistible lure for picture audiences.

IN WILLIAM FOX'S MASTER-DRAMA, "AS NO MAN HAS LOVED"

Famous characters come to life on the screen: Aaron Burr (Richard Tucker) and Phillip Nolan (Edward Hearn) are seen at lower right; Edward Hearn as Nolan and Pauline Starke as Anne Bissell are at the left; in the large square is the great scene where Nolan "damns the United States"—he is with his mother (Lucy Beaumont) in the foreground.

Fox Varieties Reflect World We Live In

UNDER a new directing head and with a greatly increased staff, Fox Varieties comes to the exhibitor next season with a series of twenty-six single reel subjects gathered from all corners of the earth. These reels, it is announced by the Fox company, will constitute the acme of entertainment and will furnish the exhibitor subjects of the same high quality demanded in big features.

The production schedule has been carefully worked out. Already a number of the pictures for the coming season have been gathered and edited. The rest are being made with a definite purpose in view, a purpose to offer the widest possible variety of material, each reel a complete unit, and each reel packed full of interest and entertainment. Cameramen are already working in widely separated parts of the world gathering the negatives. Others have been assigned for trips that will carry them to still more unique places, into the lands that hold out the lure of travel and adventure.

With the selection of its slogan, "The World We Live In," for Fox Varieties, a definite policy was decided upon. That policy is set forth in the slogan. It is the plan of Mr. Fox to make these pictures truly reflect the world in every varying phase and every unique place. The pictures are designed with the idea of world interest, pictures brought from foreign lands to interest those who dwell in America, and also those who dwell in foreign lands. Other pictures gathered at home with the same unique point of view and purpose.

Expeditions now under way have already carried Fox Varieties cameramen far up the Nile to bring back the wonders of Egypt. By airplane, across a desert to famous old Mt. Sinai, through the beautiful countries of the Mediterranean, whose charm is as old as history, this expedition is making its photographic records. Another expedition in the Antipodes has already furnished material of a kind only to be found where the South Sea Islands cast their enchantment over the world's seekers after romance and adventure.

Other expeditions that have already left, or will be started within the next few weeks, include two headed for the Arctic Circle, and one bent on a mountain climbing adventure in one of the best known and least photographed sections of the world.

Still more ambitious plans have been approved, and preliminaries are under way for trips that will lead through as yet undiscovered tropic pathways.

This is the organization that has been thrown into the field to produce the negatives that will furnish the basis for Fox Varieties. From an editorial point of view, everything is done to make them attractive to the theatre audience and a fit companion in dress and photographic quality to any feature ever put on the screen.

The Varieties department, organized by Mr. Fox to carry out his plans for these pictures, is being expanded and strengthened to insure results that will please exhibitor and audience. Ray L. Hall, formerly a newspaper man and connected with the film industry for many years as editor of news reels and other short reel material, has been appointed production manager. Fred C. Quimby, known throughout the industry for the record he has made in handling short reel subjects, has been made sales manager of Fox Varieties and Fox News and will devote his entire time to this branch of the work.

"The Trouble Hunter" With a Star Cast

Presenting all the beauty, lure and fascination of the South Seas, "The Trouble Hunter" was selected by Mr. Fox as an ideal story for the screen. From the first scene to the last it breathes a feverish thrill that, it is believed, will hold the attention of any audience all the way through.

Set in a tropical atmosphere of mystery, it involves a hunt for buried treasure, a beautiful girl cast away on an unchartered island, Chinese pirates, ruthless fortune-mad traders, and a real, dashing Yankee hero. The tremendous scenic effects called for in the story are produced in a most sensational manner.

The screen version was written by J. Clarkson Miller from the successful novel, "Pearls of Desire," by Austin J. Small. John Griffith Wray is the director, and a cast specially chosen for its popularity and excellence includes Edmund Lowe, Alma Rubens, Jacqueline Logan, Paul Panzer and Judy King.

IN WILLIAM FOX'S MASTER-SUPER, "THE IRON HORSE"

"The Three Musketeers" (Francis Powers as Sergeant Slattery, J. Farrell MacDonald as Corporal Casey, James Welch as Private Schultz) joked and sang and fought Indians while building the first railroad uniting the East and West. George O'Brien and Madge Bellamy are the fond lovers united as the continent is spanned. After the Indian raid, where even the young girls helped repel the marauders who sought to stop the progress of "The Iron Horse."

Fox Novelty Chest Reveals Many Surprises

A PEEP into the novelty chest of Fox Film Corporation for the season of 1925-1926 reveals a list of surprises made to complete the exhibitor's program on a scale never before attempted. There will be exactly 174 short subjects released, in two-reel and one-reel lengths. The two-reel offerings mark a striking departure from the ordinary run of short subjects. Based on stories by noted authors, they have been given the same care and preparation as their brothers—the big specials.

This means that an exhibitor booking these two-reelers will double the drawing power of his program, as the short subject comes to the theatre with a well-known cast and an author's name that is known throughout America.

First there will be eight two-reel releases from the pen of O. Henry, short story writer. These stories have never before been screened and represent the cream of this noted author's writings. They portray every human emotion that can be imagined, humor, drama, pathos, in the whimsical vein that was essentially O. Henry's claim to fame. The drawing power of his name cannot be overestimated and his books can be found in millions of homes.

Another brand new series specially chosen because of the immense popularity of the characters includes eight two-reel productions on "The Married Life of Helen and Warren," by Mabel Herbert Urner. For fifteen years this magazine page series has been in demand by the public and editors throughout America. At the present time 500 newspapers are running the series as a regular feature. The couple, "Helen and Warren," have become so well known that their followers are prone to take them as a living fact instead of fictional.

This is the first appearance of "Helen and Warren" on any screen. Millions who read the series will want to see these characters as living human beings, which, the Fox company believes, makes these two-reelers of tremendous value to the exhibitor.

There will be eight more of the two-reel "Van Bibber" comedies for release during the coming season. The popularity of this series has been proclaimed by every exhibitor who has shown it, and it is being continued in response to a general demand. These stories by Richard Harding Davis represent the merriest of laugh-producers with a unique style that is most refreshing.

Earle Foxe will be continued as the star, portraying the antics and adventures of the young and handsome but irresponsible society man, with George Marshall directing.

Twenty Imperial Comedies crammed full of side-splitting situations, beautiful girls and the comedians will be released on the new schedule. "A laugh a second" is their motto, and the Fox company announces that a special treat is in store for those who book these pictures. A goodly staff of directors with expert knowledge of the tricks that amaze audiences are "shooting" on the comedy lot. As with all other short subjects, Imperial Comedies are being prepared and produced with the same care that is given to a big, special production, and every member of the cast is chosen from a similar viewpoint.

For that "gap" in the program that exhibitors are always hard pressed to fill so as to keep the afternoon or evening showing up to a standard of quality and entertainment, Fox Film Corporation has for the coming season arranged the release of twenty-six Fox Varieties in single reels that mark a distinct novelty on the screen.

Under a new directing head, and with an increased staff, Fox Varieties come to the exhibitor full of delightful surprises. Every nook and corner of the world is being delved into to bring forth the strange, the unusual and the unique characters and places that the civilized world hears about. Every one of Fox Varieties represents the highest possible laboratory work, and, the Fox company states, the exhibitor can expect the finest prints, magnificently colored to suit each subject.

Fox News will continue to be released twice a week, or 104 issues for the year. This news reel is firmly intrenched behind its record of successful years and needs no introduction to the exhibitor. For the past season it has added to its laurels with a succession of "beats" that have proclaimed its fame far and wide.

It now numbers 2,000 cameramen in all parts of the world, claimed to be the greatest news staff of cinematographers ever assembled under one banner. This "safety insurance" means that nothing of any public interest can escape the Fox News cameramen, no matter where and when it happens.

The staff of editors has also been augmented so that each news branch has its special head. It has under preparation scores of news novelties to amaze and delight the eye.

During the past season Fox News has increased its circulation all over the world. Testimonials from pleased exhibitors have been pouring in. The policy of Fox News towards the exhibitor is "Once a friend, always a friend," and its boast is that it has never lost an account through any fault of its own. Exhibitors who subscribed to Fox News at the time of its inception six years ago remain its staunch supporters.

Exhibitors looking over the summary of short subjects here described will realize that every possible need has been thought of by the Fox Company. Every exhibitor's request and suggestion has been met with so that the most difficult part of planning a campaign has been made easy.

8 More Van Bibber 2-Reelers from Fox

The wholesale praise that has been showered by exhibitors on the "Van Bibber" comedy series during the last season has caused Fox Film Corporation to prepare for 1925-1926 release eight more of these merry two-reelers.

Coupled with the drawing power of the author's name, Richard Harding Davis, has been the distinct novelty of the subjects presented and their refreshing humor.

In the host of inquiries by exhibitors for information regarding the release schedule for next season, the most constant query has been about "Van Bibber." According to letters and first-hand opinions received from exhibitors who have shown this product, the pictures show a distinct departure from the ordinary run of comedies.

Van Bibber was created by Mr. Davis to represent the type of society man who has plenty of time on his hands, a good income that goes as fast as it comes in, and a love of adventure that leads him into all kinds of scrapes. He is devoted to Sylvia Paddock, daughter of Colonel Paddock. They accompany Van Bibber in most of his escapades.

Earle Foxe, through his admitted success in the series, will continue as star in the series, portraying the character of Van Bibber in the clever plots. So far he has appeared as a rich man, poor man, sailor, hunter, bull-fighter, detective, prize-fighter and auto-racer in a series of screamingly funny situations.

The eight stories for the coming season are said to be more fast and furious than any so far shown. So great has been the success of this series that Mr. Fox has ordered each one to be handled in the same manner as a big feature. This means casts of note, elaborate settings and high quality all the way through.

George Marshall, whose expert handling of the Van Bibber pictures was largely instrumental in bringing them to the top of the comedy ranks, will continue to direct the series.

"Siberia" the Greatest Melodramatic Offering

The biggest melodramatic offering of the year is claimed by Fox Film Corporation for its production, "Siberia," based on the international play success by Bartley Campbell. With a tremendous cast and settings of stupendous scope, the picture, it is predicted, will amaze all who see it.

There are few, if any, exhibitors, the Fox company believes, who do not remember the success of the play. It was shown in America and all over the world for more than twenty-five years, playing to packed houses wherever it went. The gross business exceeded that of any melodrama ever produced.

The limited scope of the speaking stage could not allow full justice to be given to the story, but on the screen all its vastness is fully brought out. The orgies at the Winter Palace of the Czar, the Russian spy system at work, the salt mines of Siberia, mutiny of the political exiles, and an intense story of love and sacrifice are some of the thrills that fill every scene of the production.

This is another big special to be produced by Director Victor Schertzinger from a screen version by Edfried Bingham. The cast is chosen to fit in with the bigness of the picture, and will contain well-known and popular names.

"The Fool," Screen Version of Great Stage Success

CHANNING POLLOCK'S "The Fool" comes in screen version to the exhibitor this coming season with a most elaborate campaign behind it. The play which for more than two years blazed a trail of dramatic glory in New York and throughout the country has been transformed into a mammoth screen production of the highest class.

Like other of the big Fox specials, it comes to exhibitors backed by a successful New York run at the Central Theatre. For a year it has been heralded and advertised, and now it comes as one of the greatest of the special productions to be issued by the company for next season.

The play is familiar to the millions who flocked to see it wherever shown while on tour. In New York more than 400,000 persons saw it in a season's run. Its popularity was no sooner assured than William Fox began negotiations for the screen rights and purchased them over the heads of other picture producers.

Its stage success in New York is now being duplicated in screen form at the Central Theatre. Heading the cast is Edmund Lowe, the brilliant and rising young screen star. Supporting him are Mary Thurman, Paul Panzer, Riley Hatch, Brenda Bond, George Lessey, Henry Sedley, Downing Clark, Raymond Bloomer and others. Edmund Goulding, the well known scenarist, prepared the script.

"The Fool" was directed by Harry Millarde, who has to his credit the great productions of "Over the Hill" and "If Winter Comes."

"As No Man Has Loved" Enjoyed Big Broadway Run

"AS NO MAN HAS LOVED," the William Fox epic production based on Edward Everett Hale's "The Man Without a Country," is another of the big specials to be released to exhibitors direct from an established successful run in New York.

To safeguard exhibitors against reissues of old pictures bearing the title of Dr. Hale's story, the present title was chosen, typifying the enthralling theme of love and romance contained in the production.

Dr. Hale's story has been read by more than 10,000,000 people throughout the world, and has been proclaimed one of the nation's literary classics. Its main strength lies in its appeal to those in every walk of life, its power and its beauty. When the story was first issued, it swept the country by storm. In America it has thrilled three generations. It has been translated into all tongues, and all races have been inspired by its sentiments.

The production represents the cherished desire for many years of Mr. Fox to make a production based on this story. To be certain that the picture would adequately reflect the power and glory of Dr. Hale's classic, six months of painstaking research work was spent upon it before turning the script over for actual studio work. This preparation meant the building of replicas of river boats and warships of fifty years ago, besides arranging for a vast company of actors and actresses.

To make the picture, Rowland V. Lee, the widely known director with a reputation firmly established in screen production, was chosen and given carte blanche. After a year's continuous work, Mr. Lee delivered the finished production. The picture was then given its premiere at the Central Theatre in New York and was attended by high officials in the army, navy and other branches of the government. Also in this notable audience were church and legal luminaries, and the elite of the nation. Newspaper accounts of the opening showed that the audience had been profoundly impressed by the magnificent and faithful interpretation of the Hale classic, and praise poured forth unstintedly.

This striking endorsement, added to a brilliantly successful run in New York, is referred to by Fox Film Corporation as a positive assurance to the exhibitor of big box office profits from this superb production.

A cast of exceptional merit is included. Edward Hearn takes the lead as "Nolan," the principal character in the story, with Pauline Starke playing the role of "Anne Bissell," his sweetheart. Others in the cast are Lucy Beaumont, Richard Tucker, William Walling, George Billings, Wilfred Lucas and Earle Metcalf. In addition there are hundreds used in the Aaron Burr and the sea battle episodes in the picture.

"The Fighting Heart," Action Drama with O'Brien

HERE is one of the fastest moving pictures ever shown upon the screen. There is action from start to finish, and so quickly does one exciting incident follow another that it is hard to believe its length is seven reels.

Mr. Fox believes this is an ideal production from the popular viewpoint. It concerns the deep love of a small-town boy and girl, a town bully who is soundly thrashed by the boy, and a subsequent meeting of these rivals in the prize ring in New York. From the country town the spectator is brought into the whirl of big city night life, presented in bewilderingly beautiful settings. The scenes in the ring where the two battle for the championship is the climax to the many thrills throughout the picture. It is the sort of action that will bring an audience to its feet with excitement.

The picture is from Larry Evans' novel, "Once to Every Man." The screen version is by Lillie Hayward. John Ford is the director, and, in the opinion of Mr. Fox, another big laurel has been added to this director's achievements.

The cast is one especially to attract screen patrons. The star part of the country boy who battles his way to success is taken by George O'Brien.

To this sterling cast are added James Marcus, Francis Powers, Harvey Clark, Colin Chase, Bert Woodruff, Francis Ford, Lynn Cowan, Diane Miller, Edward Piel, Jack Herrick, Hazel Howell and a host of others.

"Lightnin'" Will Be a Ford Production for Fox

HEADING the John Golden Unit of Clean American Productions for the season of 1925-1926 is "Lightnin'," which carries with it the slogan "The Play That Broke the World's Record!"

Here is one of the biggest offerings to exhibitors in the history of Fox Film Corporation. In the face of scores of bids by other producers for the screen rights to "Lightnin'," William Fox succeeded in securing a contract whereby this and other great plays are to be transferred to the screen. It will be a John Ford production.

The success of this play in New York has no parallel in dramatic history. Its three years' run on Broadway netted it 1,291 performances, almost doubling the previous record which had stood for twenty-five years. This was a run of 658 performances by "A Trip To Chinatown." In Chicago "Lightnin'" ran for two years, and in Boston one year.

One of the most difficult problems ever faced by Mr. Fox was the choosing of an actor to play the part of "Lightnin' Bill Jones," the role that immortalized the name of Frank Bacon. After looking over a field of hundreds of applicants and making scores of screen tests, the coveted part was awarded to Jay Hunt, a veteran actor of stage and screen and a personal friend of the late Frank Bacon. The choice was a most happy one as Mr. Hunt's resemblance to his friend is most striking.

The remainder of the cast presents a list of names well known to screen patrons. Beautiful Madge Bellamy has the part of "Milly," and J. Farrell MacDonald is "The Judge." Ethel Clayton is 'Margaret," and there are also included Otis Harlan, Edythe Chapman, James Marcus, Wallace McDonald, Richard Travers, Brandon Hurst and many others.

The scenario was written by Frances Marion from the play by Frank Bacon and Winchell Smith. The picture was directed by John Ford.

Margaret Livingston, Harrison Ford, Claire Adams and Russ Powell in "The Wheel," a Fox picture

"Marriage," from Fascinating Story by H. G. Wells

THE name of H. G. Wells will appear on the screen for the first time when William Fox presents for 1925-1926 the noted writer's best story, "Marriage." Hailed as the world's foremost living novelist, Mr. Wells up to this time has steadfastly refused to allow any of his writings to be picturized.

Realizing that the name of this author attached to a screen production would be of untold value to exhibitors, Mr. Fox bent every effort to induce Mr. Wells to capitulate. When consent was finally given "Marriage" was chosen for the screen because of its tremendous success in book form. It has been one of the most consistent best-sellers throughout the world and contains an absorbing human plot.

Wells was one of the first modern critics of the marriage institution. This particular novel, "Marriage," started much of the present-day discussion of the various phases of matrimony. The author, also, has been fearless in attacking social problems, and in "Marriage" he has created a hero who is described as one of the most remarkable characters in all fiction.

The exhibitor appeal lies in the fact that H. G. Wells' works, it is claimed, are in greater public demand than those of any other living writer. He is considered the greatest literary magnet in the English speaking world today, and as story-teller, historian and social prophet he has made fortunes for his publishers. The picture will be directed by Roy Neil.

"Havoc" International Stage Success, a Screen Hit

THE international stage success, "Havoc," has been made into one of the most ambitious offerings in the history of Fox productions. For months extensive preparations for the filming of this play were carried on, even to the extent of sending Edmund Goulding, the scenarist, to England to confer with the author, Henry Wall, and to visit the actual war scenes upon which the play was based.

"Havoc" was originally written by Mr. Wall to please himself, and with no idea of financial benefit. Presented at the Sunday Night Repertoire Theatre, in London, it made such a hit that it was removed to the Haymarket, where it ran for almost a year. Then it was brought here for an extended run in New York with the original company.

When Mr. Fox acquired the screen rights to the play he realized that more than ordinarily careful work would have to be put into the scenario. Accordingly Mr. Goulding was sent abroad for six months to visualize and get at first hand a true conception of the scenes and situations.

"Havoc," however, must not be considered in the category of a "war play." While a number of scenes are laid in the front line trenches, the story in the main concerns a love vampire.

The making of this great picture was entrusted into the expert hands of Rowland V. Lee, director of many of the big Fox specials, and an unusually fine cast was selected. This is headed by George O'Brien, who has a part admirably suited to him. With him are Madge Bellamy, Walter McGrail, Leslie Fenton, Harvey Clark, Eulalie Jensen, David Butler, Wade Boteler and a host of others.

Mr. Lee served in the World War in the actual scenes shown in this great picture. Entering the British army as a private he was later made an officer and was the only motion picture director to be wounded and gassed at the front. Mr. Lee, therefore, is in an advantageous position to produce thrilling battle scenes.

"The Wheel," Pretentious Offering from Golden Unit

ANOTHER pretentious offering from the John Golden Unit is "The Wheel," a vividly human story of temptation and high pressure life written for the stage by Winchell Smith. In the story, which contains an absorbing love theme, a girl struggles to save the man she loves from his ruinous mode of living.

"The Wheel" is essentially a production of the highest calibre, relying at all times upon an atmosphere of high society, culture, and magnificence. It is one of the most elaborate prepared specials on the Fox schedule.

The master mind of Victor Schertzinger, the noted director, is at the head of the production. To this veteran in the directorial ranks of the film industry "The Wheel" especially appeals, as it demands an experienced hand in the development of the tense situations and the handling of the scenes of magnitude.

A cast of supreme excellence is headed by Harrison Ford, long a big favorite with film fans. With Mr. Ford are Claire Adams and Mahlon Hamilton, well known and liked by picture patrons. Others in the cast are David Torrence, Margaret Livingston, Clara Horton and Georgie Harris.

The lavish scale on which the picture is being produced calls for hundreds of extras and minor-part actors and actresses. For the exhibitor "The Wheel" may be said to present box-office appeal from every possible angle.

"Lazybones" Comes to Exhibitors from N. Y. Run

"LAZYBONES" comes to the exhibitor fresh from its great stage success in New York. This great play by Owen Davis, produced by Sam H. Harris, was one of last season's hits, and the memory of it remains with the thousands who saw it.

It contains a love story of compelling power written around characters that capture the hearts of all who see them. The author is of wide reputation and noted for his stories of absorbing human interest. The name of Owen Davis alone, Mr. Fox believes, furnishes an asset to the picture of the greatest value to the exhibitor.

The chief character of the picture is a unique combination of idler and philanthropist. His greatest enemy is himself, and his intense love for mankind leads him to commit sacrifices that bring him heaps of trouble. In spite of it all, however, the heroine of the story sticks to him and believes in him, defying the finger of scorn pointed at her by her fellow townsfolk. In a dramatic climax all is righted, the solution bringing a complete surprise to the audience. "Lazybones" is the kind of picture that brings a smile with a tear and leads up to a soul-stirring thrill.

Frank Borzage has been given the direction of this sterling production. Frances Marion wrote the screen version.

"The Johnstown Flood" An Outstanding "Thriller"

EVER in the history of America has there been a greater catastrophe than "The Johnstown Flood," and no fiction ever written could equal the awe-compelling story contained in the facts of this disaster.

For screen presentation, this human drama, it is said, offers to the exhibitor a product of inestimable box office worth. Without deviation from the facts, the story portrays love, thrills, sacrifice, suffering and a mysterious, heaven-like force that wreaks punishment upon a town that has defied its Creator.

Even animals portray heroic roles in the picture, dogs and horses acting with almost human intelligence in the rescue scenes. The dynamiting of a terrific log jam is one of the most stupendous scenes ever put upon the screen, and, it is prophesied, will amaze picture audiences wherever shown.

The story of the picture reads like fiction, but every incident shown is based on fact. Like Paul Revere of Revolutionary times, a young and beautiful girl is shown riding at breakneck speed through the town and its environs shouting out a warning of the flood that is rushing towards the doomed town. Later the deluge descends, and in the whirling maelstrom float burning roofs of houses from which scores are rescued. Men and women and animals risk their lives in daring deeds in the swirl of water that has blotted out the valley town. This scene, taken from the stories of eyewitnesses, has been duplicated without regard to expense, and presents one of the most stupendous settings ever attempted on the screen.

Reginald Barker, the directorial wizard of big productions, has in hand the work on "The Johnstown Flood," and the leading members of the cast are Edmund Lowe, Jacqueline Logan, Alma Rubens and Paul Panzer.

"The Silver Treasure" Brought to the Screen

THE announced policy of William Fox to base his productions on stories by well-known authors or on stage plays proved success brings to exhibitors for the season of 1925-26 the great name of Joseph Conrad, whose writings are unexcelled in English literature. Under the title "The Silver Treasure," Conrad's greatest novel, "Nostromo," is being made for the screen under the direction of Rowland V. Lee.

A greater part of the story has a tropical setting with all of its romance and glamor. The struggle for wealth, in which a man sacrifices his honor, and the story of a love that cannot be quenched in spite of untold hardships, forms a tale to spellbind any audience. Although Conrad has been called "Master of sea stories," this title does not give full credit to the writer for his ability to word-paint thrilling adventures ashore. In "The Silver Treasure" a tremendous scene depicts an attack on a peaceful mining town by a fierce band of marauders.

A cast of distinction picked carefully to represent the vividly human types described by the author is being chosen. The screen version, in which Conrad's unique narrative has been carefully preserved, was written by Lillie Hayward.

New Method to Be Applied to "Ancient Mariner"

A SPECIAL production unique in film annals will be "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," based on the poetic masterpiece of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, which will be presented to exhibitors by Fox Film Corporation for the season of 1925-1926.

The fantastic, colorful and exciting material contained in this great poem was recognized by Mr. Fox as being peculiarly adaptable to the screen, and plans were inaugurated to give full scope to this most original theme.

In this dream of a skeleton ship with symbolic Death gambling with Life-In-Death for the Mariner's life, there runs a heart-stirring story of human kindness to man, bird and beast. The screen version, written by Robert Lord, calls for a production entirely different from anything previously attempted.

Samuel Taylor Coleridge was a philosopher and poet, and his works occupy a place of first importance in English literature. This poem, on which the picture is based, proved to be the most noted landmark in the history of the romantic period in which it was written and was the most noteworthy of five poems of which he was author.

"The Iron Horse" for Release Early Next Season

"THE IRON HORSE," proclaimed the outstanding picture of the year, is now ready for release early next season direct to exhibitors after a year's run in New York.

This stupendous production makes its premier bow to the exhibitor with an extraordinarily elaborate publicity campaign behind it. Already it is in its fourth month at Sid Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, in Hollywood, where it has broken all records for picture runs.

The advent of "The Iron Horse" has been watched with the greatest interest by exhibitors. Headed by George O'Brien, the virile young star, who has taken his place in the screen world as one of its most promising juveniles, the production carries with it a supporting cast that includes a regiment of United States troops and cavalry; 3,000 railway workmen; 1,000 Chinese laborers; 800 Pawnee, Cheyenne and Sioux Indians; 2,800 horses; 1,300 buffaloes, and 10,000 Texas steers.

With George O'Brien is dainty Madge Bellamy, proclaimed by Penrhyn Stanlaws the most beautiful girl in America; J. Farrell MacDonald, whose portrayal of "Corporal Casey" has placed him in the front ranks of screen comedians; Fred Kohler, Gladys Hulette, Frances Teague, Cyril Chadwick, Will Walling, Charles Edward Bull, James Marcus, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Chief Big Tree, Chief White Spear and a host of others.

John Ford, the youthful director of "The Iron Horse," is another who has achieved rightful fame through the success of the picture, which represents a task requiring the utmost care and cool-headedness.

"The Iron Horse" was approximately three years in the making, representing obstacles and an enormous mass of detail that taxed the fortitude of everyone concerned with it. For months members of the cast lived on the Nevada desert and in the Sierra range, experiencing hardships almost equal to those of the transcontinental pioneers.

The original conception of the story of "The Iron Horse" came to Mr. Fox about four years ago while perusing a study of the life of Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln's far-seeing vision that brought about the accomplishment of the mighty plan to unite the East and the West with a transcontinental railroad immediately impressed the producer with its rich, romantic material. Personally, he went about selecting the director and the cast and gathering together the army of technicians needed. Months were spent in research work, and no effort was spared to insure the picture being correct in all details. This embraced locations, costumes, characters, material and historical incidents. It took a year of preparation before a single scene was taken.

After the actual filming of the production, the picture in the rough was subjected to an intensive editing and titling that took many months more until the finished product had satisfied the company that everything human minds could do was accomplished.

Splendid Acting to Be Keynote of "East Lynne"

ACKNOWLEDGED for fifty years to contain one of the most absorbing love stories ever written, "East Lynne" comes to the exhibitor next season with a cast and production of which Fox Film Corporation is justly proud.

Since the novel was first written by Mrs. Henry Wood, millions of copies have been sold throughout the world in many languages. The play ran for an untold number of years and always brought crowded houses. Like "Home Sweet Home" and "Way Down Upon the Swanee Ribber," it can never grow old, but up to this time it has never been shown upon the screen in a way to bring out its greatest worth.

Its tremendous possibilities for profit to the exhibitor were at once recognized by Mr. Fox, who resolved to produce "East Lynnne" on a scale never before attempted.

To this end he placed Emmett Flynn, the director of a host of giant specials, at the head of the production with a free hand to bring forth all that the story calls for, but which cannot be told in any other way except on the screen.

Lenore J. Coffee, who wrote the screen version of "East Lynne," is one of the foremost scenario writers of today. Mr. Coffee prepared a script that called for a production of superlative worth and grandeur, filled with thrilling situations and scenes of love and pathos.

The cast presents a list of names seldom equalled in prominence for a single production. Every part is played by an actor or actress with a firmly established following among screen devotees.

The list includes Alma Rubens, Edmund Lowe, Lou Tellegen, Marjorie Daw, Frank Keenan, Lydia Knott, Paul Panzer, Leslie Fenton, Martha Mattox, Belle Bennett and Harry Seymour.

"Thank You," Golden Stage Play, a Fox Film

LAUGHTER, romance, heart interest and dramatic situations blended into a wonderful story go into making the special production "Thank You," taken from the John Golden stage success that ran a year in New York and four years on tour.

So clean and full of human sympathy is this picture that, like the play, it will appeal to persons in every walk of life. "Thank You" brings to the screen an atmosphere of quality and piquant sweetness that every producer is striving for but seldom attains.

Written for the stage by Winchell Smith and Tom Cushing, it brought unstinted praise from everybody who saw it. This included prominent ministers, legislators, business men and women. The general public's interest was shown in the packed houses that greeted it for four years.

Laid in a rural community, the story deals with a slip of a girl who adroitly tames a town full of hypocrites. Aided by her sweetheart, she confounds those who would bring about the undoing of her uncle, the underpaid village clergyman. The climax of the picture shows a thrilling combat between the girl's sweetheart and her chief tormentor.

Frances Marion has prepared the screen version.

Special Entirely Supersedes Program Picture in Fox List

FOX FILM CORPORATION will abandon program pictures and concentrate on special productions for the season of 1925-26, beginning in August.

To exhibitors of Fox products this announcement will not come as any great surprise. It has been easy to realize that it was only a quesiton of time when the evolutionary work which has been going on in the Fox company would culminate in the abandonment of the small program product.

This evolutionary movement has been noticeable for the last five or six years. Each year there have been fewer and fewer of the small pictures cut to the accepted program standard and more of the larger productions known as special pictures.

William Fox will ever be remembered as a pioneer in making big productions. Since his entrance into the film industry many years ago Mr. Fox has advanced fearlessly.

At first these big specials were few and far between, although stupendous affairs for the period in which they were produced. They were veritable milestones in production advancement. Gradually these large productions have increased in number until they became of frequent occurrence on the schedule released to exhibitors.

The real graduation from smaller pictures was begun about five years ago with a schedule that included such history-making productions as "Over the Hill," "A Connecticut Yankee" and "The Queen of Sheba."

Twelve O. Henry Stories on The Fox Production Schedule

THE man who knew New York better than New York knows itself, who unearthed many literary gems from the humor, pathos, love and thrills of everyday life was O. Henry, America's lovable short story writer.

In all O. Henry wrote about 300 of these stories. In a contract with the publishers, Doubleday, Page & Co., Fox Film Corporation has acquired the screen rights to the entire output of the writer for three years, with the choice of producing as many as may be selected.

Out of this wealth of material twelve have been picked for production for the coming season.

For exhibitors the worth of this series cannot be overestimated.

The publishers of his books state that thousands upon thousands of sets have been sold and that there seems to be no cessation in the demand for them.

Fox Plans in Two-Reel Form "Helen and Warren" Stories

FOR fifteen years Mabel Herbert Urner's magazine page series, "The Married Life of Helen and Warren," has been looked upon as a leader in America's journalistic field.

Under a contract with the author, Fox Film Corporation will produce during 1925-1926 eight of these stories in two-reel form, furnishing to the exhibitor not only a distinct novelty but one of the most popular subjects that could possibly be obtained.

The eight subjects to be released to exhibitors this coming season have been chosen as the cream of the Helen and Warren series. Each contains a well rounded out plot. While all have a vein of humor running through them, the series present intensely dramatic situations.

Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox Film Corporation, and James R. Grainger, new Fox general sales manager, planning the sales drive to follow the annual sales convention.

Reginald Barker to Direct for Wm. Fox

Reginald Barker, pioneer screen director, who has any number of notable productions to his credit, has signed a long term contract with Fox Film Corporation to direct a number of productions that company will release in the future.

The acquisition of Barker to the already strong Fox directorial staff makes that group one of the most formidable and imposing lists of megaphone wielders gathered under one banner that there is in the industry.

Barker will take his place on the Fox production firing line along with such well known and successful directors as John Ford, Emmett Flynn, Rowland V. Lee, Frank Borzage, Victor Schertzinger, John Griffith Wray, W. S. Van Dyke, J. G. Blystone, Maurice Elvey, F. W. Furnau and others to help produce the mighty program of releases that company has in line for release next season.

It has not been decided as yet just what will be Barker's first directorial effort, but it was intimated that one of the company's most pretentious offerings would be assigned him. That to whatever is given him he will do justice is a foregone conclusion. For a number of years Barker has been considered as one of the foremost in his line, and consistent success of his productions attest this.

Since joining with Thomas Ince Barker has directed some of the outstanding successes of the industry. He is credited with being responsible for the success of such stars as William S. Hart and Charles Ray and directed both these stars in their first starring vehicles.

Barker is a true man of the show world. Born in Winnipeg, Can., became an actor early in his teens and at the age of sixteen managed his own stock company in Kansas City. Attracting the attention of Henry Miller, he was persuaded to join up with that excellent stage star's company as manager and actor. He was successively, as actor and manager, with the companies of Olga Nethersole, Emily Stevens, Robert Hilliard and Walker Whitefield.

One of the first of the legitimate stage managers to recognize the possibilities of motion pictures, he entered the industry in its infancy and has been in it ever since, contributing no small part to its growth into the third industry in the United States.

The first big specials to be directed for Fox by Mr. Barker will be "When the Door Opened," by James Oliver Curwood and "The Johnstown Flood." Both of these productions are of tremendous scope of the kind that Mr. Barker is used to directing and through which he earned his fame.

F. B. O. Signs Thomson, Famous Western Star, for New Series

FRED THOMSON, the western star, has signed a new contract with Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., at a salary said to exceed that paid to any other exponent of Western roles on the screen today, whereby the famous Western star and his wonder horse Silver King will make another series of super-Western productions for F. B. O. which, in point of box-office value will surpass any Western pictures ever made, according to an announcement by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of the company, who returned to New York from Hollywood this week.

The insistent demands of thousands of exhibitors throughout the country for a new series of Thomson productions prompted F. B. O. to outbid three of the largest producing companies in the industry, who in the last year approached Thomson for his signature to contracts.

The new Thomson series will be made from novels and stories from the pens of America's best known authors. The finest directorial talent obtainable will be furnished, and F. B. O. promises exhibitors that the results will justify all expenses.

F. B. O. have in Fred Thomson a man of unusual stunt ability and forceful personality. He was world's champion all-around athlete for three years, 1910, 1911 and 1913, and still holds the world's record for highest number of points scored by any athlete, 7.577. This record has never been equaled. His own brother, present champion, is his nearest opponent with 7,519 points.

Thomson, exhibitors aver, is the most sensational star in pictures today. From being comparatively unknown two years ago, he has come up with a rush that makes a skyrocket pale in comparison.

His own endearing personality, coupled with his brilliant histrionic ability, his daring and his courage, together with the splendid vehicles furnished him by F. B. O. and the beauty and ability of his horse Silver King, have made him one of the greatest box-office bets in the cinema firmament. A recent canvass among exhibitors proclaimed Thomson the most popular Western star on the screen, F. B. O. says.

It is the intention of F. B. O. to make this new series of Western classics of that field of pictures, and yet to produce them along entirely novel lines, injecting plenty of wallop and originality without destroying the Western atmosphere which has always proved so popular, and in which this real cowboy actor is seen to the best advantage.

Silver King, Thomson's beautiful snow white horse, is almost as popular, and his box-office value almost equals that of his famous master. The reason for his great value is not alone his fine appearance; it is his undoubted genius and understanding of movie acting. Most of the movie horses are Western mustangs. Silver King is a thoroughbred Irish hunter. On the way home from the war, Mr. Thomson bought him from a New York riding academy where he was regarded as a horse too vicious to ride. The first time they went out in the park, Silver King tried to tear Thomson out of the saddle by going under a low tree branch. By a cowboy trick that Silver King never heard of, Thomson threw him; tied his legs and with the end of a rope, gave him a good hard spanking. Just as one might a bad boy. The rope's end didn't hurt him at all; but the horse squealed as though he were being killed. He plainly felt shame and humiliation. He got up—cured.

Several months ago, Thomson insured Silver King for $100,000 against loss arising from death caused by fire, lightning, tornado and against accidental injury. Neither F. B. O. nor Thomson want to chance losing his famous horse.

FRED THOMSON

Al Christie Signs Julian Eltinge

Julian Eltinge, world famous female impersonator, has signed a contract with Al Christie to appear in a big Al Christie feature that will be produced immediately following the completion of "Seven Days."

The title of the big feature comedy in which Eltinge will be starred is not mentioned in the announcement of the engagement, but the presentation of Eltinge in skirts is a logical follow-up by the producers of "Charley's Aunt," which is now established as one of the greatest screen comedies ever produced.

"The Bandit's Baby," by Leete Renick Brown, is serving Thomson as his next vehicle, following "That Devil Quemado," the most pretentious Thomson offering to date.

Shooting on "The Bandit's Baby" will be concluded this week. It is a story of the great open spaces and the regeneration of a kind-hearted bandit by a deserted waif. Del Andrews, who directed "That Devil Quemado" again contributed of his directorial genius.

The selection of Andrews to direct this production is considered a particularly happy one by the executives of the F. B. O. organization. Andrews, who has to his credit the direction of "Galloping Fish" and the recently successful "The Go-Getters" series for F. B. O. as well as "That Devil Quemado," is regarded as one of the most prominent and promising of the younger directors, and his association with Thomson is expected to produce greater results than ever at the box office.

Diversity of Entertainment on Pathe Program, May 17

THE second chapter of "Sunken Silver," the current Patheserial; "Wild Papa," a Hal Roach "Spat" comedy; and "Skinners in Silk," a Mack Sennett comedy, head the Pathe releasing program for the week of May 17th.

"Sunken Silver" is based on Albert Payson Terhune's novel, "Black Caesar's Clan." Chapter No. 2, entitled "On Secret Service," adds several more intriguing happenings to this mystery of the Florida Everglades.

In "Wild Papa," the "Spats," Frank Butler, Laura Roessing and Sidney D'Albrook, are supported by Katherine Grant as a supervamp, and by George Rowe and Jules Mendel.

"Skinners in Silk," a Mack Sennett comedy, introduces Thelma Parr, Sennett's latest discovery. The brokerage business and what is what about stocks is amusingly demonstrated in this comedy.

Another clever Grantland Rice "Sportlight" is on the Pathe program for May 17th. "All Under One Flag" shows how all the popular sports of summer or winter can be enjoyed without leaving Uncle Sam's domain. John L. Hawkinson, the producer, and his camera unit, traveled to Alaska, Florida, Hawaii, and resorts on the East and West Coasts to secure material for this "Sportlight."

Another of the "Stereoscopiks" series becomes available on the program of May 17th, titled "Luna-cy!" and takes the spectator on a thrilling tour through Luna Park.

Pathe Review No. 20 embodies three interesting subjects. The first is "Black Art," presenting the life-like silhouettes of an Italian artist. The second is another installment of the "Secrets of Nature" series, depicting the life of the May-fly. Savannah is the subject of the Pathecolor installment and forms one of the most interesting collection of views yet released in the "Visiting Our Own America" series.

The Aesop Film Fable, "A Fast Worker," Topics of the Day No. 20, and Pathe News Nos. 42 and 43, complete the program.

May McAvoy Signed

May McAvoy has been signed by Universal Pictures for the lead in "My Old Dutch." Larry Trimble will direct.

Preparing for Next Season

Three Starring Pictures for Colleen Moore Part of First National's Big Production

First National is preparing a busy Fall production season for Colleen Moore and to this end has just purchased three starring vehicles for her.

The first and probably most important is "Irene," the musical comedy success written by James H. Montgomery, Harry Tierney and Joseph McCarthy; "Clarissa and the Post Road" by Grace Sartwell Mason, a Saturday Evening Post story; and "We Moderns" by Israel Zangwill.

First to go into production will be "We Moderns." This is the most recent effort of the famous British playwright, Israel Zangwill, and was received with great success during its run in New York last season. It is the story of an English flapper.

Innovations by Donovan

Frank P. Donovan, director of many screen achievements for Associated Exhibitors, Pathe, World, Educational, Vitagraph and others, who is now in Hollywood where he is supervising the making of Emerson Hough's novel, "The Ship of Souls," in which Bert Lytell, Lillian Rich, Russell Simpson and others appear for early Associated Exhibitor release, and which Charles Miller directed, is credited with being one of the most original directors of the younger generation.

Donovan has a story now, written by H. H. Van Loan, in which many innovations in screen technique will be employed. It is said the method of construction will be entirely different from the methods now in use, and the "tricks" will not be divulged until his picture is produced and then the decision and verdict left up to the trade paper critics, whom Donovan swears by and was once a member of, having been one of the first reviewers to be employed on a trade paper, back in 1910.

"The Lost World" Held Over

First National's special, "The Lost World," has again proved itself a big money-maker. It was booked for a week's showing at the Shrine Theatre in Oklahoma City and did such a tremendous business that its engagement was extended—something unusual for a town the size of Oklahoma City.

"The Lost World" will open a two weeks' run at the Albee Theatre in Providence, R. I., on May 10, at advanced admissions. On the same date it will also open at the Hyperion Theatre, New Haven, Conn., for a two weeks' run at $1.65 top scale of prices.

Casting Metropolitan's First

Casting of "Without Mercy" the first of the series of Metropolitan Productions to be released through Producers Distributing Corporation has been started at the Hollywood Studios with the selection of Vera Reynolds and Robert Ames from the De Mille stock and the signing of Dorothy Phillips for prominent roles in the picture under the direction of George Melford.

Signed with Christie

Norman McLeod, the chap who draws the funny little figures which augment the titles of the Christie comedies has been signed for another year.

Among the celebrities now visiting in New York are (left to right): John Murphy, Harold Lloyd's production manager, and Mrs. Murphy; Mr. Lloyd and Mrs. Lloyd (Mildred Davis).

Has "House-Warming"

Hunt Stromberg Starts in New Studio Quarters

Executives of the Hunt Stromberg Productions and officials at the Hollywood Studios held an informal house warming at that studio yesterday in the new administration building recently completed for the Stromberg organization.

The building consisting of twenty-five offices which will house the executives, scenario department, cutting rooms, completely equipped preview theatre as well as the West Coast offices of the Producers Distributing Corporation, is the first of several large buildings to be erected at the Hollywood studios.

In speaking of the new building, Hunt Stromberg was exceptionally enthusiastic. "It is a splendid example of what the construction and art departments in a motion picture studio can do. It is more than just a mere office building—it shows to what degree an efficient organization can function."

The first picture to be handled in the new quarters will be the Stromberg special "Off the Highway" for release through Producers Distributing Corporation on the coming season's program.

Ginsberg Tests Scenario Class

Ray H. Leason, publicity director for Banner Productions through arrangements made with Mrs. Frances Taylor Patterson will make a practical test of the course in photoplay composition which is conducted by Mrs. Patterson at Columbia University.

Three books from which pictures are to be made by Banner have been submitted to the class and form the basis of a week's study in title writing. Incidentally Henry Ginsberg has announced that for each title selected that he will give a prize of fifty dollars. With this stimulant it is expected that the possibility of securing fresh, virile titles will be increased.

The three Banner productions that may possibly be retitled as the result of this contest are "Brooding Eyes," "The Checkered Flag," and "Salvage."

De Mille Signs Schildkraut

Distinguished Stage Star to Appear in "The Road to Yesterday"

There are many feminine names contributing to the illumination of New York's great White Way but there are only two male stars—Joseph Schildkraut and George Arliss—featured in electric lights this season. And one of these will shortly be missing, when Joseph Schildkraut leaves for Culver City to play the leading role in "The Road to Yesterday" the first personally directed Cecil B. DeMille production to be released through Producers Distributing Corporation.

The official announcement of the signing of Schildkraut by Cecil De Mille is taken as an indication of the exceptionally prominent casts that will be assembled for the De Mille specials. Schildkraut is now rated as one of America's most distinguished young actors and in his current play "The Firebrand" at the Morosco Theatre he is now adding to his score of dramatic triumphs.

Cavanagh with Neilan

Raymond Cavanagh has been placed by P. A. Powers in charge of the publicity, exploitation and advertising of Marshall Neilan Productions, the independent producing organization recently formed by Mr. Powers and Mr. Neilan. At his office in the Powers Building, "Cavy," as he is familiarly known, is already engaged upon the preliminary announcements of the first picture, to be filmed from "the Sky Rocket," the Adela Rogers St. Johns best seller, which Director Neilan will use to launch on her screen career Miss Peggy Hopkins Joyce (Countess Morner).

In 1912 Cavanagh organized Universal's exploitation department, training and assigning his men to work in some 35 exchanges. The campaigns that followed his Broadway premiere of "Foolish Wives," "The Flirt," "The Storm," "Merry Go Round" were accomplished under his supervision, and he was also actively associated with the success of that historic money-maker, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Doug Finishes "Don Q"

Douglas Fairbanks has written finis to his new production, "Don Q." With the exception of a few pick-up shots, the picture is now ready for the final editing.

What Fairbanks will do next has not been determined. The only thing definite is that he will plunge into another story just as soon as he can find one that satisfies.

Larry Kent Signed by F. B. O.

Larry Kent, well known juvenile, who has been appearing in support of several of filmdom's best known women stars, has been signed to a long term contract by Film Booking Offices, to co-star with Alberta Vaughn in the new series written especially for F. B. O. by H. C. Witwer and Sam Hellman, well known humorists, according to an official announcement by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of the company.

Work on "Half Way Girl"

After a delay of nine weeks, caused by the illness of Doris Kenyon, Earl Hudson has placed "The Half-Way Girl" in production at First National's New York Studios. Miss Kenyon has the featured role with Lloyd Hughes playing the male lead. John Francis Dillon is directing and George Folsey is handling the camera.

Harry Langdon Takes Staff to Featuredom With "First Flame"

WHETHER or not the many rumors of Harry Langdon's intention to desert the production of two-reel comedies in favor of the longer, feature length films, is true, the fact is, and it is quite apparent that he is at present engaged on the production of the most ambitious story he has yet attempted.

It is many weeks ago that Mr. Langdon with his director, Harry Edwards, called a halt on his last picture, "Remember When," to start work on the story and filmization of his present vehicle which, under a working title, is known as "His First Flame." Associated with the comedy star in his new story, is the same technical staff and cast with the possible exception of one girl, Ruth Hiatt, who with Natalie Kingston, is splitting the feminine honors, fifty-fifty.

It is quite obvious that with Harry Edwards directing and Arthur Ripley in charge of the scenario work, Harry Langdon is bending every effort to make "His First Flame" one of the funniest pictures he has yet produced. The greater part of the story was suggested by the comedian himself, from incidents recalled during the days when he was trouping. This experience brought him into every city and practically every town in the States for a period of many years.

Harry Langdon's experience as a professional has been varied: he has been associated with every branch of the show business. With a vast store of humorous incidents and happenings it can be readily seen with what wonderful material the Langdon company is supplied for original stories.

It has been said of Mr. Langdon's technique, "His style is very scarce, yet very necessary." This is unquestionably true, as he enjoys a screen personality which is entirely different from that of any other comedian. In Langdon's work he competes with no one, nor are any of the other players his competitors. His is an unique character, pathetic and humorous at the same time, yet at all times distinctive. He has carved a niche in the archives of cinema art. His is a genuine portrayal of humor, and inasmuch as humor has always had its place in the many and varied branches of professional art and motion pictures being no exception, it looks as though Harry Langdon is here to stay.

Takes Over Warner Product

The buying back by Warner Bros. of their product, heretofore held by franchise holders throughout the country, is proceeding in earnest since the Warner Bros.' purchase of Vitagraph, with its extensive system of sales exchanges.

On Monday, May 4, the Vitagraph branch offices in Kansas City and Omaha took over the entire Warner product in those territories, through purchase from Film Classic, Inc., of Kansas City, of which A. L. Kahn is president. This enterprise maintains a branch office in Omaha, and had been handling Warner attractions out of both centers.

Mary Pickford is giving the "up and down" to the remarkable "sets" used in her forthcoming United Artists release, "Little Annie Rooney." The "sets" faithfully depict tenement houses in the "East Side" of New York City. On Mary's staff, left to right, are: Hughie Fay, "gag man"; William Beaudine, director; Tom McNamara, the comic artist; E. de B. Newman, general manager; Jack Schultze, art director, and Harry Oliver, technical chief.

HARRY LANGDON

No Break With Sennett

Harry Langdon Emphatically Denies Rumor of Clash

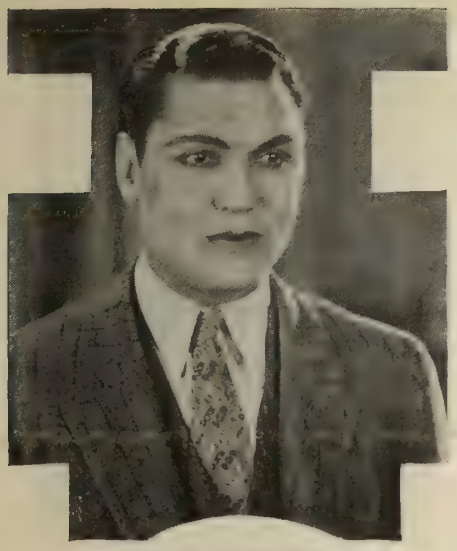
In contrast to the many rumors and a statement published in one of the local trade papers, Harry Langdon emphatically denies any estrangement with his producer, Mack Sennett.

In respect to his association with Mr. Sennett, Harry Langdon said: "If all my previous professional connections had been as pleasant as the one I have enjoyed for over a year and a half with the great comedy organization, my experience as a player would have been much more enjoyable indeed. It is very unfair to Mack Sennett, personally, and to his company, also unfair to myself, to have such erroneous statements broadcasted.

"In deference to Mack Sennett, I want it known that he has been very fair. Through his genius and uncanny ability as a producer of comedy entertainment, he has aided me materially to attain my present position in the cinema world and although I have received flattering offers from several producers to star me in feature comedy productions, there is a contract now in force, by the terms of which I will continue to enjoy Mr. Sennett's cooperation for many months to come. No definite plans as to my future activities have been decided upon, and until such announcement comes from my office, I trust no further rumors will be published."

Joan Meredith in Walsh Film

Joan Meredith, one of the 1925 Wampas Baby Stars, who recently signed a long term contract with Chadwick Pictures Corporation, will play the leading role opposite George Walsh in his second picture for that company. Mr. Chadwick, who engaged Miss Meredith, a seventeen year old beauty from Arkansas, shortly after his arrival in Los Angeles, considers her one of the most promising younger actresses of the screen. Her work in De Mille's "Triumph," "Wine of Youth," and "One Glorious Night," attracted considerable attention, although she appeared in unimportant roles in all of these productions. She has played leading parts in several comedies but this new Walsh picture will offer her her first lead in a feature film.



JACK DEMPSEY

World's heavyweight champion pugilist, will shortly be seen in Associated Exhibitor's "Manhattan Madness."

Sign With Sennett

Ernie Wood in Comedies; Percy Heath to Scenario Staff

Mack Sennett does not let a week go by without discovering some new talent for his Pathecomedies. This time Ernie Woods, a recruit from the stage, will be given the coveted opportunity of showing what he can do in the leading role of a new comedy. Woods has had no previous screen experience, but he is a well known light comedian on the stage and recently scored a success in the musical comedy, "The Clinging Vine."

Art Rosen will direct Ernie Woods' initial comedy, and Billy Bevan, Madeline Hurlock, Sunshine Hart, Pat Harmon and Barney Hellum will have the principal roles.

Percy Heath has deserted the field of dramatic writing to join the Sennett scenario staff, where he will devote his time to thinking up new gags for forthcoming comedies.

New Players at "U" City

Carolyne Irwin, Emmett King and Ward Crane have been added to the cast of "Peacock Feathers," now in course of production by Universal with Jacqueline Logan as the star. Svend Gade is directing.

Also Margaret Campbell and Martha Mattox, two well-known screen favorites, are among the recent additions to Universal's staff of players. They have been assigned prominent roles in "The Home Maker," now in course of production under the direction of King Baggot. Alice Joyce and Clive Brook are being featured.

Spence Editing "American Pluck"

Ralph Spence, who wrote the screen adaptation of "American Pluck," the first George Walsh picture for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, is editing and titling the picture at the Chadwick West Coast studios. "American Pluck" will be released by Chadwick immediately following "The Wizard of Oz," which will be the first of Chadwick's product for the 1925-26 season. Walsh will start work shortly on a new picture under the direction of Scott Dunlop, and it is expected that Joan Meredith, the Chadwick Wampas Baby star, will play a prominent role.

Rothacker Reads Reports of "Lost World" on Anniversary

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of the Rothacker Film Company by reading box office reports on New York, Boston and Philadelphia showings of "The Lost World."

At an impromptu "party" in the Chicago studio he declared that as far as his end of the Rothacker enterprises was concerned the success of the picture was the best possible anniversary present. Those present understood that this gratification came, not merely because "The Lost World" is an extraordinary financial success, but rather because of personal satisfaction in having for many years financed an uncertainty that when finally thrown upon the screen caused the critics to loosen up with their superlatives. For Mr. Rothacker had this picture in course of production over six years before joining forces with First National for its completion.

The May morning of the anniversary was further brightened by the arrival of a batch of clippings from the British Isles where critics are even more enthusiastic, if such were possible, than their fellow scribes in America.

The film version of A. Conan Doyle's novel is Mr. Rothacker's first venture in the superproduction field. His original amusement picture, by the way, was the dancing movie in which Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle made their screen debut many years ago.

"The Lost World," in which prehistoric dinosaurs of 10,000,000 years ago are for the first time given realistic screen life, is another example of the pioneering spirit that has characterized the Rothacker organization since Mr. Rothacker founded it in 1910 by becoming the original specialist in advertising motion pictures.

From the Rothacker organization came the first idea of laboratory service to back up laboratory output; the fastest ultra-speeds ever made; the plan for "The Miles of Smiles" during the war; the first movies of boiling metal; the first projection of pictures on board an airship; the first movement to increase American exports through movies; and the first experimentation toward synchronization of the radio and motion pictures.

New Schulberg Releases

J. G. Bachmann Announces Two Important Stories for Early Summer Release

Anticipating the dearth of strong box-office material to sustain business during the early summer, J. G. Bachmann has withheld two of the most important releases on the spring schedule of B. P. Schulberg Productions to meet this need. Zona Gale's novel, "Faint Perfume," and John Goodrich's story, "My Lady's Lips," with which the Schulberg program for 1924-1925 will be brought to a close, have been timed to reach first run exhibitors late in May and early in June, respectively.

"Faint Perfume" is widely known to the reading public, having reached the best selling class soon after publication and subsequently receiving a tremendous additional circulation through newspaper syndication. Gasnier has directed the screen version with the leading roles filled by Seena Owen, William Powell, Alyce Mills, Mary Alden, Russell Simpson, Philo McCollough, Jacqueline Saunders, Betty Francisco, Ned Sparks, Joan Standing, Barbara Tennant and Dicky Brandon.

"My Lady's Lips," which is being made by James P. Hogan, director of "Capital Punishment," features Clara Bow, Frank Keenan, Alyce Mills, William Powell, Ford Sterling, John Sainpolis, Gertrude Short and Mathew Betz.

C. Lang Cobb Appointed General Sales Manager of Wilson & Co.

OFFICIAL announcement of the appointment of C. Lang Cobb as general sales manager for Sering D. Wilson & Co., Inc., has just been made by that organization's president, Sering D. Wilson. Mr. Cobb has been acting in this capacity for some time past, having just returned from an extended trip covering practically all key cities East of the Rockies.

C. Lang needs no introduction to most of those connected with the industry. He is credited with producing and marketing the first three-reel features ever made in America. His connections have been many and important. For the past six years he has confined his activities to motion pictures in color and is undoubtedly one of the leading authorities on this phase of production and distribution. He was, for several years, connected with Paramount, prior to his entrance into the color field, and was the first special representative sent out by that organization back in 1917.

An enthusiastic, one hundred per cent. booster for color pictures, Mr. Cobb predicts some startling announcements from his organization in the near future. Even when calling attention to the excellence of the present product they are handling, he claims that when the results of certain recent experiments are exhibited on the screen, they will arouse amazement even among those who have made an extensive study of pictures in color. One of his promises is that within three months, Sering D. Wilson & Co., Inc., will have color laboratories throughout Continental Europe, England and the Far East, and that Sering D. Wilson is sailing on May 9th to complete arrangements for this service.

Preparing Exploitation for Vitagraph's "Happy Warrior"

INSPIRED by the notable success of their activities following the release of a previous A. S. Hutchinson picture by Vitagraph, exhibitors throughout the country already are devising special exploitation tie-ups to accompany showings of "The Happy Warrior," which is now in production.

Reports from book dealers and librarians reveal the consistent and growing popularity of the Hutchinson novels. In turn, "If Winter Comes," "The Clean Heart" and "The Happy Warrior" not only has proved a best-seller but has stimulated an almost unprecedented demand by patrons of public libraries. When Vitagraph released "The Clean Heart" last autumn exhibitors found library directors keen to arrange special displays of the Hutchinson books, and many went so far as to increase materially their supply of copies of this particular novel.

Since the announcement that "The Happy Warrior" is now being produced, under the direction of J. Stuart Blackton, who was the producer of "The Clean Heart," librarians are taking steps, even this far in advance, to satisfy the pressure they are certain will be exerted, for many readers regard "The Happy Warrior" as Mr. Hutchinson's masterpiece.

An excellent cast was recruited for the screen adaptation, with Malcolm MacGregor, Alice Calhoun and Mary Alden in the leading roles. Other characterizations are being interpreted by Anders Randolf, Olive Borden, Gardner James, Otto Matieson, Wilfrid North, Eulalie Jensen, Andree Tournier, Jack Herrick, Philippe de Lacy and Bobby Gordon.

Sally Rand, latest film beauty to drop the cap-and-bells of comedy in favor of more serious dramatic garments. The charming Sally has just been signed by Cecil B. De Mille to play supporting roles in the De Mille Stock Company, releasing through Producers Distributing Corporation. De Mille sees possibilities of future greatness in this latest charmer to follow the lead of Gloria Swanson, Bebe Danials, Vera Reynolds and Lillian Rich. Miss Rand has appeared in Hal Roach, Sennett and Christie comedies.

Navy Will Co-operate

Ramon Novatro will have the co-operation of the United States government in the filming of his next picture, his first starring vehicle under his new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract, Irving Thalberg, production executive, announced. The picture will be filmed in its entirety at Annapolis at the United States Naval Academy, the locale in which the story is laid.

New Wanda Wiley Comedy

Abe Stern, vice-president and eastern manager of the Century Film Corporation, announced the release of a new Century Comedy starring Wanda Wiley. It is "The Queen of Aces," and it is being handled through all Universal exchanges. The feature was directed by William Watson.

Barrymore Returns to U. S.

John Barrymore, who is to star in two big pictures for Warner Bros., arrived in New York on the Olympic, from Liverpool, this week. He will remain in the city only a few days, proceeding then to Hollywood and the Warner studios, where both pictures are to be completed before the opening of the next theatrical season.

Warner Bros. Start Their First "Syd" Chaplin Picture

Every effort to give "Syd" Chaplin, who is to appear in a series of special comedies for Warner Bros., the best support possible is being made by the company, it was stated at the New York office today.

In addition to securing Fred Newmeyer, Harold Lloyd's director, to make "The Man on the Box" Mr. Chaplin's first picture, the firm also engaged Charles Francis ("Chuck") Reisner, who is responsible for many of the gags in Charles Chaplin's pictures, to assist in preparing the script, which was completed last week, and production started at the Warner's Hollywood studio on April 18.

The Warners state they have obtained an exceptional cast for the principal roles which, in addition to Mr. Chaplin, will include Mr. Reisner, Charles Gerrard, Theodore Lorch, Kathleen Calhoun, and June Marlowe.

Mr. Gerrard, Mr. Lorch and Miss Calhoun are newcomers to the Warners' studio, while Miss Marlowe is one of the younger members of the stock company.

New Barrymore Special

"A Man of Honor," the third Lionel Barrymore special production on the current program of the Chadwick Pictures Corporation, will be released on June 1. The actual photographing of the picture was completed last week by Whitman Bennett, who is directing the production for Chadwick. The cast includes Mildred Harris, who plays the leading role opposite the star; Isobel De Leon, a distinguished dramatic actress of the French speaking stage; Winifred Barry, Dorothy Kingdon, Jean Del Val, Albert Mack and J. Moy Bennett.

When Ernest Linnenkamp, celebrated Viennese portrait painter, came to America with the intention of painting America's fifteen most beautiful women, he selected Claire Windsor. Here Linnenkamp is shown with the blonde Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer actress in front her portrait.

"Gold Bond" New Brand Name of F. B. O. Special Productions

HARRY M. BERMAN, sales manager of Film Booking Offices, announces that all special productions on the F. B. O. program will be known as "Gold-Bond" Pictures. There will be twelve "Gold-Bond" specials from F. B. O. for the 1925-26 season, among them:

"Drusilla With a Million," based on the famous novel by Elizabeth Cooper, directed by F. Harmon Weight, starring Mary Carr, Priscilla Bonner and Kenneth Harlan; "Parisian Nights," a story of the Paris underworld, directed by Al Santell and featuring Elaine Hammerstein, Lou Tellegen and Renee Adoree; C. Gardner Sullivan's second independent production for F. B. O., called "If Marriage Fails?" featuring Jacqueline Logan, Clive Brook and Jean Hersholt, a lavishly mounted and gorgeously dressed society drama; "The Keeper of the Bees," the well-known novel by the late Gene Stratton-Porter, now running serially in McCall's Magazine, which will be directed by James Leo Meehan and will star Mrs. Porter's granddaughter; "When His Love Grew Cold," one of the four Laura Jean Libbey stories which F. B. O. is producing with an all-star cast; "The Last Edition," Emory Johnson's new effort, which will immortalize the profession of journalism, and six more to come, announcement of which will be made shortly.

"The name 'Gold-Bond' applied to an F. B. O. picture is a mark of sterling quality," commented Mr. Berman. "Those pictures to which that brand name is attached will have to conform to the most rigid motion picture standards. They will have to be directed by the leading figures in the directorial field from stories that contain sure-fire box-office elements. The players will be stars with a box-office following, and the pictures will contain all the ingredients that make for box-office successes."

"White Monkey" Released Soon

"The White Monkey" is in process of cutting and titling at the Sawyer-Lubin studio, under the supervision of Director Phil Rosen, with Teddy Hanscom editing and Louis Sherwin writing the titles for this important Barbara La Marr production. Reports from the publishers of the Galsworthy best seller indicate there is no cessation in public demand for this celebrated novel, which has passed the two hundred thousand circulation mark, and a tremendous public will await its release, tentatively set for July 10th. Thomas Holding, George Marion, Henry Victor, Flora Le Breton, Charles Emmett Mack, Tammany Young and Colin Campbell, are prominent in the cast which is headed by Barbara La Marr in the role of "Fleur."

"Sally" Draws the Crowds to the State, Los Angeles

FIRST NATIONAL'S stellar vehicle for Colleen Moore, "Sally," had its first-run showing in Los Angeles at Loew's State Theatre, scoring a hit. The Saturday and Sunday business was the second biggest for those two days in the history of the theatre. The reviewers were most commendatory.

The Los Angeles Times said: "I think I may safely say that 'Sally' is everybody's type of show—a happy idea. It promises to bring additional prestige and popularity to Colleen Moore, the star. Throngs are crowding Loew's State Theatre to see it, and are enjoying themselves to the very utmost from all indications."

The Los Angeles Record: "If you want to see one of the most satisfying shows that you have seen in a long, long time, just travel to Loew's this week. For 'Sally' has been found in the movies and she is making laughs enough to carry you over for several weeks more. Colleen is excellent as Sally. Leon Errol is equally good in his role of the grand duke."

The Los Angeles Herald: "'Sally' is one of the most delightful productions that has come to the screen. Without a doubt it is Colleen Moore's best contribution to films to date. Errol is just as funny on the screen as he was on the stage."

The Los Angeles Examiner: "Colleen Moore makes Sally as captivating as she was a few years ago in Marilyn Miller's interpretation. Her Sally is a saucy little gamin who keeps things moving at top speed—irrepressible, volatile and wholly winning."

The Los Angeles Express: "That transitory thing called human appeal may be found in large quantities in 'Sally,' due, largely, to the vivacious personality of Colleen Moore."

First Buster Brown Comedy

Word has just come from Hollywood studios of the Century Film Corporation that work has been completed on the first Buster Brown Comedy—the series of two reel fun-films based on R. F. Outcault's famous comics, which Century will feature in its 1925-1926 product.

Hal Roach to Co-Feature Well-Known Fun Makers

AMONG the recent acquisitions made by Hal Roach for his stock company at the Culver City Studios are several names that have already made their mark as established stars or featured players in the comedy field. These players will be co-featured in the Hal Roach two-reel comedies to be distributed by Pathe during the forthcoming season. Among these recent acquisitions are Al St. John, Lige Conley, Dot Farley, and Lucien Littlefield.

All four are now appearing in the second comedy of the Hal Roach two-reel comedy series for Pathe, which is being produced under the direction of Jay Howe. Under the policy laid down for this particular series no single star or player is chosen for the leading role throughout the series, selections for the featured parts being distributed over the most meritorious comedy talent on the Hal Roach lot.

Al St. John started his motion picture career with Sennett. He then joined Fox where he starred for several years in two-reelers and whom he left to head his own comedy company for Educational.

Lige Conley, another well-known comedian in the cast, had an identical career. He also started with Mack Sennett and then starred in comedies first with Fox and then with Educational. Under Educational's banner he appeared as the star of the Mermaid Comedies.

Dot Farley, one of the feminine members of the cast, has been featured in her own comedies, and Lucien Littlefield, deserted the features where he had gained an enviable reputation as a character actor, to create comedy characters for Roach.

Besides Al St. John, Lige Conley, Dot Farley and Lucien Littlefield, the cast of the second of the series of Hal Roach two-reel Pathe comedies, includes such well known names in the comedy world as Martha Sleeper, Marjorie Whiteis, James Finlayson, "Husky" Hanes, W. H. Platt, Harry Lorraine, George Rowe and Al Hallett.

Shea Signs Winner Group

Vincent McFaul, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo, N. Y., has signed a big First National contract for the coming season. He has contracted to play thirty-nine of the Winner Group of First National releases for the season of 1925-1926.

This is the biggest single contract on First National's Winner Group yet signed up. F. J. A. McCarthy, branch manager in Buffalo, aided by A. W. Smith, Jr., of E. A. Eschmann's staff, acted for the distributing company.

Metro Buys Sabatini Novel

Louis B. Mayer has announced that "Bardelys the Magnificent," the romance by Rafael Sabatini, will be brought to the screen by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the motion picture rights to this best-seller having been acquired by this organization with a view to picturizing it on an unusually elaborate scale. John Gilbert will play the leading role in this special production.

All-Comedy Programs

Several Big Houses in San Francisco Find the Idea is Popular

The all-comedy program, which has been steadily winning favor in important key centers throughout the country, has added San Francisco to its list of strongholds.

A few weeks ago the Egyptian and the Aztec, prominent first-run theatres of the Golden Gate City, staged all-Pathe-comedy programs with such decided success that Max Graf, managing director of both houses, was led to express his entire satisfaction with the innovation in the following wire:

"It is the first time that an all-comedy week has been tried in this city, and our business is beyond expectations."

Now the Granada, another important first-run house of San Francisco, comes to bat with an all-comedy program comprising the Associated Exhibitors feature comedy, "Introduce Me," an "Our Gang" comedy, and an Aesop Film Fable. The short-subject comedy offerings were from the Pathe program.

Sills Cast is Completed

First National Productions has completed the casting of Milton Sills' first starring vehicle, "The Making of O'Malley," according to announcement by Earl Hudson, head of the eastern units of First National. The supporting cast consists of Dorothy Mackaill, Claude King, Helen Rowland, Warner Richmond, Julia Hurley, Thomas I. Carrigan, Charles Graham, Allen Brander, Jack de Lacey, Blanche Craig, T. Wigney Percyval and Charles Craig. The picture is now in production at the New York studios of First National, and is being directed by Lambert Hillyer.

Wanda Wiley's Latest Century

A new Century Comedy starring Wanda Wiley has just been completed at the Hollywood studio plant of Century. The title is "A Hasty Marriage" and it was directed by Edward I. Luddy.

One of the features of this comedy is a bevy of especially selected girls chosen to enact the role of comedy bridesmaids. "A Hasty Marriage" is heralded as one of Wanda Wiley's best two-reelers. It will be released through Universal Exchanges.

"Two Can Play"

Associated Exhibitors to Screen Serial—Clara Bow in Cast

Associated Exhibitors announces this week another important addition to its line-up of productions for the 1925-1926 season in the acquisition of a film version of "Two Can Play," to be adapted from the recent Saturday Evening Post Serial story written by Gerald Mygatt. This production has been assigned to the second group of features under the new Associated program, and will probably be released in the spring of 1926.

The story of "Two Can Play" is a novel one with its action centered about a strange assignment which a serious-minded young man receives, following his answering a queer newspaper advertisement. Nat Ross is producing the film, and supervising the direction.

Clara Bow and Allan Forrest have been engaged for the leading roles.

"Fighting Demon" Completed

The fourth stunt melodrama made by Richard Talmadge for Film Booking Offices and called "The Fighting Demon" has just been completed and will be released in a few weeks, according to an announcement by B. P. Fineman, F. B. O. production chief. It was directed by Arthur Rosson and originally titled "The American Eagle." Much of the action takes place in South America, whither Dick goes as a safe expert and falls into the hands of a band of crooks with unusual complications.

Rayart Official on Trip

Thomas A. Curran, Special Representative for Rayart Pictures, left last Sunday for a trip over the Southern and Western territories in the interests of Rayart. His itinerary includes Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake, Seattle and San Francisco.

Milton Simon, who recently became affiliated with Rayart as a representative, also left on a territorial trip embracing Cleveland, Pittsburg, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, and Omaha.

"Kiss Me Again" Is Accorded Warm Reception in Hollywood

PUT to the supreme test when it was previewed by as severe a company of critics, official and unofficial, as it would be possible to assemble anywhere, Warner Bros.' "Kiss Me Again," the latest Ernst Lubitsch production, was greeted on its first showing in Hollywood as one of the outstanding entertaining pictures of all time, according to advices from Warners' West Coast office.

The preview took place a few nights ago at the Writers Club in Hollywood. This organization is composed of authors, stars, directors, scenario writers, newspaper reviewers—persons representing every department of picture production and picture criticism. As Hollywood is the capital of Moviedom, whose population is "fed up" with films, it is only a producer having unbounded faith in his product who is willing to submit a picture to the acid test of the Writers' Club audience.

A telegram to the Warner Bros. offices in New York, from Jack Warner, production manager, gives assurance, however, that in "Kiss Me Again" this confidence was more than justified. Not only were Mr. Warner and Mr. Lubitsch showered with congratulations by the enthusiastic members of the Writers Club, but the newspaper reviewers praised the picture without reservation.

In the Los Angeles Examiner, Florence Lawrence acclaimed Ernst Lubitsch as "the hero of Hollywood," and described this photoplay as "the finest directorial effort that has ever been photographed."

In the course of his appreciation in the Los Angeles Times Harry Carr said: "'Kiss Me Again' raises Marie Prevost and Monte Blue to new screen heights, while everybody in the cast does notably meritorious work."

In the story by Hans Kraely, Marie Prevost and Monte Blue have the featured parts but Clara Bow, John Roche and Willard Louis, who complete the company, all have important roles.

Completes "Wild, Wild Girl"

Bebe Daniels has completed her latest Paramount picture, "The Wild, Wild Girl," under the direction of Edward Sutherland.

The story was adapted by Tom Geraghty from a Liberty Magazine short story of which Steuart M. Emery is the author. Rod La Rocque played the leading role opposite Miss Daniels, and in the supporting cast are players prominent in the foremost successes on Broadway.

Over a Thousand Newspapers in Warner Serialization Hook-up

EASILY the most extensive campaign having for its purpose the publication in newspapers of stories to appear on the screen, ever offered by a motion picture company has just been launched by Warner Bros., who will broadcast through more than 1,000 newspapers the stories on their 1925-26 program.

Not only have contracts been entered into which syndicates and newspaper services for publication throughout their extensive lists of papers, but Warner Bros. have arranged for the independent publication in 1,000 newspapers of their best picture stories.

This service, which literally opens a new epoch in the extension of practical exploitation aids to exhibitors by a producing and distributing organization, is one of the big tie-ups effected in the $500,000 national advertising campaign started by the Warners.

Arrangements have been made whereby the serialization of a certain story in a key center will coincide as closely as may be practicable with first runs of the picture in that locality. In every instance the newspapers contracting for the serialization service is a representative publication of wide circulation, hence the exhibitor is given advantage of a newspaper tie-up that has never been enjoyed in the past.

None of the subjects to be serialized, moreover, whether it was in its original form a novel, a short story or the picture itself, has ever appeared in serial form before. Care has been taken, in the negotiation of contracts, to limit publication rights in a given territory to a single paper. Thus, each publication is protected against competition in its field, and is assured a fiction beat.

The serials are furnished to the newspapers in mat form or in proofs, as the publishers. Ordinarily there will be about eighteen installments of approximately 1,000 words each, every installment illustrated with production stills from the picture.

The first serialization of Kathleen Norris's "Rose of the World" has just been finished by the McClure Syndicate throughout its list of 168 newspapers. Within the last two weeks the New York Evening Journal started the serialization of "The Pleasure Buyers," by Arthur Somers Roche, serialization in the Cosmopolitan Magazine having been completed. From the Evening Journal this story will go to the twenty-eight other Hearst daily newspapers scattered about the United States, and then to the sixty publications served by the Hearst Syndicate.

"The Passionate Quest" and "The Inevitable Millionaires," each of which is among the best liked of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novels, and is to have a place in Warner Bros.' list of attractions, are to be launched on their serialization career through the McClure Syndicate in the near future.

Among the books to be serialized through Warner Bros.' own service directly to one thousand newspapers is "Bobbed Hair," the dazzling story which represents the composite work of twenty persons—artists in various fields.

Other works to be supplied by the Warners to one thousand papers are Charles Hanson Towne's "The Gay Ones," F. C. Dafoe's "The Man Who Waited for Love," Elmer E. Vance's play, "The Limited Mail," and Ketherine Brody's "Why Girls Go Back Home," Bradley King's "Satan in Sables" and Gertie Wentworth James's "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted."

Because of the popularity of the authors and the facilities for wide publicity offered by the newspapers publishing the serializations, exhibitors have virtually unlimited opportunities for effective exploitation.

Evelyn Brent in "Tizona"

"Tizona—The Firebrand" has been chosen as the next starring vehicle for Evelyn Brent, according to announcement by B. P. Fineman, F. B. O. production chief.

The story, which has a spanish locale and deals with a colorful girl character, a sort of Joan of Arc, who leads a band of Pyranees near the Bay of Biscay, is the work of Clifford Howard and Burke Jenkins. "Tizona" will he used only as a working title.

POLA NEGRI

The Famous Players' star returned from Europe last week and will make one picture in the East before returning to the West Coast.

"Quicker'n Lightnin'"

"Quicker'n Lightnin'" will be the title of the first five-part feature of a series of eight action-stunt thrillers starring Buffalo Bill, Jr., the popular cowboy player, which Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation will release during the coming season.

Telegraphic advices received by Louis Weiss, managing Artclass executive, from Lester F. Scott, Jr., who is producing the Buffalo Bill, Jr., Buddy Roosevelt and Wally Wales series of acrobatic-stunt features on the West Coast, stated that "Quicker'n Lightnin'" would be completed by the end of the week, and that it promised to make a new mark in attraction value in the high record already established by this popular boy. Richard Thorpe directed.

Canutt in "White Thunder"

"White Thunder" is the new title of the third Ben Wilson production for F. B. O. release, starring Yakima Canutt. "White Thunder" was formerly called "The White Vaquero" and comes from the pen of Kingsley Benedict. Ben Wilson will direct and Robert McGowan will assist him. Prominent in support of Canutt will be William H. Turner, Lew Meehan, George Lessey, Nell Brantley and Kingsley Benedict.

Featured players in "Hell's Highroad," which Cecil De Mille is making. Left to right: Edmund Burns, Leatrice Joy, Julia Faye, Robert Edeson. This picture will be released by Producers Dist. Corp.

Louise Fazenda, who will appear with Marie Prevost and Kenneth Harlan in "Bobbed Hair," a Warner Brothers production.

Commonwealth Purchases Twenty-four Arrow Specials

One of the most important deals ever consummated in the Independent field occurred this week when Arrow Pictures Corporation, through President W. E. Shallenberger, closed a contract with Samuel Zierler of Commonwealth Film Corporation under the terms of which the latter organization will distribute in Greater New York and Northern New Jersey the twenty-four special productions which comprise the Arrow output for the season 1925-26.

The productions involved follow: Eight Whitman Bennett productions, four of them to be personally directed by Whitman Bennett and four by Wilfred Noy; four Dallas M. Fitzgerald productions; four National Picture Bureau productions; four Arthur M. Beck productions; two W. E. Shallenberger productions; two I. E. Chadwick productions.

In its announcement of the deal Arrow says: "It is unnecessary to point out the magnitude of this transaction. Knokledge of the conditions must make it clear, from the calibre of the organization and the pictures involved, that this represents one of the most important deals ever consummated in the Independent field."

Compliments For Rayart Pictures

The twenty-four page announcement of the forthcoming product for the Rayart Pictures program which appeared last week in "Moving Picture World" is considered a record-breaking announcement for an Independent.

W. Ray Johnston, president of Rayart, stated to a representative of "Moving Picture World" that he has received numerous telephone calls and many letters complimenting Rayart on the initiative which prompted them to go in for such a big advertising smash on the Rayart product.

The entire 24-page section, including the editorial by Robert E. Welsh, editor of "Moving Picture World," is being reprinted and carried in "The Exhibitor," the regional trade paper in Philadelphia, and also in a number of other regional papers. Seven thousand copies are being mailed to as many theatres in all parts of the world.

Lessers' Confab in New York Discussed the Wright Novels

IRVING AND SOL LESSER, who recently held their annual Principal Pictures confab in New York, plan to make the 1925-26 season the outstanding one of their careers. Seven of Harold Bell Wright's novels are yet to be brought to the screen as Principal Pictures. Wright's publishers, Appleton & Company, sat in on the four-day confab and assured Lessers that hundreds of thousands of dollars would be expended to further popularize Wright's present fame as a novelist. McCall's Magazine officials also showed how Wright's name is being pushed all over the world, and how newspapers all over United States and Canada were being used to advertise the name of the writer of such past Principal successes as "The Mine With the Iron Door" and "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent," the latest of the pictures.

Plans concerning the seven were gone into, with special stress being given to the making of "The Winning of Barbara Worth," which is now undergoing producing. A budget was made covering this film and Sol Lesser showed many of the franchise holders, who were present, how a large sum of money was to be expended on this film. The entire cast had not as yet been engaged, and many of those engaged had not as yet signed the contracts, so no names were mentioned, although it is expected that Sam Wood will direct.

As far as the other six stories are concerned they will be made within the next two years, with probably two of them entering production during the 1925 season. As to the exact book to be filmed the confab left this to be decided upon as soon as "The Winning of Barbara Worth" was filmed and last returns on "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent" are known. A questionnaire will possibly be sent out the exhibitors later to ascertain the book that should naturally follow the one now being made. The scripts of all of them are in the hands of Principal's scenario department.

National Board of Review Recommends "Black Cyclone"

"A REMARKABLY interesting photoplay" of "exceptional" entertainment value is the report handed down by the General Committee of the National Board of Review after viewing Hal Roach's latest feature production for Pathe release, titled "Black Cyclone," and featuring Rex, the equine star of "King of Wild Horses."

With the publication of the General Committee's report comes the news that "Black Cyclone" has been definitely booked to open at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, May 17th. An elaborate presentation has been arranged for the world premiere of the Hal Roach feature at the Capitol.

Several weeks ago the special reviewing committee of the National Board of Review witnessed "Black Cyclone" at the Pathe Home-Office and were so favorably impressed by the production that they voted to have the picture screened before the General Committee, an unusual honor in itself.

The screening before the General Committee was followed by one of the most laudatory reports handed down within recent months by this disinterested body of film critics. Additional significance attaches to the report when it is remembered that this opinion is circulated in bulletin form throughout the country and is the medium of securing the support of civic, patriotic, religious, welfare, and fraternal organizations for the individual pictures recommended in the report.

In the opinion handed down in the "Special Report" of the General Committee, "Black Cyclone" was given the following ratings:

"Entertainment value, exceptional; educational value, unusual; artistic value, dramatic interest of the story, very strong; coherence of narrative, gripping; acting, remarkable for animals; photograph, excellent; technical handling, skillful and imaginative; moral effect, shows animal courage and fidelity of inspiring kind.

"General Comment: This is a remarkably interesting photoplay, with horses in a wild state on the range for its principal actors. It has thrill, love, adventure—all the qualities of intense dramatic action. Pictorially it is often superb. The picture has been selected by the National Board's Committee on exceptional photoplays for an appreciative review in the Committee's Bulletin 'Exceptional Photoplays.'"

English Exhibitors Use Short Subject Freely, Hammons Says

THAT the Short Subject is proving as indispensable to well balanced programs in England as it is in this country is the statement of Mr. E. W. Hammons, President of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., who has just returned from a six weeks' business trip to England and the continent.

While in London, Mr. Hammons was the guest at the debate of the Round Table. Mr. Thomas Ormiston, President of the C. E. A., spoke at some length of the value English Exhibitors are finding in American made Short Subjects in lending strength to their programs. He was followed by Major Gale, one of Britain's leading exhibitors, who recommended the diversity of Short Subjects to his British fellow exhibitors.

Mr. Hammons' address expounded his theory of over-long features vs. the well balanced, diversified program composed of drama, comedy and novelty subjects, urged his listeners to take notice of the number of times that the Short Subjects "saved the show," and outlined the methods by which the short comedies were exploited and advertised by American exhibitors.

Pat Dowling, representing the Christie Film Company, also spoke about the question of advertising the short film.

Balto Coming East

Educational's Film of Canine Hero Already Playing

Prints of the Educational Pictures Special, "Balto's Race to Nome" were shipped to all Educational exchanges last week and the picture has already completed a week's run at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles.

This two reel special was hailed as the big human interest event of the program by the newspaper reviewers, the critic on the Los Angeles Examiner saying in part:

"I do not know when I have seen anything more fascinating than the film that depicts the terror haunted, hardship-fraught journey across the trackless wastes. To miss this portion of the program will be to overlook a thrill that is more unusual than any ordinarily provided by entertainment, because of its vivid and powerful reality."

Balto and Bunnar Kasson, the heroic "musher," will soon be seen in the East. Present plans embrace a visit to Washington, D. C., where the giant sled driver and the heroic dog will be presented to President Coolidge, after which the pair will come to New York, where they will attend the unveiling of the bronze monument being erected in Central Park.

This monument will consist of a heroic bronze figure of Balto and on the stone base below, carved in relief, will be a representation of the entire dog team tugging at the sled, with the driver urging them on. The memorial is intended as a "striking figure pointing to humanity's gratitude to brutes that have helped mankind in great emergencies."

"Drusilla" Title Stands

Contrary to reports published last week, the executive heads of Film Booking Offices have come to the conclusion that the title of the Elizabeth Cooper novel, "Drusilla With a Million," the Associated Arts Corporation screenization of the story, is more fitting than "The Woman Accused," the title decided upon last week. The title, "Drusilla With a Million," therefore stands.

Government Will Co-Operate With Sills-First National Unit

Earl Hudson, head of First National's Eastern production units, announced today that the exterior scenes of Milton Sills' next starring picture, "The Come-Back," will be filmed in the lumber country surrounding Ottawa, Ontario, Canada.

Hudson also made it known that the Canadian government is co-operating with First National in the filming of this picture. The Motion Picture Bureau of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce has turned its laboratories and resources over to the Hudson units and will work with them throughout the making of the lumbering scenes. Raymond Peck is head of this bureau. His assistant, Frank Badgley, is already actively engaged with First National officials in laying plans for the shooting of the picture.

Frank Stanley of the Hudson units has been combing the Eastern section of Canada for several weeks seeking a location. Not until he reached the lumber district about 150 miles from Ottawa did he find what was wanted. He then arranged with the Canadian officials for their co-operation.

The picture calls for thrilling scenes in lumber-camps and in log drives and jams. These will be shot on the Ottawa, Gatineau and Beauchene Rivers in the heart of the biggest lumbering operations in the East. In a few days Stanley with Lambert Hillyer, who will direct the pictures, and Roy Carpenter, cameraman, will return to Ottawa and start filming scenes. Sills and the cast will follow shortly and will make their headquarters on the property of the Hawksbury Lumber Company in the Timiskaning country, 150 miles from Ottawa.

Metro Buys Stage Success

"When We Were Twenty-One," the stage success by Henry V. Esmond in which Nat Goodwin starred a number of years ago, has been purchased by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and added to the ambitious production program now being planned and executed at the Culver City studios. This work is a romantic comedy rich in plot, humor and characterization, and provides screen material of the best possible sort.

Prince of Wales in Africa In International Newsreel

THE first motion pictures of the Prince of Wales on his latest trip, which is taking him into the wilds of West Africa, are contained in the current issue of International Newreel and are being shown exclusively by International at leading theatres.

Everyone knows how popular the Prince was in the United States. In West Africa the dusky natives are mad about him. Dusky belles appear in their best grass frocks and overwhelm the heir to the British throne with their glances of admiration. Black chieftains are shown doing war dances in his honor, and going through the ancient rites of pledging loyalty to him. Young bucks dance with amazing agility and more pep than ever was displayed by civilized Africans, while the native jazz bands go through remarkable contortions in bringing entrancing strains from their weird instruments.

All through the series of unusual entertainment the young Prince shows his interest and gives every indication that he is having the time of his life. The pictures are particularly entertaining in that they show the Prince from the time of his departure from England on the Repulse to his arrival in Africa. Among the best of the pictures are those which show the Prince being entertained by the chiefs and belles at Gambia, Africa.

Other exclusive pictures in the current issue of International Newsreel show scenes attendant upon the election of Von Hindenberg as Germany's president. These pictures, made in Berlin, Hanover and other parts of Germany,

Billy Sullivan Starred in Rayart's "The Fear Fighter"

"THE FEAR FIGHTER," starring Billy Sullivan and produced by Harry J. Brown Productions under the direction of Albert Rogell, was received at the Rayart offices last week. In the cast with young Sullivan are Ruth Dwyer, Spike Robinson, Phil Salvadore and J. F. MacGowan. The new picture is said to be a speedy comedy drama. The second release of the Rayart series starring Sullivan, called "The Coat Getter," is also near completion at the Brown Studio in Hollywood.

Another picture received at the Rayart offices during the past week was "Double Fisted," second of the Harry Webb series starring Jack Perrin and released under the brand title of "Whirlwind Western." Prominent in the cast with Jack Perrin are Molly Malone, Mark Fenton, Winifred Landis, Martin Turner, and starlight, the beautiful white horse owned by Perrin. The next of this series will be "Starlight, the Untamed," in which Starlight will be the featured attraction.

The first three episodes of the Duke Werne Serial Production, "Secret Service Sanders," has also reached the New York office of Rayart. This stars Richard Holt and Ann Little. The first three episodes are crammed with action, not the least being the ending of the first episode which includes a fight which occurs first on the mast of a ship and later on the wings of a flying hydroplane in which the hero (Holt) is knocked off the plane to the ocean below. This scene is said to be one that makes the spectator sit up and take notice. The serial will be in fifteen episodes, released May first.

Metropolitan Critics Boost Chadwick's "Wizard of Oz"

THE local newspaper criticisms of Chadwick's "The Wizard of Oz," which ran two weeks at the B. S. Moss Colony Theatre in New York, have been unanimous in their enthusiasm for the most pretentious production of this independent producer.

George Gerhard of The Evening World says in part: "'The Wizard of Oz,' which is put out as a Chadwick picture, is one of the best comedies seen on Broadway in a long time. There's a bona fide laugh in nearly every scene, and most of them are of the howl variety. You can't afford to miss this picture."

"They shrieked uproariously at this speedy version of Frank Baum's quaint fantasy," says Dorothy Herzog in the Daily Mirror. "Larry Semon has made a highly entertaining picture. It's loaded with excitement, thrills, fun and a faint dash of romance. For clean cut, novel, splendid entertainment, don't miss Larry Semon in 'The Wizard of Oz.'"

F. W. M. Hall of the New York Times is equally enthusiastic: "Persons in the audience not only laughed till the tears came, but they roared until they coughed."

"Shrieks of delighted laughter greeted the picture," says Louella O. Parsons of the New York American. "I want to commend Larry Semon for his manner in picturizing the former musical comedy."

"Starting to tell you about it is much easier than finishing," says Harry Hershfield, the world famous cartoonist and humorist of The Evening Journal. "Too many marvelous details."

John McCormack, famous Irish tenor, his wife and daughter, Sheila, visited Thomas Meighan recently at the Paramount Long Island studio during the filming of Meighan's latest picture, "Old Home Week."

Long Island Theatre Takes F. B. O.'s Entire New Output

THE distinction of being the first exhibitor in the United States to contract for F. B. O.'s entire 1925-26 output of sixty-four productions, including twelve Gold Bond Specials, four super-special Fred Thomson Westerns, forty-eight special productions and the entire array of short subjects, goes to Irving Lesser, manager of the playhouse Theatre, Great Neck, Long Island.

A complete survey of the product available in the entire industry for the new season, in which F. B. O.'s imposing list of sixty-four productions stands out conspicuously as box-office winners, prompted Mr. Lesser to book the entire 1925-26 lineup.

The Gold Bond specials for which Mr Lesser has contracted are: "Drusilla With a Million," an Associated Arts Corporation production based on the famous novel by Elizabeth Cooper; "Parisian Nights," a melodrama of the Paris underworld, directed by Alfred Santell; "If Marriage Fails," C. Gardner Sullivan's society drama; "The Keeper of the Bees," the well known novel by the late Gene Stratton-Porter, now running serially in McCall's Magazine, which will be published in book form simultaneously with the release of the picture; "When His Love Grew Cold" and "A Poor Girl's Romance," two of the best known Laura Jean Libbey stories which F. B. O. recently purchased from the famous author's estate; "The Last Edition," Emory Johnson's newspaper story, and "Happiness," another Johnson production which will be made in Sweden with the cooperation of the Swedish government; "The Isle of Retribution," a best seller by Edison Marshall; "Flaming Waters," an action melodrama by E. Lloyd Sheldon; "The Midnight Flyer," a railroad melodrama, and "The Futurity Winner," a race track story.

Warner Bros. Next Picture

With activity on the 1925-26 program increasing weekly at the Warner Bros. studio, the next picture to go into production will be "The Golden Cocoon," the best seller by Ruth Cross, which will be directed by Millard Webb. This will be one of the Warner's big productions of the year calling for a number of large sets, which will be built on the Lasky ranch.

To Develop New Stars

Following its policy of developing its own stars Universal is now grooming two well-known screen favorites for stellar roles. They are Fred Humes and Edmund Cobb. These two are to be given their chance in two-reel Western plays. Cobb's first picture with Universal as a star is to be "A Two-Fisted Fighter." Humes' first starring vehicle has not yet been selected.

De Luxe to Handle "Wizard"

De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle, Washington, will distribute "The Wizard of Oz," Chadwick Picture Corporation's first production for 1925-26. The contract with De Luxe, which was closed this week, includes the following territory: Washington, Oregon, Montana, Northern Idaho and Alaska.

Aubrey's New Comedy

Jimmy Aubrey, who is fast coming to the fore as one of the most popular comedians on the screen, has this week completed "Home Scouts," a two-reel comedy replete with gags and laughs. "Home Scouts" will be released on June 15 on the F. B. O. program.

The line-up of all-star farceurs signed by Al. Christie for "Stop Flirting," the next big feature comedy to follow "Charley's Aunt" through Producers Distributing Corporation. Left to right are: Jack Duffy, Wanda Hawley, Jimmie Adams, John T. Murray and Hallam Cooley.

Berger Has Fort Lee Studio; Will Produce for Associated

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS announce that the Diamant Film Company of America, Inc., has opened an elaborate studio at Fort Lee, New Jersey, at which future productions will be made for their distribution.

This new studio was originally occupied by the Paragon Film Company and was recently opened under the supervision of Henri Diamant Berger, the well known French director, who has already produced one Associated Exhibitors' picture and who has contracted to make more. In addition to Mr. Berger, other producing units of Associated Exhibitors will make pictures on the Diamant lot.

Upon his arrival in America, he contracted to produce a picture for Associated Exhibitors. This production is now ready for release under the title of "Fifty Fifty," and features Hope Hampton, Lionel Barrymore and Louise Glaum.

The Diamant production plant has been made modern in every respect. New equipment was installed in the carpenter shops, new scenic lofts built and thousands of dollars spent in properties and in the costuming department. A large projection room has also been installed, as well as new quarters for film cutting. A large inclosed stage measuring 70 by 130 feet has had $25,000 in lighting apparatus added to its equipment. In addition to this a massive tank runs the full width of the studio.

J. W. Schleiff, former production manager of the Selznick Studios, was appointed as production manager. A. Dantes, assistant to Mr. Berger, brought here from France by the producer, is acting in the capacity of personal representative. Miss Marshall is in charge of the studio office affairs. The camera staff will operate under the direction of Alfred Orlieb.

The first production for Associated Exhibitors to be made by Henri Diamant Berger in his own studio is "Lovers' Island," a screen adaptation of the T. Howard Kelly story which recently appeared in the Smart Set Magazine. The production will carry a big cast headed by Hope Hampton, James Kirkwood, Louis Wolheim, Flora Le Breton, Ivan Linow, Gaby France, Flora Finch, Douglas Gilmore and Frank Raymond.

Don Marquis's "The Old Soak" To Be Produced by Universal

WITH the 1925-26 schedule all purchased and most of it in work, the Universal scenario scouts are preparing their plans already for 1927, a year and six months ahead. The first production bought for this program was announced this week. It is Don Marquis's Broadway play, "The Old Soak," which was purchased through the theatrical office of Arthur Hopkins, who made the original production.

A great deal of discussion has centered about this semi-serious play of the eminent newspaper columnists not only during the long run of the play but since it became an "on tour" attraction. The discussion has centered now upon the proper way to adapt the story to moving pictures. Almost every company has taken this valuable piece of property under consideration and it wasn't until a proper adaptation and a proper star had been selected that Carl Laemmle decided to pay the tremendous amount of money that the producers asked for the picture rights.

The star is already under contract. The terms of his theatrical contract, however, forbid the announcement of it until the end of the run of his successful play on Broadway. Inasmuch as Universal doesn't need to use the picture for a year, the contract seems to be equitable to both sides.

Scenes from the Principal picture made from Harold Bell Wright's "The Mine With the Iron Door," having in the cast Kenneth Harlan, Mary Carr and Rosemary Theby

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Conveniences

Walter Johnson, Champaign, Illinois, desires information of a sort which ought to be interesting to others, though I was not aware of the fact that there were still sections of the country so back-number that toilet conveniences were not a legal necessity in theatre projection rooms. Johnson says:

Dear Friend and Brother Richardson: Am coming to you for assistance and advice. Here is the dope: The Illinois State Federation of Labor is to honor this thriving city by holding its next meeting here, in September. At the last meeting of our local, No. 482 I. A., it was decided that this would be an opportune time to start a movement toward securing the passage of a bill in our state legislature compelling the installation of toilet facilities in theatre projection rooms.

Johnson Appointed

I was appointed the "goat" to get the "dope" concerning the best steps to be taken. Being informed that Cincinnati Local No. 165 was instrumental in the introduction of such a bill in the Ohio legislature, I wrote Brother Huelsman, Secretary, who immediately informed me that local 165 was not the "guilty party." He thought Dayton was the local which did it.

Well, instead of using time and stamps writing locals all over the country I made up my mind to first get into the right church and then hunt up my individual right pew afterward, so here am I, knocking at your gate, asking for the "right church." Any advice or information you can give us will, I am very sure, be appreciated by this local and in fact by all projectionists in the state of Illinois.

Knocking?

So you're knocking, are you, brother Johnson? Well, it's a friendly knock, so it's quite all right, and I guess I can help you. I don't myself happen to have a list of the various cities and states in which laws requiring toilet facilities have been enacted. Will projectionists and locals in states or cities where there is such a law be good enough to communicate with brother Johnson, whose address is 607 N. Elm Street, Champaign, Illinois?

However, I am in a position to give you what I believe will prove to be some very real aid in this matter, because it happens that one of the high officers of the Illinois State Federation of Labor is an old and very dear personal friend of mine. I am very certain that he will do anything possible, within reason, I ask him to—assuming of course that what I ask is basically right.

I shall communicate with him and ask that he meet your officers and give you all the aid possible when the convention meets. You may or may not hear from him before that. Probably you will.

How To Do It

As to the introduction of a bill in the legislature, why that should not be a difficult matter. I believe the State Federation attorneys can and will draft it for you, and certainly if the unions of the state and the State Federation of Labor support it vigorously it should pass. I do not believe there will be any serious opposition. There may have been a time when exhibitors, largely as a matter of principle, opposed anything and everything proposed by a union, but that time is passing. Exhibitors, as a whole, are very decent men. Once the inhumanity, not to say indecency, of compelling men to remain constantly in a room for hours without toilet facilities is laid before them intelligently, I don't believe any considerable number of them will oppose the proposed law, always provided it be drawn along reasonable lines.

It must be remembered, however, that at the time when there was no such requirement, many theatres were built in such a way that the installation of toilet facilities in the projection room now would be practically impossible, or if possible, then only at what would amount to a prohibitive cost.

Suggestions

In drafting the law may I suggest that the requirement for all future installations be absolute, but that the requirement for present installations be well mixed with common sense. I don't myself know exactly how that end of it ought to be handled—what the exact requirements ought to be, but I do know that usually, in the end, it pays to avoid the APPEARANCE of unreasonableness.

True, it was very unreasonable to have omitted so obvious a necessity as toilet facilities in the theatre projection room, law or no law, BUT two wrongs have never yet been added up with "right" as the result. If you now try to force the installation of toilet rooms or toilets under conditions where installation is practically impossible, or only possible at an altogether disproportionate expense, the net result will be that you will hand such as exhibitors as may wish to fight you a club of goodly size with which to rise up and swat you.

Many Abuses

There are many rank abuses in this workaday old world of ours—abuses which ought to be remedied IMMEDIATELY. The fact is, though, that remedying abuses which have grown up through a series of years—which are therefore "established" abuses if you please—is usually not completely done, bing! just like that. The complete remedy usually covers a considerable space of time.

Your demand for toilet facilities in the projection room is RIGHT and JUST, from any and every point of view. Go after it and GET IT, but let your demands be tempered with reason and common sense.

I would suggest that you have as many copies of the following made as there are projectionist I. A. locals, and mixed locals, and that one be sent to each for action, to be returned to your local and by it presented to the State Federation convention:

To the Illinois State Federation of Labor in Convention Assembled: Motion Picture Projectionists Local Union No. —, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., is on record as favoring the enactment of a law compelling the installation of toilet facilities in the projection rooms of all theatres hereafter erected in which motion pictures will be shown; also the installation of toilet facilities in all theatres now operating in which such installation may reasonably be made.

Question No. 281—Explain the relation of volts and amperes to horsepower.

Question No. 282—If you have one D. C. fifty-five volt arc taking fifty amperes through a rheostat, another arc pulling the same, and two stereopticon lamps each using fifteen amperes through rheostat, supply voltage 115. What is the total horse power consumed.

Question No. 283—Suppose you have a fifty-five volt, sixty ampere arc taking current from 110 volt A. C. supply through a Transverter, the efficiency of which is seventy four, what is the horsepower consumed?

Question No. 284—Insofar as concerns horsepower, what is the difference between ten amperes at 110 volts and 110 amperes at ten volts?

Question No. 285—We speak of the "voltage of the arc," or "voltage drop of the arc." Exactly what is meant by this?

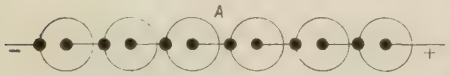
Question No. 251—By sketch show how you would connect wet or dry batteries to raise the voltage or the amperage. By sketch show how you would connect in order to raise both voltage and amperage.

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota; Harry Dobson, Toronto, Can.; H. C. Mallery, Castle Rock, Washington; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Illinois; H. C. Funston, Waco, Texas; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Massachusetts; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, New Hampshire; Chas. Armentrout, Mason City, Iowa; W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, California; H. E. Hurlbutt, Oshkosh, Wisconsin; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Frank Jones, Detroit, Michigan, and Wm. A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa, all answered this question satisfactorily.

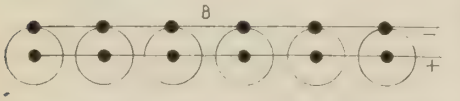
Bennewitz says:

You again use the term "batteries" in this question (I feel an apology is due. Like those who excuse the use of the term "operator" by saying it is force of habit, I must just say the same thing. I have been accustomed to speaking of a single cell dry battery as a "battery," which is technically incorrect. Apologies.—Editor), when I am sure you really mean "wet" or "dry" cells. I am answering the question by substituting "cells" for "batteries." (I might remark that the question would hold equally the same as to results, whether cells or batteries of cells were used.—Ed.)

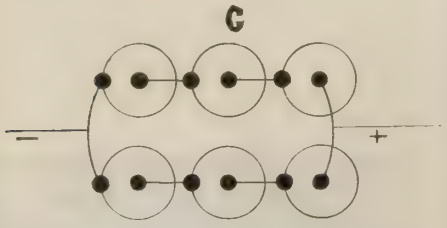
Sketch A shows a battery of six dry cells connected in series, which connection has the effect of raising the voltage to a value equal to the voltage of one cell multiplied by the number of cells so connected.



Sketch B shows a battery of six dry cells connected in multiple, which connection has the effect of raising the amperage to a value equal to the amperage of one cell multiplied by the number of cells so connected, the pressure remaining that of the voltage of a single cell.



Sketch C shows two batteries, of three cells each, connected in series, and the two batteries thus formed themselves connected in parallel or "multiple." This connection, known as the "Series—Parallel" or "Series—Mutiple" connection, raises both voltage and amperage. The total voltage will be that of the voltage of a single cell multiplied by the number of cells in either one of the batteries. The amperage output will be the amperage of one battery multiplied by the number of batteries for any number of them may be thus connected.



In a series—parallel connection it is necessary that the voltage of each cell be the same, and that an equal number of cells be placed in each battery used. If the voltage of one battery is stronger than that of another, then current will flow from the stronger to the weaker, and power will thus be wasted.

Fell puts it in this way:

There are three methods of connecting cells to form a battery, thus: they may be connected in "series," in "parallel" or in "series—parallel," the term "multiple" being merely another way of expressing the same thing meant by parallel.

A series connection consists in joining the positive pole of one cell to the negative pole of another. Its effect is to add the voltage of each cell thus connected to the total, so that four one-volt cells would give a total line voltage of four—six one-volt cells, six, etc., which, in theory, might be continued indefinitely.

To increase the total amperage production of a battery of cells, we use the parallel, or multiple (same thing) connection. This is effected by running one of the circuit wires from one side of whatever is to be operated by the battery and connecting it to the positive terminal of all cells. We then connect the negative terminal of all the cells to another wire and attach that wire to one side of the switch which operates the circuit. When thus connected the voltage of the entire battery is the same as the voltage of a single cell thereof, but the total amperage output is equal to the amperage output of a single cell multiplied by the total number of cells connected. There probably is no practical limit to the number of cells which might be thus connected.

To raise both the voltage and amperage of a battery the series parallel connection is used. In this connection two or more separate sets of cells are connected in series, an equal number of cells and cells of equal voltage being used in each battery thus formed. The batteries thus formed are then connected in parallel with each other.

In this connection the total resultant voltage will be equal to the voltage of each separate battery, and the total resultant amperage will be the amperage output of one cell multiplied by the number batteries employed.

Gosh, I just noticed that both Bennewitz and Fell stubbed their tootsies on that. I've corrected their answers, which I should not, but I can't spare time to do all this over again. They both said the amperage of a series parallel connection would be equal to the amperage of one cell multiplied by the total number of cells. Wake up, darn y'. And now I'll look through 'em all again and see how many slipped up on the same thing.

That was easy, for those two birds were the only ones except Hurlbutt who did more than just answer the question by sketch, so I'll just assume that they ALL made the same blunder, and thus save the faces of the only two who not only did what the question called for, but went further and explained the action resulting from the connections shown in their sketches.

Hurlbutt drew a double four-cell battery series parallel connection and said:

With this connection, if each single cell has a 1½ volt pressure, then the total voltage resulting will be 1½ x 6 equals six volts. If each cell gives twenty amperes, then the total amperage will be 20 x 2 equals 40 amperes, so that the resultant circuit will or should deliver 40 amperes at six volts. In this connection it is important that there be the same number of cells in each battery, and that these cells all be renewed at the same time. If there were, for instance, five cells in one battery and four in the other, then current would flow from the battery with the greater number to the one having the lesser number of cells until their line current output is equal. This would have the effect of reducing both voltage and amperage, and wasting power. The same effect would result if two cells were hooked into such a connection, one of them new and the other old. The new one will give off a pressure of say one volt, while the old one may be reduced to say half a volt. The result would be that the new cell would "charge" the old one until they both were equal, and thus the power of the new one is wasted, and the total power of the connection reduced. In the latter case the net result of the combination of the two cells would be a ¾ volt pressure for the two of them.

There, gentlemen, taking the three answers together I am sure you will all agree that it gives a most excellent, and a very clear understanding of the operation of such connections. I believe such replies cannot but add to the knowledge of even the best men, if only by bringing back to mind forgotten details.

Question No. 252—Tell us what the term "Ampere" means—what it really represents. Explain what is meant by "Ampere Hour," by "Kilowatt Hour."

Jones says:

An ampere is the practical unit of electrical current flow. It is the measure of the current flow produced by the pressure of one volt acting against a resistance of one ohm.

An ampere hour is the term used to describe the fact that one ampere has flowed through a circuit for a period of one hour.

A kilowatt hour is a term used to describe the power represented by one thousand (1,000) watts of energy used for a period of one hour.

Hanover says:

The ampere is the unit of meaurement used to indicate the volume or quantity of electric current flowing through an electric conductor, exactly as the gallon is used to measure the volume or quantity of water flowing through a pipe. Specifically one ampere is that quantity or volume which one volt pressure will cause to flow through one ohm of resistance, or which will deposit .005084 grains of copper per second. It is the unit rate of flow.

Ampere hours is the term used to measure, or indicate the quantity of current flowing over or through an electric circuit in one hour. One ampere hour means that one ampere of current has flowed continuously for a period of one hour. Amperes times hours equals ampere hours.

Kilowatt Hour is the term used to indicate or denote the fact that one thousand watts of electric energy have been used continuously for a period of one hour. Watts divided by 1,000, multiplied by number of hours of use, equals kilowatt hours as: 6,000 watts have been used continuously for a period of five and one half hours, therefore 6,000 divided by 1,000 equals 6, which multiplied by 5½ equals 33 kilowatt hours.

Question No. 253—If a fifty watt lamp burns for a period of ten hours, current 11 cents per K. W. hour, how much current has the lamp consumed, as measured in money?

Hurlbutt says:

$\frac{500}{1000} \times .11 = \frac{11}{2} = .05\frac{1}{2}$ of a dollar, or 5½ cents.

Whitt says:

500 watts equals .500 K. W., and eleven cents times .500 K. W. equals 5.5 cents.

Hanover says:

50 watts used for ten hours equals 500 watts, or one-half a kilowatt. Since the price per K. W. is 11 cents, of course half a K. W. would cost half of 11 cents, which is 5½ cents.

The rest all arrive at the same conclusion, so I guess it must be pretty nearly correct, except that two or three wrote out the answer as .05½ cents, which same they will do well to examine closely. It wouldn't even buy one corner of an all-day sucker. What they meant is all right enough, but it illustrates how very easy it is to make a serious mistake. If expressed thus it should be $0.05½. As it is it is 5½ hundredths of one cent.

Question No. 254—What is an ammeter? A voltmeter? Show how each is connected.

A Great Achievement of Projection Engineering

THE Peerless Reflector Arc Lamp has increased the screen brilliancy from two to three times in hundreds of theatres in every part of this country. Theatres that required 100 amperes and more are now securing vastly greater screen illumination with Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps, using but 25 amperes and less. And this doubled illumination is obtained at less than one-third previous current and carbon costs.

Into the Peerless Reflector Arc Lamp have been built the most advanced principles of optics and mechanical design. Its rugged and massive construction insures absolute reliability of performance and durability.

Built by a factory engaged for years in the construction of precision projection equipment, the Peerless lamp has established a new high standard for reflector arc lamps.

Peerless Lamps Buy Themselves

SAVINGS of $1000 to $2000 have been effected per year by hundreds of theatres using Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps. This equipment will cut your current and carbon cost up to seventy-five per cent.

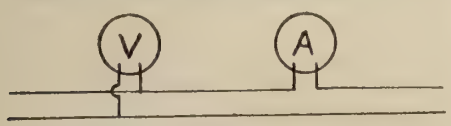
Fell says:

An ammeter is a device for measuring the number of amperes of current flowing through an electric circuit, showing same by means of a direct reading on a scale. It is the commercial form of galvanometer in which the reflections, or twistings of a magnetic needle are valued in amperes.

The voltmeter is an instrument having high resistance, used for measuring the difference of potential in volts. It is essentially a current meter, but is so calibrated that it does not record the current flow as an ammeter, but the E. M. F. which produces the current. When the wire of the ammeter is large enough to carry the entire current of the circuit, the instrument is connected into one side of the circuit in series therewith, so that the entire current of the circuit passes through the instrument. If, however, the wire of the instrument is small, then it is connected into one side of the circuit in parallel with a shunt of low resistance. This latter is always used for ammeters measuring current on circuits carrying heavy amperage, since otherwise the coil of the the instrument would be of very heavy wire, and the instrument correspondingly heavy and bulky.

The voltmeter is connected into the circuit, in parallel therewith, at any point at which it is desired to measure the voltage.



I am using the drawing of Brother Bennewitz, because of the fact that Friend Fell, inadvertently I think, made a serious error in his own.

What Fell means by saying the voltmeter is essentially a current meter is that a small current does flow through its high resistance, and it is through this current flow that it registers the voltage, or pressure. The fact is that change in pressure changes the volume of the slight flow of current through the instrument, and this change in amperage is what is read as "volts," because the instrument is calibraetd to mean that a certain change in current flow through it means that the pressure has changed so many volts. There, that may not be very clearly put, but I guess you'll get the idea.

Question No. 255—What is an electric arc?

This question brought out a queer mixture of right and wrong. Many who I am sure have the correct idea either were unable to state these ideas clearly and correctly, or else they were mostly right, but a bit mixed on certain points.

Fell, Bennewitz, Dobson, Funston, Cooley and Hanover all gave especially good answers, but I believe you will all agree that the following, by Wallace, is about as perfect, all things considered, as we could possibly look for, especially in so far as has to do with the starting of the arc:

When speaking of the electric arc, as used for motion picture projection purposes, immediately there comes to mind what we see taking place between the two carbon tips when we look through the colored glass in the lamphouse door. Let us, so to speak, "dissect" the arc, and examine into its make-up.

We know that when the switch is closed, and the carbons thus "charged," either through series or multiple wiring of the two lamps, and we bring the carbon tips into contact and immediately separate them, what amounts to a metallic circuit has first been made and then broken. The result will be exactly the same as though a current-carrying wire were cut in two and then the bare ends touched together. A "spark" will be produced, and if the E. M. F. be strong enough the current will attempt to jump from one wire end to the other over a short air gap. But there is nothing between the two wire ends to maintain such a spark, which melts some of the wire, thus almost instantly increasing the gap beyond the capacity of the available pressure to force the current across an air space, and the current flow ceases.

This brings us back to the carbon tips of our arc lamp. When they are brought together, an electric circuit is established and current starts to flow. When they are broken, just as in the case of the wire ends, a spark results, and carbon is instantly heated to incandescence, and not melted but "volatized," which means that it is turned into gas. And that gas is the secret of the electric arc, because it forms a high resistance electric conductor between the two carbon tips, over which the current flows, and thus the arc is maintained, even though the carbon separation be considerable. The resistance, however, increases as the separation between the carbon tips becomes greater, until finally, if the separation be too great, the arc will "break" because resistance becomes too great for the pressure (voltage) to force the current against it.

We know that in ordinary electric circuits where high resistance is encountered, heat is produced, and we find no difficulty in realizing the fact that when fifty-five to sixty volts forces fifty, sixty or more amperes across a high resistance conductor such as the vapor stream of an electric arc, high temperature will result.

The tiny spark first produced is the result of the high resistance of the very short air gap. This heat starts volatization and establishes the conductor, without which the arc would break almost instantly.

The appearance of the arc is that it has a clearer gap when viewed from behind, where apparently the current is being forced from the upper, or positive (I of course speak of the ordinary D. C. arc), carbon to the lower, or negative, carbon, and rises at the side (front) of the arc nearest the collector lens in the form of a bow-shaped luminous vapor.

In so far as concerns light production, the most important part is, of course, the "crater" which forms on the positive carbon tip where D. C. is used, or on both carbon tips if it be an A. C. arc. The surface, or "floor" of this crater reaches the temperature of more than 6,200 degrees Fahr. (3,427 Cent.), and the light given forth depends for its intensity and quantity upon this temperature and the total area of the crater. It usually averages about 130 to 160 candle power per square millimeter crater area.

The electric arc is the source of the most brilliant light mankind has yet been able to produce. There you are, Mr. Richardson. I realize that my answer is far from complete, but too much space would be required were we to undertake a complete survey of the subject. By gosh, I will say I know a few more things about it now than I did when I started "using my bean" enough to be able to put what little I have down on paper.

Gentlemen, in some ways I regard this as one of the most interesting and best answers yet received to any question in this series, and there have been some mighty good ones, too. I have read a lot of dissertations on the electric arc, some of them by very eminent men, too, but this effort of Brother Wallace is the most clear and thoroughly understandable description of an arc I personally ever looked at. What do YOU think about it?

Woods Back

Cecil Woods, who went to China some two years ago as Supervisor of Projection for a corporation proposing to install many motion picture theatres in the land of China, has returned. He was tendered a reception by the American Projection Society upon his arrival. Mr. Woods has doubtless had an exceedingly interesting experience, but one which I think I would be pretty well satisfied to get along without. Somehow I always had the idea that, so far as I was concerned, China was the property of Mr. and Mrs. Chinaman, and that they had the sole right and title to it.

Incidentally before brother Woods left he held his right fist up in the peaceful summer air and swore a mighty swear that he would write and tell the thousands of readers of this department all about it. Cecil may be a man of his word, but he certainly has one frightfully poor memory, because the silence in general direction of China has been as dense as is the mind of one who insists that he is only the attendant of a machine—a "machine operator," and that is some dense, if you ask me!

Insufficient Light

W. R. Fegard, Old Home Theatre, Six Mile Run, Pa., has the following to say, and says it:

Am operating a theatre in my town which is of very small population. I don't seem able to get a good light on the screen. Have a Power Six A Projector, lamphouse equipped with plano convex and parabolic condenser. Lens 4½. Projection distance about 75 feet. A 12 x 16 foot picture. Small size lens.

If I would purchase a Cinephor condenser would I get a better light on my screen? The pictures seem to hurt the eyes. It does not seem to be bright enough. Have a Bead screen. Have a Bluebook of Projection, but am very dumb on projection matters. Have tried the instructions in the Bluebook, but cannot seem to get a good bright picture.

There are some things not sufficiently clear, friend Fegard. You said "4½ lens," which means nothing at all by itself. It presumably refers to the diameter of the condenser, which I of course already knew to be 4½ inches. You have merely said that you have a "small lens," which really tells me very little. You should have measured the diameter of the lens and given me the actual figures.

I am NOT roasting you, but calling attention to the necessity for sending carefully prepared, detailed information. It is not sufficient to say "it is about so and so." You must say exactly what it is, so far as possible.

I am not certain, but think your whole trouble is due to a defect in the apparatus. Write to the Precision Machine Company, 317 West 34th Street, New York City, describing your trouble. Mark your letter "Attention Mr. Greene," Sales Manager. I think they will be able to fix things up for you.

I do not know whether your screen is suited to your theatre or not. Send me a to-scale floor plan of theatre—length, width, etc., and I can then tell you.

To Think About

A few days ago I happened in at the Power Company to look over their "Boneyard," or "Morgue," which same is a collection of old projector mechanisms covering more than twenty-five years. Boy, I nearly had heart failure, and gave General Sales Manager Griffin a good jawing for allowing that bunch of very genuine relics to sleep in darkness and dust all these years. I even gave President Burns a good scolding, and made him very solemnly promise that one of each would be cleaned thoroughly, put into good shape and placed on exhibition in his office. I even secured his consent to, under conditions, loan some of them of which there were duplicates, to the American Projection Society.

Gosh! You should have seen Griffin and I when we got through rooting around in that mess covered with the accumulation of years of dust. We looked like chimney sweeps on very active duty.

But all that is a bit beside the question of what I started out to discuss. On the wall of Advertising Manager McGuire's office I found a calender page tacked up, which I immediately eloped with, for on it was the following:

"When you think you are one 'hell of a fellow,' and proceed to tell every one who will listen to the recital all about it, there are always plenty of men, women and even children who will immediately proceed to echo your own words of praise and tell you what a 'hell of a fellow' you are, pat you on the back and nearly shake your hand off."

Take it from me, though, you will do exceedingly well not to pay the least bit of attention to the back patters. The chap who hands you one swift kick right smack on the geographical center of the bosom of your knickerbockers, when you need it, or even when you don't need it, is the one who keeps your shoulders pressed strongly against the wheel of progress, and is, perhaps unconsciously or even unwillingly, your best friend and your most valuable acquaintance.

There, gentlemen, that is quite some considerable bundle of TRUTH. I have printed it because it is good for all of us to think over, and anyhow it belongs in the projection department because a kick is projection, and—there you are and here it is.

Seriously, however, the above has a direct application in my work in this department. It not infrequently happens that I print words which will pat some one's back and make ME a lot of friends, OR I can DO MY DUTY and print a "swift swat" which will do a lot of good, BUT make a lot of people sore at Richardson. Unfortunately the "swift kicks" must usually be delivered against the persons of men who are used to back patters, and NOT used to hearing unpleasant TRUTHS. Under that condition the truth "kick" inflicts a very painful pain, and they curse Richardson in language which no minister of the gospel would approve of.

Had I turned myself and this department into a "yes man" years ago, I venture the assertion that I would right now be immensely popular with every projectionist and machine attendant (operator) in all this broad land today. I would have just exactly no enemies at all; also I would have accomplished very little good. I WOULD FAR RATHER HAVE THE ENMITY OF THOSE MEN WHOM I HAVE OFFENDED BY PLAIN SPOKEN TRUTH, AND HAVE THE FEELING THAT I HAVE DONE MY DUTY, AS I HAVE SEEN IT—DONE RIGHT AS I HAVE UNDERSTOOD IT—THAN TO HAVE THEIR FRIENDSHIP AT THE EXPENSE OF FEELING THAT I HAD BEEN FALSE TO MY TRUST.

I like friendship. It is much nicer than having enemies, BUT friendship bought at the expense of cowardice is "not so good," and far more often than any of you imagine I am confronted, point blank, with that very proposition.

I feel now, and have always felt that the really worth while men of the profession are my friends, even though they may not always agree with what I do, sometimes because they do not know everything behind the reasons I had for some certain action. I feel that, while I have made many errors, still I have ALWAYS done my plain duty, as I have seen it. I have tried to hew to the line, even though the chips might often fall on the toes of men whom I deeply regretted the necessity for hurting.

There is one chap who does get my angora, though, and that is the fellow who very well knows he is wrong, and sometimes damnably wrong too, but who bitterly resents being publicly told of it, though "publicly told" is the only method of telling to which he will pay the slightest attention. He just plain demands the "right" to proceed along wrong lines without interference, and here is what hurts him most: He can "handle" most folks, in one way or another, but he just plain can't "handle" or control that "!?!? Richardson, and because of that fact he is exceedingly wroth.

Oh well, he will get over it, or if he don't he don't, and it won't much matter anyhow, so let's stop moralizing and get busy.

The cost of not cooling your house

Even with the high price of coal, you would never think of running your house in winter without heat, would you?

To heat your theatre costs less than not to heat it. In other words, comfort pays you better than discomfort.

Now, candidly, isn't that exactly the way you ought to look at the matter of cooling during hot weather?

Real comfort will make more money for you than it costs—in summer as well as in winter.

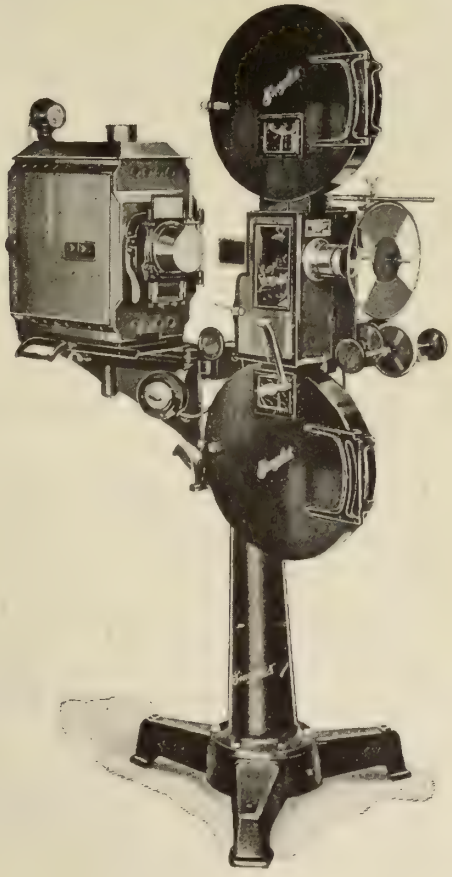
The

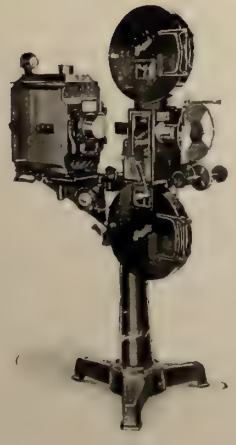
Simplex PROJECTOR



90% of the Simplex Machines sold are still in use

For

Incandescent Projection



The Simplex Incandescent lamp projector, with Cinephor Condenser mount, makes all the advantages of incandescent projection available at a minimum cost.

This new projection equipment operating the 900 watt, 30 volt. Mazda Lamp is adaptable to all Simplex installations.

The condenser mount and exclusive patented slide carrier device makes it possible to project stereopticon slides in the same manner as with the carbon arc lamp.

The Simplex incandescent projection equipment is simple to operate. When properly adjusted it gives a clear, steady light of high intensity. It greatly improves the presentation of the picture on the screen and it effects a saving of from 25% to 75% in your electric service bill. It pays for itself in a short time.

Simplex engineers will gladly advise any theatre owner or projectionist on the requirements of his theatre and on the cost of installing and operating incandescent projection.

A Simplex Insures Best Projection

From Pennsylvania

Al Profughi, City Theatre, Dixonville, Pa., writes this chatty letter:

Dear Mr. Richardson: You are a good scout and I'm going to tell you what I think of you and your work. (Gee! Guess I'm in for a roasting now, what?—Ed.) But first let me give myself an introduction. I am projectionist at the City Theatre, this town, though I'm wondering if I really should call myself by that title—yet. Have had only two years' experience, but it's the kind of experience which counts. Not a day passes over my head that I don't learn something new. Have been studying your Bluebook for three months and, believe me, there is nothing better under the sun.

Probably you wonder why I read the projection department and don't join the Bluebook School. I will explain. I really ought to but I'm too lazy! All I'm doing now is taking a course in electricity, working in the mines every week day from 7 to 4, projecting pictures at the theatre from 7 to 11 each night and managing to spend thirty minutes every day with the Bluebook. I would like to send answers to the Bluebook School questions, but you see where one does so little, one becomes lazy! (Your apology is accepted, Brother. Just to keep your brain from getting rusty you might study architecture, or something like that, during meals.—Ed.)

The projectors I am using are old type Powers Six A. They are relics, all right, but just the same I wouldn't trade them for a lot of other kinds I've seen. Don't laugh when I tell you I can and do put on a nearly perfect show with them, and I'm real proud of it, too, by heck!

Change-over signals? I don't needum! I am ALWAYS at the projector, and when the time comes that I can't make my change-over without a signal I'll make application to an old ladies' home for admission. Also I'm very certain that the good screen results are NOT altogether due to the merit of the projector, and that if I were not right there on friend job all the time the results would often be "not so good."

But what I mostly wanted to tell you is that our Department is the best thing I've ever read in ANY magazine. I am one who don't think of Richardson as an "old grouch" or a "guy." I fully realize the extent of the good work you are accomplishing for the industry and the profession, AND the hard battles you've often had to fight all alone. I've read it between the lines many times. I congratulate you and Moving Picture World. A bit of encouragement occasionally will help both to keep the fight up, and some day some one will profit by it all.

So keep going, Old Timer. Give the boys the razz when they need it. Maintain the excellent sense of humor I see you have, for after all there's nothing better in all this world than a good, hearty laugh once in a while.

The theatre here is of the old type, where kids empty their facial orifice upon the floor upon occasion, and yell at the summit of the capacity of their lungs and vocal cords for Tom Mix or Jack Hoxie to "eat 'em up!" At present my Dad, who owns the theatre, doesn't find it so good, because of work being slack.

Recently I had the pleasure of visiting a fine new theatre not far from here. I visited the "Booth," which is all it is, in size at least. The equipment itself is the "berries," but as to the room (BOOTH), why, the subways at rush hour would seem like the "great open spaces." It is a one-projector room into which two beautiful Powers 6B projectors have literally been JAMMED. The chap in charge also rewinds his films in it, and on an open rewinder at that.

Our town is not so large as that one, and our theatre is neither so large nor half so beautiful, BUT just the same the patrons of it don't have to risk their lives through an alarm of fire and a stampede every time they see a show in it. Also and moreover a theatre near here which cost (they brag about it too) two hundred thousand dollars has so located its projection room that they have the top of the screen leaning back.

Remember, this is only a friendly letter between us two. Don't publish it, because the boys would laugh their heads off at the way it's written. Some time I'm coming up to New York and I'm going to see you. Meanwhile just keep on serving the profession. Sorry to have mis-spelled so many words, but I'm an ign'runt ole cuss.

Lettem laugh! Didn't you say a big laugh was the best thing in life? Well, I agree with you, and (sh-h-h-h, keep it dark) I've been writing for many years, and at last have arrived at the point where I get fully nine words out of every ten spelled right, although the chap who corrects my stuff says I'm stretching things—that the "ten" should be five.

Anyhow, I re-write practically all letters received, so the mis-spelled words will be mine. Some day I'm going to lay off a week and invent a typewriter (Machine, I mean) which'll spell right, and then I'll quit work 'n join the idul rich, by geminy!

Seriously, however, your criticisms of those other theatres show that you observe understandingly. The man who builds a new theatre and puts in a little, sawed-off, cramped projection room, or so locates it that the top of the screen must be tilted back in order to get rid of distortion, needs to have his nose rubbed in the matter contained on pages 253 to 258, inclusive. It is on a par with building a beautiful automobile and equipping it with a threshing machine engine.

If the old Powers projectors are kept in good repair they can be made to give excellent results, but the fact remains that they cannot get those results as efficiently, or on the whole as well as will up-to-date projectors, hence it would be "good business" to replace them. It is very much to your credit that you have pride in the excellence of your work. NO MAN WHO HAS NOT A REAL PRIDE IN THE EXCELLENCE OF THE RESULTS HE PLACES ON THE SCREEN, and upon placing them efficiently, can possibly be a real projectionist in the best and highest meaning of that term.

I shall of course be glad to see you, but it will be necessary that you write a couple of weeks before your visit, so that a definite appointment may be made, or very likely it would not be possible to see you. For one thing, I stay up in Connecticut all summer, only visiting the city once a week, or maybe only once in two weeks. Many thanks for your kind words concerning the Bluebook and department.

What It Covers

Recently I have had several inquiries from exhibitors in various sections of the country as to just what a "Film Board of Trade" really is, and what it is supposed to do; also the various places these organizations are located.

Answering briefly, without going into all the many details, a film Board of Trade is a non-profiting organization formed by the various film distributors (exchanges) in any film distributing center. It is for the purposes of securing, so far as is possible, co-operation and co-ordination between the various exchanges and the various exhibitors and projectionists using film.

Here in New York City there is a sort of central organization maintained, presumably by a small contribution for each individual Film Board of Trade, which makes suggestions and exercises, as I understand it, a general supervision over the work of the individual boards, to prevent possible friction between them. Charles C. Pettijohn is its Chief Counsel and Gabriel L. Hess its General Attorney. The office of the New York Central organization is at 469 Fifth Avenue.

Individual Boards of Trade are located at Albany, New York; Atlanta, Georgia; Boston, Mass.; Buffalo, New York; Butte, Montana; Charlotte, North Carolina; Chicago, Illinois; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Dallas, Texas; Denver, Colorado; Des Moines, Iowa; Detroit, Michigan; Indianapolis, Indiana; Kansas City, Missouri; Los Angeles, California; Memphis, Tennessee; Little Rock, Arkansas; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Minneapolis, Minnesota; New Haven, Connecticut; New Orleans, Louisiana; New York City; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Ohama, Nebraska; Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Portland, Oregon; St. Louis, Missouri; Salt Lake City, Utah; San Francisco, California; Seattle, Oregon, and Washington, D. C.

The work of the Boards of Trade cannot but be beneficial. They are for the most part making an earnest effort to stop the senseless abuses to which film is subjected. They have already made substantial progress in that direction.

This department has been consulted by the Central organization and has made certain suggestions it believes to have practical value. Those suggestions are, I understand, either being put into operation, or soon will be.

Good photography plays no small part in making a picture popular. It has a definite box office value.

VIEWS OF THE EVERETT THEATRE, EVERETT, WASHINGTON
(Left) rest room with alcove; (center) projection room; (right) interior looking from stage.

Everett Theatre, Everett, Washington, a Motion Picture House of Beauty

IF there was ever a new theatre built with the safety element emphasized, it is the new Everett, opened recently in Everett, Wash. The new house replaces one that was completely razed by fire a year ago, on a site 70 by 110 feet, on Colby Avenue between Hewitt and Wall Streets. The new house cost a quarter million dollars and is considered one of the most beautiful on the entire coast.

There is very little combustible material in the entire place. Steel and concrete form the construction, faced with cream brick and ornamental terracotta, in a simplicity of architecture that is rich and dignified. Ornamental onyx and marble have been used for both exterior and interior trim in base boards, marble wall and balustrades in ramp, as supporting ornamental pillars in the auditorium, and flower gardens. All floors are of concrete, with the exception of the stage, which is fitted with a maple dancing floor for vaudeville and legitimate attractions. Handsome foyer doors, ornamental woodwork around box office and roadshow ticket office, etc., are of heavily veneered Philippine mahogany, adding to the additional lighting.

Walls of the main auditorium are of a soft cream, enhanced by murals of soft pastel shades hilighted with gold. The balcony extends well forward to the front of the house, and is supported by a huge seventeen ton steel girder, sunk 25 feet below the auditorium. This eliminates posts. There are only two of these, inconspicuously placed in the rear, at the side aisle.

The bottom of the balcony is a good height, and there is no sense of being closed in by a low ceiling. It is beamed with four broad beams, curved upward slightly between and is studded with five softly lighted indirect bowls. Across the balcony front five floodlights have been installed, with ornamental plaster work medallions and a polychrome border beneath. These are used for stage attractions to give additional lighting.

The auditorium is divided by two side aisles, curved slightly toward the front, giving every seat in the house the advantage of an unobstructed and undistorted view. The seats are one of the most important features of the house. Built especially by the Heywood-Wakefield company through B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle, they were the first shipment into this territory of the spring to the edge seat. Twelve springs have been used in each seat, and all seats in the house are of the same quality, the loge chairs having additional comfort with fifty springs and more elaborate upholstery. The seats are a silver gray monogrammed standards, upholstered in blue leather, with backs of gray and blue etched velour. Another point of interest here was the desire of the management to provide the utmost of comfort for patrons. Seating capacity was sacrificed to roominess. Seats are set on concrete slabs thirty-two and thirty-three inches apart, giving but 1,200 seats to a house that could have seated many more.

Lighting of the Everett is another achievement. All lights are on dimmers controlled both from the booth and stage. The most effective lighting is through the huge ornamental polychrome wreath in the ceiling. All lights are concealed, and many marvelous effects are archieved, flushing and fading in color harmonies that never fail to enthuse the audience.

A handsome proscenium opening 28 feet wide and 24 feet high, frames the stage which has dimensions 68 feet by 30 feet. The day curtain is a rich blue velour, hanging in rich folds, beneath a handsome blue lambrequin, embroidered in garland effect in gold, with the gold E and a gold fringe. The curtain draws back at the sides, revealing, during the showing of pictures, a second setting in light colored silk bordered in black, framing in to the screen.

Rest rooms and main lounge are on the mezzanine floor, reached either by a broad stairway to the left or a handsome marble balustered ramp to the right. The main lounge has somewhat the effect of a series of rooms opening from each other, as it is arched into wide doorways.

Ladies' rest room is entered through a door to the right, just beyond the entrance from the ramp. It is daintily furnished in ivory wicker with cretonne upholstery, basket wall mirrors, and gray, rose bordered carpet. The men's room is at the head of the stairway to the left.

Projection booth stands at the head of the main auditorium and is entered from a door opening on the aisle. It is fireproof and contains the very latest in up-to-date equipment of all kinds. Two of the latest type Simplex machines furnish flawless projection Brenckert spot, dissolving stereopticon, effect machine, full controls for lights and curtain are arranged for the greatest comfort of the operator.

A word about the exterior of the building. It is dignified and plain, broken by five groups of French windows. The center group rises to a high arched window, the top of which is ornamented with stained glass. A handsome marquise ten feet in width extends the full width of the building. At the extreme right a roadshow ticket office has been provided. Beneath the marquise, white glazed brick has been used for the front. This is broken up by three bulletin boards, backed with sheet cork, set flush with the wall surface. Two are 3 by 4 feet, the third 8 by 10. The main box office, equipped with automaticket machines, is of marble and onyx with mahogany woodwork. It sets directly to the right of the three large double entrance doors which are set in at an angle. These doors are fitted with kick plates of brass, and are of handsome mahogany, the panels being fitted with blue velour gold bordered and monogrammed strips. Gold edged blue velour festoons further ornament the box office interior.

New Arc Lamp

The American Reflecting Arc Corporation, of Boston, manufacturers of the American Reflecting Arc Lamp, and the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company, of Chicago, manufacturers of the Motiograph De Luxe Projector, announce that by reason of recently completed arrangements the engineering departments of both organizations are now preparing for production a newly designed reflecting arc lamp, in which will be incorporated all of the advanced ideas of this type of motion picture illuminant.

The new Reflecting Arc Lamp will be manufactured in the plant of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company.

"I was told the other day that some 6,000 theatres in the nation use serials regularly. I'd thought the number was much smaller. So I went to find out why and saw 'Sunken Silver,' the new Patheserial, and now I know the answer.

" 'Sunken Silver' is a good serial. It's got a good story, by Albert Payson Terhune; a good cast headed by Allene Ray and Walter Miller and it's well made. The first two episodes so impressed me that I'm going to watch for it at a convenient theatre and follow it throughout its length. I DIDN'T KNOW THEY WERE MAKING THEM SO GOOD."

RICHARD DIX

TODAY Dix means dough to you. The fans watch for his pictures and flock to see them. A clean boy with the face and body of a hero and the gay soul of a comedian—Dix is exactly the type American audiences love.

From leading roles Dix recently graduated to stardom by public demand. Already he's given you three outstanding starring successes—"Manhattan," "A Man Must Live" and "Too Many Kisses." Now comes "The Shock Punch," the best of the lot! A cyclonic comedy in which Dix has lightning in his fists and laughter in his heart. "Dix is delightful—absolutely himself. We cheerfully recommend 'The Shock Punch,'" says the New York Herald Tribune.

You can assure your people of a continued supply of corking Dix pictures. In the Greater Forty he appears in four: as the hero of the super-special, "The Ten Commandments"; as the college-bred Indian brave in another epic, Zane Grey's "The Vanishing American," and in two big starring comedies—"The Lucky Devil" ("California or Bust") and "Womanhandled."

Richard Dix is a big box-office bet for you now; and he's growing bigger by the minute!

This is the 3rd Ad. I'm committing, and I must say, as far as the first one was conceived like the guy which dropped the light in the gas tank. I got results! Several People call me up every day telling me they read my Ad. for "The Pacemakers," and urging me to Abandon Ad. writing and hurry back to other Types of Fiction.

You can Twenty-four Sheet this Fact to the slant-eyed world, Brothers, "The Pacemakers" is going to be more of a riot than a Riot itself! They will be better than "Fighting Blood," if such a thing is possible, and funnier than "The Telephone Girl," though I know such a statement challenges belief!

I'll say this baby, Mons. Wesley Ruggles, directs a wicked picture! He keeps Action in one Eye and a Great Cast in the other; and believe me, with that Cast in his eye, he makes Ben Turpin look like an Amateur Squinter! George O'Hara, Alberta Vaughn, Al Cooke, Kit Guard and Stanley Taylor; laugh that layout off!

I wrote the stories myself, but even that hasn't stopped "The Pacemakers" from being two-reel knockouts!

WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

On The Ground

MILWAUKEE—Well, here we are on the ground. To be fair with all concerned, we should tell the date and the hour at which we are writing. It is Wednesday. The hour is along towards midnight.

What has happened?

If we could answer that at this hour we would be more a seer than an editor.

In all fairness we should not attempt to write an editorial at this hour. It is taking the place of the dramatic critic who writes his review after seeing the prologue. It should not be done. We have seen the prologue. To us it is very interesting. We think they are getting somewhere. But we can meet two men in the lobby of the Hotel Wisconsin and get two opinions on that point. The first man will say "Oh, shucks, just another convention." The next man will say "Isn't it wonderful?"

We cannot argue with either man because we don't know what tomorrow will say nor what the next month will say. And it is the tomorrows that will give the answer to Milwaukee—not the todays of speechmaking and cheers.

WE have said that we are impressed. We are. We are impressed because they are talking play dates and playing time and the facts that make the picture business.

But at this hour we cannot go any further than to say that they are "talking" about play dates. Tomorrow or next month—we think probably tomorrow—will tell whether this talk has been translated into action.

And all the talk and pledge cards in the world won't make a poor independent picture a box-office attraction, nor on the other hand give the independent maker of box-office pictures a chance to live. Action will. Perhaps before we leave Milwaukee we will have seen the first step towards that action. If we haven't—then it is a long time till the next convention.

IT looks good. When Sydney Cohen many years ago tried to tell folks that there was a battle in the offing he had to talk to a few and those few were principally exhibitors. This year he is talking to producers as well as exhibitors. That is half of the battle. That is accomplishment. That is the fruit of many years of organization work. Whether or not they go any place after Milwaukee the record must contain the fact that they did get to Milwaukee with colors flying.

Something else for the record. There has been no talk and no worry here about that organization-wrecking problem—who is going to be president? There has been no talk of harmony—but there is harmony. Those are very important facts. And you can write your own definition as to why they are important. You can say they are important because they are an evidence of leadership and political sagacity, or—and this is what you should say — they are important because exhibitors are finally face to face with their problems and willing to forget the tinsel that once constituted organization.

THESE are offhand thoughts—rather, surface impressions. We started out by saying that it was unfair to analyze the show after seeing only the first act. And we ended by covering a page with conversation. But we want it understood that we are writing while the curtain is being raised for the final act. Let's see what happens in the big scene.

"Milwaukee Personalities"

WELL, well, here we are on the way to Milwaukee. Another convention going to settle the business. Solve all our troubles. Simple matter.

As we look around the train, though, we wonder why the necessity of going to Milwaukee. There are people enough—and of quality in addition to the quantity—to solve all this industry's problems. They are right here on this train.

We have Hiram Abrams, Jack Woody, John Flinn, for the producers. Lee Ochs, Joe Seider, Lou Blumenthal, Billy Brandt and a hundred others. Then Art Stebbins to insure both parties against the party of the third part and "Pop" Kohn to loan them all money when they get in difficulties.

That, of course, is something that happens in the best of families.

We forget to list above that Lewis Selznick is here. There's a story. After hearing him work for a few hours we think we will have to change the sentence and say Lewis J. Selznick is there. Get what I mean?

Lewis J. has a franchise plan to offer. Boiled down as we must boil while Western Union is collecting the bills, it consists of the fact that when exhibitors put up a million dollars P. A. Powers will put a million cold iron men in the bank. And then they will go to work.

We told Lewis that the day of franchise in this business was gone, and he might as well save P. A.'s million.

That shows where we step off wrong. Before we got off the train Lewis had the real hard boiled eggs sold. We can't mention names but we heard at least four exhibitors say, "Well, Mister Selznick, I do know you and your pictures made a lot of money for us in the old days, and I do know that I never lost a dollar on your pictures, so I will ride with you on your new proposition."

And that is that.

While we, in the interest of truth and accuracy, have to chronicle the fact that Lewis J. sold a lot of hard boiled eggs, we must not lose sight of the fact that Jack Woody was in the enviable position of having a number of exhibitors coming to him.

And no wonder. Have you looked over that Associated Exhibitors contract for next year? That's an exhibitor's contract, isn't it? I'll say so.

John Flinn was on the train with the New York delegation, but John didn't have to work very hard. Anybody with "Charley's Aunt" at his back and De Mille in front of him is set so that he doesn't have to work.

But nevertheless and in spite of our remarks in the preceding paragraph, while John Flinn was listening very seriously to Morris Kohn's plan, George Dillon was out selling P. D. C. pictures in the other cars.

Lee Ochs having a Broadway first run in his vest pocket was able to sit back and say, "Let them come and talk to me."

Sam Zierler and Bobby North are aboard the train and looking so gol durned happy that we are beginning to believe there is something in this independence after all.

As a trade paper publisher all we know about independence is that it doesn't get you the inserts, and it occasionally gets you a lot of cuss words from the downtrodden exhibitor.

So, as an editor, we have learned that an independent is always wrong.

And wrong we will always be if that is the price of independence. Hurrah for us,

Well, even the worst train in the world finally has to stop, and at last we are in Milwaukee.

Looks like old times. Jake Wells, Frank Rembusch, Fred Herrington—gosh, they are all here.

We just saw Bill Sweeney trying to hide behind a hotel pillar. Now we know it is a convention.

Clyde Quimby, the leading exhibitor of Fort Wayne, Indiana, is all over the lobby introducing Fred Quimby, the best short subject sales manager Fox ever had.

Hope they get together.

Tom Saxe cannot do enough for everybody present. Tom seems to feel that the pride and honor of Milwaukee are at stake, and we are here to say that Tom is taking care of all the pride and honor that Milwaukee has.

And if Tom Saxe happens to nod, then Jimmy Keogh is on the job.

So Milwaukee is safe for democracy.

We haven't seen anything in years that was as interesting as Tom Saxe conducting a sight-seeing trip through the beautiful Wisconsin Theatre, two million dollar investment, for the benefit of the British delegation.

Beg your pardon. We were wrong. There never will be a sight equalling that which occurred when Eddie Eschmann congratulated Harry Davis on his speech the opening day of the convention.

Harry's speech as you know from the news columns, consisting of his polite and parliamentary opinion of First National.

Harry Nolan is here. Harry can't figure whether he is a member of the trust or just a plain ordinary octopus. He persists, because of his training, in thinking with an exhibitor's mind, but he is at the same time one of those terrible First National franchise holders. Accidentally it looks as though he is going to make a lot of money as a producer because he has something to do with "The Birth of the West." And so it goes.

Where is an innocent, blue-eyed young man like Harry Nolan going to get off at?

We cannot close this page without giving our exhibitor readers an example of producer domination. Winnie Sheehan and Jimmie Grainger said that we would never get any more Fox advertising if we wore the soup and fish to the banquet Wednesday evening. So come naturally, we went without the open-faced act.

To tell the truth, the only reason we brought in the incident above was as an excuse to talk about Fox. Because while they are all making speeches and seconding resolutions they—the same fellows—are sneaking away for another look at that Fox line-up for next year. And that's a line-up. That's what "they" say, not us. And we are not working for Fox. We are just trying to be an inconspicuous stop, look and listen sign.

Milwaukee Convention Creates Gives Hundreds of Thousands

Thirty-six Are Named as Members of Board; With Two Places Reserved to Assure An Honest Representation

By Robert E. Welsh

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

MILWAUKEE—With the accomplishment of a Board of Play Dates and Commerce, with the collection of a sum of money running into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, it looks like a convention. "They" seem to have done something. At least they have started. Play dates and money are strangers at exhibitor conventions, but in Milwaukee they have been the whole show.

Resolutions, heretofore the honored guests at exhibitor conventions, have been left out in the cold.

The convention was ready to close up after the election of the Board of Directors.

The board as chosen is remarkable in the fact that it has no fences—all groups are represented, and in order to play safe for harmony they left two places open to be sure that everybody would be represented in the end.

The board as chosen includes: Dave Bershon, of Los Angeles; Nathan Yamin of Fall River, Mass.; J. H. Silliman, of Milwaukee; L. B. Wilson, of Coventry, Ky.; Sydney S. Cohen, of New York; Jake Wells, of Richmond, Va.; Harry Davis, of Pittsburgh; Fred Seegert, of Milwaukee; Lee Ochs, of New York; J. J. Harwood, of Cleveland; Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C.; Julian Brylawski, of Washington, D. C.; W. W. Watts, Springfield, Ill.; John Schwalm, Hamilton, O.; M. E. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; Fred J. Dolle, Louisville, Ky.; Joseph Mogler, St. Louis, Mo.; R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J.; M. J. O'Toole, Scranton, Pa.; Frank A. Keeney, Williamsport, Pa., and Brooklyn, N. Y.; Joseph M. Seider, New Jersey; Jack Cooney, Chicago; E. H. Bingham, Indianapolis; Glenn Harper, Los Angeles; H. J. Schad, Reading, Pa.; A. B. Momand, Oklahoma City, Okla.; E. M. Fry, Providence, R. I.; J. V. Brady, Toronto; J. H. Whitehurst, Baltimore; J. W. Walsh, Hartford, Conn.; Charles L. O'Reilly, New York City; Sol Raives, New York City; A. A. Elliott, Hudson, N. Y.; Martin G. Smith, Toledo, Ohio; C. C. Griffin, Oakland, Calif., and E. W. Collins, Jonesborough, Arkansas.

The convention got under way late Tuesday afternoon when Fred Seegert of Milwaukee presented Lawrence Whitted, who welcomed the delegates on behalf of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce. John Quinn of Los Angeles responded to the welcome, after which President M. J. O'Toole launched on the delivery of his annual report. The President took his task seriously and presented a lengthy report, going into close detail in covering all activities of national headquarters during the year past. He stressed particularly the public service work of the organization and its co-operation with government departments and other agencies. "One of the outstanding accomplishments of the present administration," he declared, "had been the closing up of exhibitor ranks. By refusing to recognize the need for quarrels, we not only avoided trouble, but set aside the differences of the past and brought about the coalescing of all exhibitor forces of the country. Michigan, Texas, Kansas, Minnesota are all represented here. With such harmony at home it is also inspiring to note the presence here of the distinguished delegation of British exhibitors."

Further points covered in the President's speech include a report on the legislative activity of the organization and a discussion of the non-theatrical competition and growth of the free show evil.

Sydney S. Cohen followed President O'Toole to the platform, his appearance being the signal for an ovation. He emphasized the fact that the meetings are for business purposes and not for flights of rhetoric.

Keep Feet on the Ground

"Let us keep our feet on the ground," he declared. "If we do that we can leave Milwaukee with a record of constructive action. You can see from the response to the questionnaire which I sent out that we need have no fear of a shortage of product. Nor need we fear any lack of quality of product, for I feel sure that a much higher quality than ever before will prevail in the independent market. Trade marks are not going to mean so much next season. Individual box office attractions of merit will be our biggest hits. The golden opportunity of the independent producer and distributor is here now. It may never come again.

Cohen went on to emphasize the thought that the yesterdays must be forgotten.

"It is of today and of the future that we must think," he said. "Don't be stampeded, conserve your play dates; they are your most powerful weapon. Don't buy mere trade marks but product that in your judgment will make you money and please your public. Don't be flattered by too ornamental press books sent you, for they are not what you sell to your public. Buy what you need at prices you can afford to pay—prices that will yield you a profit on your investment. Give the other fellow the same square deal you expect from him. Live and let live must be one of our mottoes."

Brylawski and Davis Start Fireworks

R. F. Woodhull of New Jersey, chairman of the Board of Directors, presented the report outlining the body's activities during the year.

The real fireworks of the opening session were shared jointly by Julian Brylawski of Washington and Harry Davis of Pittsburgh. Brylawski appeared as chairman of the special committee that has been conferring with independent producers, and called upon the exhibitors to hold tight to their play dates until the plan decided on was put before them. His remarks about play dates brought an enthusiastic response from the 400 exhibitors present.

Harry Davis stepped to the front in his usual forceful manner and launched into an attack on the trust methods growing into the industry, winding up with particular attention to First National.

Davis' Talk Pleases

"At its inception," Davis said, "First National was a laudable project but through the recent workings of its master minds it is going astray. The very men who are competing with us as theatre owners are the men who have the right to set exhibition values and tell us what we must pay for product. And what is happening? There was a time when we could afford to shelve a picture that we did not think strong enough to play. Today they have pushed exhibition values up to the point where we must play the picture or else, if we do shelve it, strike a balance by starving the independent whose picture we select to take its place."

Davis's red fire was well liked by the exhibitors and he sent the gathering back to its hotels after the opening day's session with tongues wagging.

The result was an atmosphere charged with suspense for the second day's session. The feeling that something was going to happen was in the air and the exhibitors could only restrain their impatience with difficulty as the convention went through formal and routine motions. At the opening of the session President O'Toole introduced the British delegates, who were met with a cheer, as were Rene Batigne and Guy deValmorin, present to represent France.

Attacks Block Booking

W. Irving Glover, third assistant postmaster general, appeared to thank the organization for its co-operation with the department and to bespeak a continuance of the friendly relation. These were interesting interludes, but it was the trust the delegates wanted to hear about

Play Date—Commerce Board; In New Battle for Independence

"Give All Men with Merit Fair Opportunity," Pleads Laemmle and Gets Big Ovation—Brylawski and Davis Fan Embers and play dates they wanted to shout. Solomon Levitan, treasurer of the Wisconsin organization, gave them the first taste of what they wanted when he launched into an attack on block booking, theatre grabbing and trust encroachments. The appearance of Julian Brylawski once more was the signal to start the real enthusiasm.

Producers Pledge $100,000

"We have $100,000 already pledged by independent producers to help us in our plans to keep free competition in this business," he said. "There will be $300,000 to follow that. We are going to establish a bureau of play dates and a bureau of trade and commerce. We will put a high powered executive in charge and then send field men into every film zone in the country to establish contact with exhibitors. We are acting now. We have passed the day of talking. And already I can tell you we are hearing echoes."

I. E. Chadwick followed Brylawski to the platform to assure the convention of the hearty cooperation of the independent association which he heads.

"We have a hundred or more independent exchanges that through their salesmen will act as militant messengers of your organization. You independent exhibitors have it in your power to say whether there shall be freedom of expression in this industry, whether avenues of commerce shall be kept open. You must organize, deputize and supervise. All independents ask is a fair field and no favor, an equal opportunity for every picture standing on its merits. Double the percentage of dates you are giving independents. You will keep us alive and by keeping us alive you will insure your own business future."

Ritchey Talks Dates

Chadwick received an ovation at the conclusion of his speech that indicated where the sentiments of the delegates were.

The appearance of H. M. Ritchey on the stage was a news event that deserved better staging. No one said Michigan is back—Michigan just acted. In addition to remarks on the popular declaration of independence theme Ritchey presented a pledge card which called for exhibitor signatures to a statement of the actual percentage of their play dates that will be given to independents.

"We should be able to get ten thousand play dates for independents," said Ritchey, "and it is only through play dates that we can help them and consequently ourselves. Our words won't do it alone, we must act with play dates. You exhibitors made stars for companies that are now trying to put you out of business—you can do it again, and this time to do it for independents."

Defines "Independent"

A request from C. E. Williams, President of the Nebraska unit, for a definition of the word independent at his point, brought the response from Brylawski that an independent producer was one who did not buy, build or acquire theatres against his customers.

"That is as close as I can come to a definition," said Brylawski, "and beyond that use your own judgment."

If they ever have a popularity contest for magnates, we think Carl Laemmle is going to win hands down judging by the reception according him when he made his appearance on the heels of Brylawski's definition of an independent. After that it turned into a universal convention for the day. It was White list day in Milwaukee.

Laemmle's Dynamite

"I am independent," Carl started, "and I don't care who knows it. You men have to stand by me. One or two or three men cannot monopolize this business, and they will not. But this will be answered by the independent exhibitor. If he is wise today then he is splitting his business. And that is all that is necessary.

"Give every man with merit to offer a fair opportunity. I want my share and no more. I never want any competitor of mine to get the worst of it. But you men must realize that the poorer the outlet the poorer the pictures are going to be, and it is up to you to see that the man who is not trying to compete with you gets an outlet for his product.

Willing to Sell Theatres

"I don't want to buy theatres nor to build them. I don't want to compete with my customers, but I do insist on getting my fair share of the business in every worth while city, even if I do have to buy or build theatres. In every case where we are in theatres we were forced by circumstances to get into them. We had to buy Hostettler or we might just as well have closed our Omaha office. We have bought into the Schine circuit in New York, but we have only a minority interest, and Mr. Schine is managing his theatres just as he did before.

"I will tell you now that I am perfectly willing to sell every theatre I have, but I must first get an assurance that after doing so I will have an outlet in those spots for my pictures. Imagine if you can Warner's, Fox, Universal Producers Distributing gone. What would it mean? Well you boys might make good managers, but I can assure you you wouldn't remain theatre owners very long."

Launched into his subject Carl went along at a pace that had the exhibitors with him one hundred per cent.

"I am fifty-eight years young," he interjected, "and I don't have to work as hard as I am working, but I love this business, and they are not going to put me out as long as I have a chance to fight. But I must have your support.

Discusses Rentals

"Taking up the subject of booking combines, Laemmle emphasized the thought that forcing down prices is the same thing as forcing down quality.

"I don't mind telling you," he added, "that if rental prices continue as they were last year, it will be nothing short of disastrous. We did the greatest foreign business in our history last year, but here in our country I don't mind saying we had to fight to keep our heads above water."

Cheers greeted Laemmle's announcement that at the sales convention just concluded in Chicago he had set a policy that calls for the abolishment of fabulous quotas and fictitious values.

Cost and 10 Per Cent

"We are seeking only ten per cent above cost for our pictures this year," he said. "We are going further and to help out the small town man we are going to provide him with a complete show for the same price that he formerly bought his feature alone. If he is a seven dollar and a half man he will now get his news reel and his comedy along with the feature for that price. This applies to all except our super specials. We will sell him at a dollar a reel. That is going back to the old days, but we are willing to do it to keep the little fellow in business. This business needs the little fellow."

Universal Gives $50,000

Following the introduction of Louise Dresser, Virginia Valli, Hoot Gibson, Joe Murphy and Jack Dougherty to the convention, Emanuel Goldstein brought the delegates to their feet with the announcement that Universal had contributed fifty thousand dollars to the organizations' fund for the promotion of independence.

"We are letting our money talk," declared Goldstein. "Now it is up to you fellows to do your part."

At the banquet in the Gimbel grill Wednesday evening, space was at a premium. In addition to the Mayor of Milwaukee, the speakers included Pete Woodhull, M. J. O'Toole, Sydney Cohen, Louise Dresser and Gavazzi King, executive secretary of the British Theatre Owners organization. The visiting Britisher was the high light of the evening with a talk that one listener said was "Chauncey Depew at his best."

Ask Appeal Court

Thursday's session saw the presentation of his report on the uniform contract by Joseph Seider, President of the New Jersey delegation. The report detailed the efforts that the exhibitors have put forth during the year towards cooperation with the Hays office in the hope or removing objectionable features from the present contract. It disclosed that there are still points of difference between the producers and exhibitors and closed with a recommendation that a court of appeals be set up. The report will appear in full in next week's Moving Picture World.

Independent Producers Raise $50,000; Open Membership Gates to Exchanges

Plankinton Convention Views Present Situation With Alarm—Thirty Exchanges at Once Join State Right Organization

By Robert E. Welsh

Milwaukee, May 14.

THE Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America have said their part. First by 100 per cent. attendance at their convention, held here in Milwaukee simultaneously with the gathering of the exhibitors' forces. And secondly by their cash—$50,000 worth of it—with more promised. The attendance and the money speak in emphatic tones for the enthusiasm and strength of the state righters' organization and well indicate what its members think of the seriousness of the present situation.

The independents have been holding their sessions at the Hotel Plankinton, getting under way a day in advance of the exhibitor host. Aside from the pledging of the $50,000 already mentioned, their most important action was the opening of membership gates to the state rights exchanges of the country towards co-operation with the bureau of commerce to be instituted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Approximately thirty exchanges immediately accepted the opportunity to become members and it is confidently expected that within a month the exchanges will be represented 100 per cent in the association.

The keynote of the independents was sounded by John Russell Lowell, who was chosen temporary chairman at the opening session. He said:

"We are here at the invitation of Independent Exhibitors of the country in response to a clear call for action, a call to take steps that will assure our business freedom and aid us to resist the onward strides of monopoly. The forces which threaten our future also threaten the future of the motion picture as the great amusement of the people and as an avenue of human expression. We agree heartily with the independent exhibitors that play dates are the weapon that will solve their problems and ours. We are to meet with them and to co-operate with them shoulder to shoulder."

Following the opening session, I. E. Chadwick was elected permanent chairman of the convention and a committee was appointed to sit with a committee representing the exhibitors and take steps towards the formation of the bureau of trade and commerce. This committee consisted of Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, William Steiner, Abe Carlos, M. H. Hoffman, Jack Cohen, J. H. Friedman, E. A. Goldman, Ben Amsterdam and I. E. Chadwick.

Present arbitration methods and the opposition of the organized exhibitors to them came in for considerable discussion, but the consensus of opinion was that it would be unwise for the State Righters at this moment to withdraw from the present boards.

Because of the admittance of the exchange men to membership the executive committee was enlarged and will now consist of fourteen members, seven of whom will come from the ranks of the exchange men.

Independents present at the convention and prominent in the discussions included W. E. Shallenberger, Louis Weiss, Nathan Hirsh, Jesse J. Goldburg, Jack Cohen, Sam Sax, William Steiner, W. Ray Johnston, Ivan Abramson, Henry Ginsberg, J. Charles Davis, B. P. Shulberg, M. H. Hoffman, C. Lang Cobb, Joseph Klein, Arthur Smallwood, Ed Halperin, Ben Amsterdam, Herman Jans, Sam Zierler, William Skirboll, Herman Berkowitz, Jean Marcus, Max Weintraub, Ed Goldman, Sam Grand, Sam Werner, Harry Thomas, Joe McConville, J. D. Weintraub, Herman Rifkin, Max Levy, E. C. Rhoden, F. F. Warren, Jerry Abrams, Jack Bellman, J. S. Jossey, J. F. Friedman, I. Mandel, Henri Elman, Eddy Grossman, Jack Weil, Tom Leonard, Arthur Bromberg, Frank Zambreno, Jack Grauman, Lee Goldberg, Jack Bachman, John Lowell Russell and I. E. Chadwick.

ONTARIO EXHIBITORS DINE

As an enthusiastic preliminary for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners at Milwaukee, Wis., the officers and members of the Ontario Division of the M. P. T. O., held a special rally night at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, on the evening of May 6, when a considerable number of exhibitors and their friends enjoyed the messages of several able speakers. Alderman W. A. Sommerville, vice-president of the Ontario Division, proprietor of the Prince of Wales Theatre, Toronto, and president of Independent Films, Limited, Toronto and Montreal, was the toastmaster. J. C. Brady president of the Ontario M. P. T. O., gave a strong address on the subject of "What the M. P. T. O. has accomplished for Exhibitors." Another excellent talk on "What you can accomplish by being organized" was delivered by Earl Lawson and there was also a stirring speech by Ray Lewis on "What the M. P. T. O. means to Exhibitors."

Ralph W. Ince Enters Production Field As An Independent, With David M. Thomas

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., May 14.—David M. Thomas, associated with and personal representative of Ralph W. Ince, will arrive in New York next week to conclude pending negotiations for distribution of a series of Ralph W. Ince Productions. Thomas left today en route for San Francisco, where he is to confer with Chairman K. London, widow of the famous author of "The Sea Wolf," upon the first story of the series, which will be a Jack London yarn.

Ince will produce as an independent and is adequately financed for an important production program. He has lined up options on a number of players of box office drawing power for his initial venture as a producing director. Since the original announcement of Ince's decision to launch into the production field he has been invited to confer with leading executives of the industry relative to cooperative alliances. In response to inquiries and several offers of a definite character, Mr. Thomas has been empowered to act for Mr. Ince in closing one of the several pending deals in New York. It is reported here that the Ince production program will involve a 1925 expenditure of $750,000. Production in all likelihood will be in Hollywood, though certain of the Ince vehicles may take him to New York for special sequences. Mr. Thomas will stop at the Astor Hotel, in New York, and expects to remain East no longer than ten days. Following closely upon his return, production will start upon the first story of the series. Ince's production, "Playing With Souls," is now being released by First National to first run houses throughout the country, while his recent productions, "The House of Youth" with Jacqueline Logan, "Dynamite Smith" with Charles Ray, and "The Chorus Lady" with Margaret Livingston, have been piling up impressive grosses through varied distributing channels. He is now concluding a current contract calling for the production of three mystery melodramas. The third is now in production.

Quebec Fire Razes Three Theatres

Three moving picture theatres went up in smoke during a conflagation which swept the town of St. Joseph's d'Alma, Quebec, on Thursday, May 7, the fire destroying more than 30 places of business, a factory and residences. The fire started in the Victoria Theatre during the early part of the evening, following a mysterious explosion. There was no one in the theatre at the time because it was not yet time for the evening shows.

The National and the Alma moving picture theatres were next to be wiped out with considerable loss. St. Joseph d'Alma is the centre of an agricultural district in Northern Quebec and the three local cinemas enjoyed good business with patronage over a wide area.

Milwaukee Exhibitor Disappears with $200 Cash

A mystery defying police solution has arisen in Milwaukee through the disappearance of Nick De Lorenzo, widely known exhibitor.

De Lorenzo, whose brother Vincent is connected with the Celebrated Players exchange in Milwaukee and another brother, Frank, is with an Omaha exchange, vanished after leaving a street car a block from his home while he had in his possession approximately $200 representing the receipts of the Elite Theatre which he managed.

The Elite is controlled by the Columbia Amusement Co., by whom De Lorenzo was employed. De Lorenzo's wife could shed no light in the mystery beyond stating that her husband had appeared to be distracted for a week before he vanished.

Big Detroit Sale by U. S. for Arrears

Fred L. Woolworth, collector of internal revenue in the Detroit district, has announced that all furniture and equipment of the Orpheum Theatre, which until recently was operated as one of the Charles H. Miles string of theatres, will be sold at public auction to satisfy $59,000 delinquent income taxes. The sale is to take place during the middle of the month.

The articles to be disposed of include a pipe organ, a grand piano, 2,042 opera seats, two motion picture projectors, 60 dressing room and stage chairs, 126 box chairs and miscellaneous furniture, scenery and fittings. The delinquent taxes are for the years 1917, 1920 and 1921.

F. P. L. QUARTERLY DIVIDEND

At a meeting held May 11 the Board of Directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.00 per share on the common stock, payable July 1st, 1925, to stockholders of record at the close of business on June 15th, 1925. The books will not close.

Non-Theatrical Drive in Milwaukee Is More Intense

A new drive against non-theatrical film competition and the carnival evil has been launched by the Milwaukee branch of the M. P. T. O. as a result of numerous complaints from members that both forms of amusement are cutting heavier than ever into theatre receipts.

In regard to the first mentioned problem, the organization has invited members of the school board for a conference in the hope that an agreement can be reached whereby pictures presented in public schools would be limited to films of a purely educational nature.

The non-theatrical evil is most apparent on Wednesday and Saturday when admission to most of the school movies is a penny or a nickel. It also is charged that "The Covered Wagon" and other big pictures were placed in the schools when exhibitors refused to pay the prices asked by exchanges and that this practice is extremely harmful to theatre attendance.

In an effort to stamp out the carnival evil, Henry Staab, executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. in Wisconsin, was instructed to confer with the mayor. In event that relief cannot be obtained in this manner, it is expected that the legislature will be appealed to.

RULE PRIZES NOT LOTTERY

Prosecuting officials of St. Louis refused to issue a warrant against Louis Stahl, owner-manager of the Union Theatre, Union and Easton avenues, and the police were blocked in their efforts to prevent him from holding his Pay Days for the children of the neighborhood. For many months Stahl has been conducting special matinees for the kids at which he gave out candy and "pay" envelopes. The latter contained from one cent to $2 each and were payment to the kids for boosting the Union. St. Louis has a reform wave under way at present and the police frowned upon the arrangement, classing it with a lottery. The Prosecuting Attorney, Circuit Attorney and City Counselor took a decidedly different view and the kids will have their pay days as usual in the future.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN ON BANK BOARD

Samuel Goldwyn has been elected a member of the board of directors and a member also of the advisory board of the Commercial National Bank in Hollywood. Other members of the board include Joseph Schenck and Cecil B. DeMille.

Incorporations

Eight companies incorporated in the motion picture business in New York State during the past week, all the newly formed companies showing substantial amounts of capitalization. These companies were: The Cathedral Film Company, Inc., capitalized at $25,000, with G. B. Ferris, F. Carduner and A. M. Donald, New York City. Senior Pictures Corporation, $25,000, Ernest Maas, B. K. Blake, Samuel M. Gold, New York City. Makel Corporation, $10,000, Abe Platsky, Coney Island; Harry Levene, Evelyn Mintz, New York City, Dworsky Film Machine Corporation, $25,000, with A. S. Dworsky, Harry Dworsky, H. L. Hollander, New York. The Shardondale Corporation, Tonawanda, $18,000, J. H. W. Fenyvessy, Daniel Buss, Tonawanda; F. M. Zimmerman, Buffalo. Remington Productions, Inc., with J. T. Basseches, A. Perlstein, C. Rosenberg, New York. Chase Pictures Corporation, M. A. Chase, P. Zierler, I. Sickle, New York. Theatrical Utilities Service, Inc., F. D. White, H. Schoenfeld, M. E. Mockers, Buffalo, these last three companies not stating the amount of capitalization.

Coming and Going

William DeMille has arrived at the Paramount Long Island studio.

J. L. Hawkinson has arrived in New York after an extensive business tour for Grantland Rice's "Sportlights" released by Pathe.

The Pathe serial producing unit making "Play Ball" arrived in New York on May 6 from Miami, Fla. The unit includes Allene Ray, Walter Miller, "Wally" Oetel, Mary Milnor, Harry Semels, J. Barney Sherry and F. W. Seitz.

Miss Peggy Hopkins Joyce (Countess Morner) is on her way to Hollywood, where, under the personal direction of Marshall Neilan, she will make her screen debut in "The Sky Rocket."

Harry C. Arthur has arrived in New York from the Coast to commence his new duties with the Motion Picture Capital Corporation.

Adolphe Menjou is scheduled to sail for France on May 16.

Kansas and Missouri Exhibitors Score Another Victory

Again the power of organized effort has been demonstrated in Kansas City by the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri.

A few days ago a new building code was outlined for the consideration of the city council of Kansas City. The parts of the code regarding theatre construction were deemed exceedingly detrimental by the theatre owners. Adoption of the code meant an increased cost of about $5,000 on the average down town house and $2,000 on suburban theatres, the additional cost being due to what is alleged to be unreasonable specifications on fire exits, width of aisles, width between rows of seats and other details of construction.

Hardly had a copy of the code been printed than C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, was on his way to the city hall for a conference with the building code committee and no words were minced in explaining the alleged injustice which the code saddled upon exhibitors who sought to build or remodel theatres.

"Write out your own theatre building code and bring it to us for consideration, make the revisions and amendments you see fit, and we'll be glad to see what can be done," said W. F. Flemming, chairman of the committee.

"The M. P. T. O. K-M doesn't attempt to play politics," said Mr Cook, "but we're not worried as to 'what can be done' in regard to proposed changes in the code. There are entirely too many theatre owners opposed to the code for it to be adopted as it is."

ALBANY-BUFFALO MEET SOON

There is a probability that a joint meeting of the Albany and Buffalo Zone committees will be held some time this month. Just where this meeting will take place has not yet been decided. At the meeting by-laws will be adopted which will enable the two Zone committees to enjoy a closer working agreement to the benefit of New York State exhibitors than ever before. Meyer Schine, president of the Albany Zone committee, is now in Milwaukee, attending the national convention, and will issue the call for a joint meeting, together with the president of the Buffalo Zone, upon his return home.

Cole Intimates Texas May Form Powerful Booking Unit in War

State Rights Sales

W. Ray Johnston, president of Rayart Pictures, announced this week the consummation of a deal with B. Berger of Gerson Pictures Corporation of Los Angeles and San Francisco for the distribution of a series of six melodramas being produced by Berger, under the brand name of Superior Melodramas.

Louis Berman of the Independent Film Corporation of Philadelphia, former Warner Brothers franchise holder, will distribute the entire thirteen Chadwick pictures for the 1925-26 season. Independent Film Corporation is the first distributor to contract for distribution of Chadwick pictures under the new franchise plan. The Independent contract is for Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Southern New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia. The first of the Chadwick product to be released by Independent will be "The Wizard of Oz."

William Underwood, of the Specialty Film Company of Texas, was the first of the former Warner franchise holders to substitute a new program for the coming season, when he bought the entire Chadwick product for the coming season. Specialty Film Company will distribute thirteen Chadwick pictures in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. The pictures include Theda Bara in "The Unchastened Woman," Lionel Barrymore in "The Bells" and one other drama, George Walsh in "American Pluck" and five other modern, action romances, and Larry Semon in "The Wizard of Oz" and another spectacular comedy.

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Productions, Inc., has closed contracts for his new series of eight productions with Creole Enterprises of New Orleans, controlled by the Saenger interests, for all of the Southern states. The first release under the contract will be "Married?" by Marjorie Benton Cooke, with Owen Moore and Constance Bennett in the featured roles and which is now being directed by George Terwilliger. Jans also closed contracts last week with E. A. Golden of Golden Distributing Corporation, Boston, whereby he will handle all eight of the Jans productions in the New England territory.

W. Ray Johnston, president of Rayart Pictures, announces the sale through Richmount Pictures this week of the serial, "Battling Brewster," and also the following features: "Lightning Romance," starring Reed Howes; "Midnight Secrets," starring George Larkin; six Whirlwind Westerns starring Jack Perrin, and "The Pell Street Mystery," starring George Larkin—all for the United Kingdom. David J. Mountain, president of Richmount, who is now in London, consummated the deals.

MOVES TO LARGER QUARTERS

Henrique Blunt, United States representative for the Companhia Brazil Cinematographica, announces the removal of the New York offices of the above company from 1540 Broadway to 1650 Broadway, where the organization has taken over larger and more spacious quarters owing to the increase in their business.

ROXY IS FETED

Seven hundred persons, which taxed the capacity of the Biltmore Hotel, on Saturday night, May 9, paid homage to Major S. L. Rothafel (Roxy) at the dinner given him by the Sojourners, members of the Masonic fraternity, and past and present commissioned officers of the Army, Navy and Marines. Captain Harry W. Miller of the Metro-Goldwyn New York sales forces was chairman of the banquet committee.

Big Money Would Back Such Exhibitor Movement Against Chains, Texas Head Infers After Private Pow-Wow in Convention

OUTSTANDING in achievements accomplished at the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas was the pressure brought to bear that kept Colonel Harry A. Cole in office as president. Col. Cole did not want to serve again. He proved conclusively that he was devoting more than 50 per cent. of his time to the affairs of the organization, letting his own business suffer, and he pleaded that another man be given a chance. But not a man within the organization, the directors felt, could jump in on a moment's notice and keep up the pace set by the Texan's president.

The real fireworks were touched off Tuesday morning, May 6, when, with Col. Cole presiding, formalities were dispensed with and the organization got down to real business. Cole said thatfrom a handful of 18, representing 35 theatres, at the initial meeting, the association now numbers 225 individual members, representing 375 theatres. There are 700 independent exhibitors in the State. Colonel Cole saw the time in the not distant future when the organization would enroll 90 per cent ofthe remaining number.

Non-theatrical bookings was the first subject of the president, and this, in fact, proved the keynote of the two-day convention. Mr. Cole described the recent winning fight the association conducted against a violation of the rule by a certain Dallas exchange. The scrap lasted a month, neither side giving in, but during that time association members so completely shunned the offending exchange that it is reported to have lost thousands on the deal. Then there was a compromise and, in the words of Mr. Cole, "we need never fear that any exchange will ever violate this rule in Texas again."

Business Manager Harold G. McNeese announced that $13,000 had been collected during the year and $12,000 has been spent. There are visible assets at present amounting to $7,000. It was stressed that there is need in the Texas organization for a paid "grievance man" to remain in Dallas to permit McNeese to travel about the state and secure new members.

The convention committees were announced as follows:

Constitution and By-Laws—J. A. Holton, chairman; J. C. Clemmons, Mrs. T. C. Christopher.

Public Relations—Ross D. Rogers, chairman; D. J. Young, Jr., Lon Binion.

Uniform Contract—H. S. Cole, chairman; Will Horowitz, Jr., S. L. Charinsky.

Board of Arbitration—A. W. Lilly, chairman; R. D. Suddarth, H. B. Robb.

Non-Theatricals—H. T. Hodge, chairman; Grover Campbell, John Paxton.

..Block Booking—H. S. Ford, chairman; W. A. Stuckert, E. J. Callihan.

Grievance—O. A. Erolebrecht, H. H. Starcke, Ross Dorbrandt.

Nomination—Leslie Witt, chairman; A. O. Baker, Homer Muleey.

Accessories—W. P. Palmer, chairman; L. J. Mason, Henry Sparks.

Resolution—J. A. Holton, chairman; H. S. Cole, Leslie Witt, Herschel Thomas, D. J. Young, Jr.

Upon adjournment Tuesday at noon, the delegates gathered over informal luncheon tables and, with the inner man satisfied, they listened with interest to a brilliant discourse by Senator Jeff L. Strickland, of San Antonio, former Secretary of State for Texas and at present legal and public relations representative of Famous Players-Lasky. Senator Strickland reported but two measures affecting the industry were presented at the 39th session of the legislature. One of these placed a heavy occupation tax on vaudeville, including prologues, which would have affected the exhibitor, and the other levied a tax on motion picture theatres. Both failed to pass.

Censorship, the speaker said, always will be with us, but should not dominate us. And he made the statement the church either has to go into the motion picture business or else solidly back the moral pictures that the industry today is producing.

H. H. Starcke, a delegate, reporting for the legislative committee, said that although the tent show bill did not pass at the last session, sentiment is in favor of it, and he predicted victory at the next legislative session, probably to be held within the next seven or eight months.

The report on arbitration, which aroused lively discussion, was presented by Secretary A. W. Lilly of Greenville. Lilly said the biggest grievance so far is from the exhibitor who overbuys on film. He said the larger exchanges were easy to settle with on a disputed point, but that this rule did not apply to the smaller exchanges. He urged the exhibitors to let Business Manager McNeese straighten out matters if possible, and to use the board only as a last resort.

McNeese backed up Mr. Lilly's statements. He said exhibitors lose many cases because of insufficient representation. The exchanges invariably have a man present at all hearings. If unable to be present, he urged that exhibitors send him complete data on all controversies.

The association then voted to change its semi-annual meeting dates from May and December to May and November, Dallas to remain as the convention city. President Cole, reporting on the music tax situation, said that the recent settlement effected with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, exclusively for members, was the best that the association could do. As it represents a considerable saving, he urged all to live up to the terms of their contracts.

Texas May Have Booking Combine

In this connection, Judge Felix Robertson, the Dallas representative of the composers' society, met with a number of exhibitors on the following day and succeeded in straightening out a number of disputed accounts.

Then the all-important question of chain theatres came up. No one seemingly had any solution. President Cole admitted it was not an association matter, inasmuch as the membership is composed of all classes of exhibitors, even of those operating chains. He said a booking combination is only a partial solution. The afternoon session closed at this juncture, but not before the president had invited all interested to attend an executive session at 8 p. m. that evening, to discuss the chain theatre question. The meeting was duly held. At its conclusion President Cole announced the matter had been thrashed out from all angles, and that in all probability a definite solution may be reached before long. He intimated that it would be a proposition of fighting fire with fire; the formation of a powerful booking combination with important money back of it.

At the Wednesday morning session S. Gideon Howell, Dallas, editor and publisher of the Motion Picture Journal, led off with an important symposium on "The Place of Advertising in Selling," to be followed by W. G. (Bill) Underwood, Dallas exchange manager, with the subject "The Meaning of the Film Board of Trade."

By far the liveliest discussion centered upon the address of Dr. H. T. Musselman, editor of the Texas School Journal. Dr. Musselman handled motion pictures with gloves off. He presented a Utopian condition when he attempted to describe how he would run a theatre, exhibiting only pictures with real art merit and showing the finer things of life, with newspaper critics schooled to point out to the public the fine things in his pictures.

When he was through, Col. Cole answered the educator, also with gloves off, although the friendliest feeling existed at all times. Mr. Cole pointed out motion pictures had not yet risen from commercialism.

"This real art idea is splendid," the Texans' fighting president said, "but if adopted generally the theatres would lose their audiences and go broke." He added that the exhibitors were art lovers, but in the meantime must pay as they go, and are compelled to run the pictures the public wants to see.

On Wednesday afternoon it was announced that owing to the inability of H. M. Richey, manager of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan, and W. A. Steffes, president of the M. P. T. O. of the Northwest, to be present, that the business of Thursday morning, including election of officers, could be crowded in the afternoon session Wednesday. This would leave nothing but jollity ahead. So it was worked that way.

Jack Connolly, of the Washington Hays office, was the first speaker of the closing session. Mr. Connolly in a prepared address reviewed most of the work of the national organization, closing with a prediction that the excise tax would be abolished in its entirety at the next Congressional session.

There is a real progress being made on the new uniform contract, H. S. Cole of Bonham, brother of the president, reported. When he had finished, Joe Luckett of Dallas, well known exchange manager, asked and received the privilege of the floor. He requested that some definite recommendation be made as to the amount of damages sustained in the non-playing of a percentage film. He said the problem was a knotty one to get at, but hoped some equitable manner of solving it would present itself.

One of the real important subjects of the meeting came up at this juncture. President Cole's remarks are presented almost verbatim:

"I expect no further trouble from the present authorized exchanges on non-theatrical bookings, but there is a growing menace ahead of us nevertheless. I refer to certain individuals who are buying up the rights of pictures which expire, for future showings. In other words, with the idea in view of renting these old pictures to schools, colleges, churches and similar institutions. They will be shown, possibly, for 5 and 10 cents. Unpaid schoolboys will act as projectionists, ushers and even managers, and I see many theatres going out of business. Here's something to think about. I don't know of any solution now, but believe organization is the only thing that will take care of this matter. I am not dreaming dreams when I say this is a dangerous thing. We have had many crises; we may survive this one; I hope we do. It will sap our very life blood."

Among those who attended the convention were:

Billy Fairman, Bryan; Sam Hefley, Cameron; F. M. Phipps, Childress; F. E. Whitney, Albany; Ross D. Dorbandt, Jacksonville; Ed N. Dorbandt, Athens; A. C. Moore, Bartlett; Mrs. Bessie Rutledge, Ft. BERT PARKER IN LARGER QUARTERS

Miss Bert Parker, well known in this country for her activities in buying pictures for the Latin-speaking countries, has taken larger quarters in the newly constructed building at 1560 Broadway.

Pioneer Milwaukee American Doomed

The American Theatre, born in Milwaukee in the days when the entire motion picture industry was in its swaddling clothes, but successful to the last with its original five and ten cent westerns in competition to million dollar houses and de luxe programs, is on its last reel.

J. B. Olinger, for whom the theatre, tucked away in a corner of Milwaukee's downtown section, made a fortune, has announced plans to raze the building and erect a new $1,000,000 structure on the site. Whether the new building will contain a theatre or will be confined to stores and offices has not yet been decided.

Schine's Managers Win Sunday Shows in Corning, N. Y.

Corning, N. Y., May 5, 1925.

Editor, Moving Picture World: It might interest you to know that we have just won a real victory in the cause of justice and the right to compete with various Sunday amusements such as golf, autos, parks, baseball and others of a kindred nature.

On April 6 the Common Council of this city proposed to ban Sunday pictures and the vote was eight to four favoring an ordinance to prohibit same. This ordinance was to be rushed through last night, May 4.

We then proceeded to get to work and you will note that we succeeded by reading the attached clipping from today's newspaper. We gained three votes in the council by real honest effort and no slush fund and thus tied the vote, and the mayor being a real fellow jumped in and saved the day.

We are also proud to state that the newspapers gave us splendid support and we will be glad to pass this along to any fellow exhibitor should he desire same. We had no outside help and because of our quiet work the opposition was not aware that they had lost any of their votes until it was too late for them to recover.

Very truly yours,
SCHINE'S CORNING THEATRE,
The Princess, C. J. ROSE.
The State, E. G. DODDS.
The Regent, ROSE & DODDS.

LLOYD PARTY IN NEW YORK

Harold Lloyd, Mrs. Lloyd, John L. Murphy, production manager, and Mrs. Murphy and Joe Reddy, publicity man, are in New York City after a trip across the Canadian Rockies and visits in Northern New York. Everywhere, Lloyd said, everybody asked about his little daughter, even in small towns where he did not think he was known. He will visit Washington, D. C., Cuba and New Orleans before returning to the West Coast where, in about seven weeks, he will begin a picture for Paramount. This will not, as originally reported, be produced in the East. Pathe, with whom his contract has expired, has one Lloyd picture for autumn release, as yet untitled.

Carl Laemmle Abolishes Film Quotas, Sets a Cost Plus 10 Per Cent. Basis

New Arrangement to Eliminate Inflation of Values and Misrepresentation—Sales Force to Know Production Costs

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, exploded a bombshell at the annual convention of Universal sales executives held last week-end in the Drake Hotel, Chicago, when he announced that Universal will henceforth abolish the quota system of selling pictures and will establish its sales immediately upon a cost plus 10 per cent basis.

The new arrangements, he pointed out to his assembled department heads and sales chiefs, eliminates all the bubble and froth of the quota system and all the inflation of values and all the misrepresentation to which the exhibition value quota is contributory.

Mr. Laemmle's speech was the climax of the convention. Sales Directors Ned Depinet, Jules Levy and Ned Marin had led up to the last day by speeches and instructions dealing with the Second White List of 54 pictures, thirty Jewels and twenty-four westerns. Raymond Schrock, new general manager of Universal, had come all the way from Universal City to explain stories, casts and special appeal from box office standpoint for each production. Then came the annual speech of the president. He was introduced by E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal. He said in part:

"In the selling of the White List pictures I have no hesitation in saying to you that you can claim for them that they are the very best that the Universal has ever made. I am so confident of this that I am going to propose to you a new method of disposing of them. I am going to tell you just what the Universal expects you to get for these pictures. Heretofore we have sat down and compiled a quota valuation based on the exhibition value of each picture. Everybody does this. When you come right down to it this method satisfies no one. We know the quota is too high. But with other producers putting a tremendous valuation for exhibition on pictures we know are no better than ours we have to follow the leader.

"You may think it is a revolutionary thing to tell the sales force just what a picture cost. I am going to do it because I am going to be just as white in my dealings with you as I am asking, nay, demanding that you be with the exhibitors, and as we are with the public. Another thing that I want you to know is that the Universal will be satisfied with 10 per cent. profit on its pictures. That is little enough when you consider what some businesses expect to bring in profit. With conditions as they are today every business man who does not make a 10 per cent. profit on his turn-over will not be making more than a bare living.

"Therefore, I am glad to tell you that Universal from now on will expect you in each exchange to make a 10 per cent. profit on the cost of each picture according to your percentage of the country. This cost, of course, will include the cost of distribution and the cost of the prints. That is the message I bring to you and for the first time in years you will be able to go out to the exhibitor with a proposition that he can understand in dollars and cents and that he can thoroughly believe in."

"Got a Buck?" "No!" Says Richey

Manager H. M. Richey of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan in a statement issued a few days ago, advises exhibitor members to make no more loans to film salesmen. He says:

"I am making no attempt to discredit the personal reliability of some certain salesmen," said Richey, "but during the past few months there have been so many complaints about the practice being abused and about many exhibitors losing their loans entirely that it is time some warning was issued about the matter."

Goldman Sues Koplar et al in St. Louis for $250,000

THE St. Louis film colony was rocked May 6 when William Goldman, owner-manager of the Kings, Rivoli and Queens theatres, filed suit in the St. Louis Circuit Court asking $250,000 damages of Harry Koplar, Sam Koplar, Sam Hamburg, Jr., David Sommers and the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation. He further asked for an accounting of the affairs of the St. Louis Theatre now nearing completion at Grand boulevard and Morgan street.

Harry Koplar and Goldman had been intimate friends for many years and the suit while surprising to many confirmed rumors that have been about Picture Row for weeks that a break had taken place between them over the St. Louis Theatre.

Goldman's petition at some length goes into the conception of the St. Louis theatre and his connection with it, and in the course of the recital he alleged that Harry Koplar took advantage of their friendship to secure control of the house. Goldman alleged that he was deprived of assets valued at $250,000 and he asks for damages in that sum.

Notice of his suit was filed with Recorder of Deeds Tamme so as to proceed a mortgage which the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation is said to contemplate to secure a bond issue of $800,000 put on the market last week. The theatre has been leased to the Orpheum Circuit and is scheduled to open in September. It will be used for vaudeville and pictures.

Lambert E. Walther, attorney for the defendants, commenting on the suit, stated that the defendants can answer fully every allegation in Goldman's suit. The defendants are permitting their attorney to do their talking.

Goldman's is the second suit involving the theatre and its promoters. Several weeks ago Al Lichtman filed two suits for $75,000. In one suit he asked for $50,000 from Harry Koplar and the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation claiming that amount for services he alleged to have rendered in leasing the house to the Orpheum Circuit. In his other suit Lichtman asked $25,000 from Harry Koplar for obtaining a buyer for Koplar stock in St. Louis Amusement Company, but Koplar refused to sell.

Germany Has 3,737 Theatres, Chart Makes Known

According to a new directory of the German film industry, just published, the total number of moving picture theatres in Germany is 3,737. This does not include exhibition halls where educational and advertising films may be shown from time to time, but only theatres proper. Of this number 308 are in Berlin, which now has a population of slightly over four million people.

At this rate the capital of Germany is better supplied with moving picture theatres than any other part of the country since the entire population of Saxony has only 334 establishments and Bavaria, which is considerably larger, has only 360.

Although it is asserted that Germany has the largest number of moving picture theatres of any continental European country, this total is comparatively modest in view of the 15 thousand or more film theatres in the United States. (Assistant Commercial Attache Douglas Miller, Berlin, Germany, April 2, 1925.)

Balaban & Katz Buy Into Lubliner & Trinz Circuit

THE most important news of the week in theatre circles in Chicago was the announcement of Emil Stern, general managger of the Lubliner and Trinz Circuit that the Balaban and Katz Circuit has acquired a substantial interest in the L. and T. chain. According to Mr. Stern each chain will maintain its separate identity for the present. The amount of stock acquired or the financial consideration involved was not made known.

In the Lubliner and Trinz chain are the following houses in Chicago: Senate, Pantheon, Orchestra Hall, Covent Garden, Biograph, Crawford, Dearborn, Ellantee, Lakeside, Knickerbocker, Madison Square, Michigan, Oak Park, Pershing, Paramount, Vitagraph, West End Theatre, Wilson and the Windsor. In addition several new houses are under construction for the Lubliner and Trinz chain, as well as the Balaban and Katz Circuit. B. F. Lindheimer represented both circuits in the negotiations, according to the reports from the offices.

The new Lubliner and Trinz combination will be known as the Lubliner and Trinz Theatrical Enterprises and it is reported that Arthur Mayer, formerly an executive with the Ascher Circuit, will head the new circuit. Musical Director Spitalny, who has directed the music of the new McVickers Theatre since its opening, has been transferred to the Tivoli Theatre on the south side, and Paul Ash of San Francisco, succeeds him. Adolph Dumont, who has been musical leader at the Tivoli, retires from the Balaban and Katz organization.

WILL HANDLE CANADIAN FILMS

F. A. Enders, managing director of Film Booking Offices (1919), Limited, of London, England, has been the successful applicant for the contract to distribute the regular releases of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau, Ottawa, throughout the British Isles, according to an official announcement by R. S. Peck, director of the Motion Picture Bureau in the Canadian Capital. The contract calls for the supplying of twelve prints of the Canadian subjects, released fortnightly for distribution in Great Britain and Ireland.

PERKINS EXONERATED

George F. Perkins, president of Perkins Electric, Ltd., Montreal, in regard to a report recently published in Moving Picture World that he had been arrested on a warrant signed by Fire Commissioner Quinn which alleged arson, writes:

"This is to advise that Judge Cusson in the Court of Special Sessions today stopped the prosecution counsel's argument and dismissed all charges against the writer, without giving the counsel the opportunity of presenting any defense."

Gleichman Suing F. P. L. on Contract in Detroit Court

PHIL GLEICHMAN, former lessee and operator of the Broadway Strand Theatre in Detroit and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are marshaling their forces for a court fight which will be waged in the Wayne County Circuit Court at Detroit within a few days.

This case is said to be an outcropping of the stopping of film service to Gleichman by Famous Players-Lasky three years ago and the subsequent sale of exhibition rights on the company's product to the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, competitors of Gleichman.

Gleichman sets up that Famous Players-Lasky entered into an agreement of five years' duration to serve his theatre with exclusive first run rights to all of its product. Gleichman was to pay $1,200 per picture and Famous Players was to share in a percentage of the gross business transacted by the Broadway Strand.

All went well, Gleichman says, for three years when suddenly the service was transferred to the Kunsky theatres, where higher rental prices were claimed to have been obtained. Gleichman was denied an injunction at the time and started a damage suit, maintaining that he is entitled to the profits that have been made from the pictures he did not get. The case has been awaiting its turn on the docket for 18 months but is now set for trial. It is expected that it will occupy at least three weeks. Among the important witnesses who will come to Detroit to testify are George Weeks, Sidney Kent and Harry Ross.

Gleichman contends that the contract he entered into with Famous Players created a relationship known in law as "A Joint Adventure," which relationship is described as being almost identical with a nartnership. If the court perceives this point it will be one of the most far-reaching decisions ever handed down and will be of vital interest to both exhibitors and producers.

Testimony of an unusual nature will be introduced into the suit. For example, Gleichman, it is said, will introduce copies of the original contracts which Famous Players held with first run exhibitors all over the country, showing the exact prices, terms, etc., on Paramount Pictures.

Hint Canada Might Adopt U. S. Tax System if Amendment Wins

ANXIETY is now being displayed by the exhibitors of Canada regarding the immediate possibility of the imposition of royalty assessments on copyrighted music played in the theatres at regular performances because of proposed amendments to the Canadian Copyright Act as brought forward by E. R. E. Chevrier, member of Parliament for Ottawa East in the Canadian House of Commons at Ottawa.

At a meeting of the Parliamentary Copyright Committee in the Parliament Buildings on May 7, which was attended by Col. Cooper and other representatives of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, the committee decided to reject the clause moved by Mr. Chevrier, among others, that half of the fine of $50, for the first offense under the copyright law and half of the fine of $25, for the second and succeeding offenses should go to the informant or complainant. But otherwise the proposed legislation, providing for a broadened scope of the act to cover the playing of copyrighted music at theatre performances for gain, percentage and otherwise, still stands.

The hint has been thrown out at Ottawa that the solution of the situation, if the amendments are adopted by the House of Commons and approved by the Senate, will be the adoption of a tax system such as has been adopted in the United States where the music "tax" has been fixed at 10 cents per seat per annum. A similar plan is already being considered for Canadian theatres, it is stated, and this means that those exhibitors who pay this tax to the authors and composers association would be permitted to play all music when when and as required.

Northwest Claims Credit for Greater Movie Season Now Sponsored by Hays

Challenges California's Contention for Originating Movement—Letters Assuring Support Continue to Flood M. P. P. D. A.

THE Northwest challenges California's claim to originating the movement that is now being sponsored nationally as Greater Movie Season by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. In August, 1922, 2,000 theatres throughout Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota celebrated a Go-to-Movie Week, inaugurated by Greater Amusements of Minneapolis. This is stated to be the first concerted drive in exhibitor history.

The campaign opened with special poster displays that reached their peak in Minneapolis and St. Paul where every available stand was taken.

Newspaper advertising at the Twin Cities, Des Moines, Sioux Falls and other centers broadcast the season's spirit; news and editorial space liberally supported the idea which was pressed still further by slides, messages of optimism from prominent men, parades and addresses before civic and commercial associations. Prizes of $100, $50 and $25 were awarded for the most effective exploitation campaigns.

The season broke a long spell of depression. Greatly improved business was reported everywhere and especially in Minneapolis where, on the Sunday after the campaign got under way, 50,000 people established attendance records for theatres in the loop district.

The organization which put Go-to-Movie Week across and pioneered the way for similar drives should be able to lend the August celebration effective support throughout the Northwest. Meanwhile authorities endorsements of Greater Movie Season that continue to reach the offices of the Hays organization contribute a national expression of good-will for the screen.

The Boy Scouts of America have pledged their support to the movement. "I am very happy to give cordial endorsement because of the hope Greatre Movie Season gives for continued progress in the display of wholesome pictures," declared James E. West, Chief Scout Executive. "Please be assured that the Boy Scouts of America will do everything in its power to co-operate in any effort to make available pictures on a new higher standard of excellence."

That the public will back the endeavor wholeheartedly is the opinion of General James A. Drain, National Commander of the American Legion. "Better motion pictures will, in my opinion, come not from acts of the producers alone or from the efforts of spectators, but rather from a combination of the two. With the praiseworthy effect to carry forward a Greater Movie Season I am thoroughly in sympathy and I shall be glad to do anything I can to assist."

Lou E. Holland, president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World predicts "a wonderful success from every point of view. It will be a splendid thing thus to call sharply to public attention the remarkable improvement that has been going on in the moving picture industry. Sometimes even great improvement is not observed or recognized when it is gradual. It is a good deal like the case of a man who sees one of his children grow, day after day, into a splendid manhood. Some day he wakes up and finds he has a big fine, manly man in the family. Greater Movie Season is going to be of value."

The drive's commercial significance will be put before the Associated Advertising Clubs in convention at Houston, Texas, by J. Homer Platten, Treasurer of the M. P. P. D. A., as first step towards swinging national advertisers behind the project and securing co-operation of the individual clubs with whom exhibitors will make contact when local plans for the season are discussed.

"It is often said that the public gets just what it wants," stated W. E. Knox, president of the American Bankers Association, in a letter of endorsement to Mr. Hays; "but I cannot help feeling that if there is placed before the public something better than it has been having, it will have sense enough to appreciate it and welcome it with enthusiasm. So I believe very firmly that this present worthy movement will have not only the sympathy, but the support of the American people."

The Young Women's Hebrew Association, the National Catholic Welfare Conference and the Board of Christian Education of the Presbterian Council are included in list of influential ecclestiastic supporters Greater Movie Season has won, while Mary E. Craigie, of the National Shakespeare Founder Federation, has promised the active assistance of the Shakespeare Clubs in every State.

Duties on Film

The U. S. Department of Commerce announces it has received official confirmation from its London office of the reimposition of the McKenna duties on motion picture films as follows: Negatives, 5 pence per linear foot; positives, 1 penny per linear foot. (In American currency this amounts to approximately 10 and 2 cents, respectively.) These will become effective in July, 1925.

Albany Hits Blocks

Warning all exhibitors in the Albany Zone not to buy what is termed a "cat in the bag," and not buy any blocks or groups of pictures other than absolutely necessary at this time, the Albany Zone Committee has sent a letter to the four hundred or more exhibitors north to the Canadian line, south to Binghamton, east to Poughkeepsie and west to Syracuse, asking them to attend a meeting of the Zone Committee to be held this month at a date still to be set.

Sunday Shows Agitated Even in Philippines

The Philippine Islands are all agitated over Sunday movies, according to Mrs. Mary C. Lane, of Omaha, who has just returned from an eight months' stay in the Orient.

She visited the Philippine congress in session in the old palace. "A bill was up to prohibit showing of moving pictures on Sunday," said Mrs. Lane. "What amused me most was that several of the anti-movie speakers brought up the Pilgrim Fathers as an argument. I couldn't help wondering how much the Pilgrim Fathers meant to that congress, since the vast majority of them are of the brown race. But at last the question was tabled, and I never did see how it came out."

Norway Receipts Increase

Returns now available covering municipally-owned motion picture theatres in sixty-five Norwegian cities and towns show that the gross receipts amounted to approximately 12.6 million crowns in 1924 as compared to about 13.2 million in 1923. In Oslo the gross receipts fell from 5.8 million crowns in 1923 to 5.3 million in 1924; in Bergen from 1.5 million to 1.4 million; in Trondhjem from 853,000 crowns to 672,000 crowns; and in Drammen from 550,000 to 538,000 crowns. In Stavanger gross receipts increased from 582,000 crowns in 1923 to 665,000 in 1924. (Office of Commercial Attache, submitted by A. E. Fenselau, Copenhagen, Denmark, April 3, 1925.—Department of Commerce.)

LOEW'S BOSTON PROFITS JUMP

Business at Marcus Loew's Orpheum Theatre in Boston for the 17 weeks ending April 26 increased $35,200 over the same period for 1924. The net operating profits increased $17,133, making an average weekly gain in the profits of $1,007. The business for the 17 weeks at Loew's State Theatre, Boston, increased $27,453, and net operating profits increased $13,257, making an average weekly gain of $780 for the period.

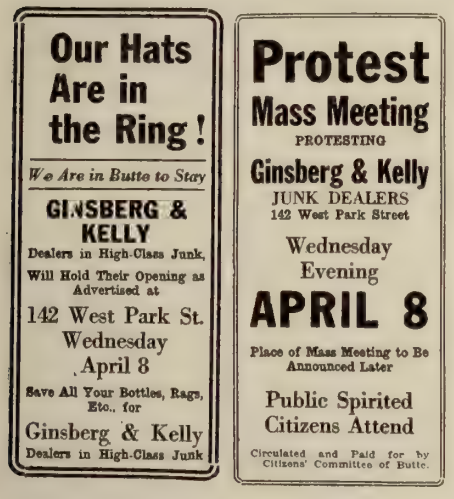
Opens a Junk Shop in Retail District to Tell Butte The Rag Man is Coming

NOT since Ralph Ruffner moved out of Butte, Mont., has the town been so stirred up over a theatrical splash as it was over the stunt worked by W. J. Sullivan, manager of the Rialto Theatre, and W. A. Burke, general manager of publicity for the Silver Bow Amusement Company, which includes this house.



A Metro-Goldwyn Release

It all started with the modest newspaper advertisement in which Ginsberg and Kelly announced that they would open a high grade junk shop at 142 West Park street.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

THE BLOW OFF

This was simple enough in its way, but that section of West Park street was in the heart of the exclusive retail shopping district. There was a vacant store there, and the windows carried announcements similar to that in the newspapers.

Might Have Whispered

Just how far the adjacent merchants were taken into the scheme is not told in the story sent in, but it looks as though at least one of them had been tipped off, for the Riddel Paint and Art Company promptly broke into print the next day with a two sixes protesting against the intrusion of a junk shop. From this distance it looks as though the firm had been tipped off to get in on the fun and help the game along.

At any rate Ginsberg & Kelly came back with a single five inch announcing that they were going to open on April 8. Just below was an advertisement of the same size, calling for a mass meeting, to be held at a place to be announced later, to protest against this uncouth intruder.

Evidently not all of the merchants were let into the secret, for eighteen of them hired an attorney and prepared for injunction proceedings, while a petition was circulated to keep Park street free from junk shops.

Probably the newspapers were told, but they saw a good story and they came in with solemn protests against junk on the street devoted to feminine shoppers, and the uninformed public really got excited about the matter. It took the petition seriously, and was wrought up against the desecration of the finest shopping location in town.

Everyone was talking about the move and many even went down to the address given to take a look at the place.

For three days Kelly & Ginsberg advertised their intentions, and it began to look serious when Sullivan decided that the time was ripe for the blowoff.

Newspapers Helped

This took the form of a three nines display announcing that the oddly named firm would open for business at the Rialto Theatre.

Every newspaper in town—there are three—blew the lid off, and one even took a still of Kelly and Ginsberg on their wagon, lettered the side of the pictured wagon with the name and Park street address, crossing off the latter and adding "Moved to Rialto." They gave it a three column space eight inches deep, and added to the general fun.

It is the best handled dog story to be put across in a long time. It was far ahead of the wrecked car and the suicide note ideas, because it was a matter in which everyone felt a personal interest, and it was so well handled that few suspected a hoax until the expose came.

Naturally the Rialto got big business—and deserved it.

A Fine Tribute

Last month Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, ended his second term as president of the Hamilton Retail Merchants' Association. The local paper took occasion to pay editorial tribute to the advancement made by the Association in the two years it was under his leadership.

It is a fine tribute to a man that he should have been mdae the leader of a business men's association. It is a finer tribute that his conduct of the affairs of the organization should have called out such unstinted praise. It is a credit to the entire industry that one of its members should have acquitted himself so well.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Nazimova in "My Son," the First National production with Jack Pickford, Hobart Bosworth and others, was surrounded by a program of six additional incidents. Four of these were short film subjects, making altogether a very well balanced show. The running time of "My Son" was one hour and thirteen minutes, and the time required for the Mark Strand Topical Review was 8 minutes. The third film subject was the James A. Fitzpatrick music film, "Frederick Chopin," one of the Famous Music Master Series. This film required 11 minutes. The musical numbers took up altogether 33 minutes.

Each deluxe performance was opened by the orchestra playing "Opera Bouffe." This is a specially orchestrated overture by Mayhew L. Lake, the well known American composer who is on the music staff of this theatre. Lake took two well known operatic airs of the heavier nature and treated them in a light vein. Some of the measures had counter-melodies playing with the operatic melodies. The lights for this were: 2 light green entrance spots on mirror mosaic vases in the transparent windows at either side of the stage; deep blue Mestrum flood from the booth covering the entire stage, with ceiling spots of the same color crossed by medium amber; beaded silver draw curtains across the production stage and lighted by the deep blue floods named above; large stage in blue, with floods on the musicians from the dome, one side blue and the other side medium amber; an amber flood from the booth was thrown over the entire set.

The second incident was programmed as "An Old Bouquet" and centered around the ballad "You're Just a Flower From an Old Bouquet." The back-drop for the set was the black cyclorama, in front of which was centered a large set-piece bouquet. At opening four members of the ballet in ballet skirts did a short number, following which a tenor in costume of 1830 came on from the right and sang the song. At the first chorus the girls opened a door in the center of the large bonquet and premiere danseuse came on for a dance following the finish of the song. The number was then brought to a close with the second chorus by the tenor and members of the ballet. Lights included medium amber floods from the dome over the entire set, augmented by rose pink spots from the sides. Four minutes for this number.

Following the Mark Strand Topical Review, with its specially scored music, came the first appearance of the Balabanow Trio, youthful Russian accordeonists. The set consisted of a back-drop of the River Volga masked in by gold draw curtains. Red and amber side spots hit the pleats of the curtains. Front lighting included white and orange spots from the booth on the artists. The numbers were "Balabanow March," "Soul of Russia," "Poet and Peasant" overture and "O Katharina." The trio was dressed in Russian costume and the act took 12 minutes.

Incident No. 6 was programmed as "Divertissements" and included three presentations. The first was a Cake Walk by premiere danseuse and partner. For a back-drop the white patent leather cyclorama was used and in front of this were two mirror mosaic revolving globes. Color wheels from the side played on the dancers, who were made up in light brown. The color wheels also hit the revolving globes. The second incident of the Divertissements was an operatic baritone who sang selections from "The Merry Widow." He appeared on the apron of the large stage. Metaline draw curtains were closed across the production stage and on these curtains were blue and medium amber floods. The artist was picked out by an amber spot from the dome. The third of the Divertissements was the "Highland Fling," danced by six members of the ballet in Scotch costumes. The set was a very colorful drop by P. Dodd Ackerman, representing a Scotch moor. The flood lighting included four floods of lemon from the booth and dome.

DISTINCTIVE PARTI-COLORED DISPLAYS HELPED PUT OVER SANS-GENE IN ATLANTA

The Howard Theatre used the same general style in its foyer, on the front and for window cards. Being different from the usual style of poster, the suggestion of a play of distinction was created, subconsciously, and this was furthered by the use of giant letters on the house front to spell the name of the star. Two thousand advertising coins were given patrons with their change.

HOW THE RIALTO THEATRE, DES MOINES, USED THE JURY SLIPS

These were pasted up for the town to read "what your friends and neighbors think." The clown perambulator is a variant on the "I may be an ass" idea. The nifties are the girl ushers in sickness inciting uniforms. Feel feverish? Sure.

Play Jury Idea Is Used With Pictures

Capitalizing the recent flurry in New York which resulted in the appointment of juries to try alleged obscene plays, Kansas City and Des Moines have used "juries" to sit in judgment on Oh Doctor. The text of one advertisement, from the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, will give the idea. It is boldly headed: "Wanted, 100 people to sit on this film jury." The rest of the copy runs:

"You know enough about a motion picture to be able to tell whether it is the most amazing creation that has ever been brought to the screen. If you do, we want you to sit on the biggest jury that has been empanelled in Kansas City.

"We want you to sit in judgment on Carl Laemmle's presentation of Reginald Denny in "Oh, Doctor!"—a Universal Jewel production which will be shown immediately after the last performance tomorrow night."

The picture in each instance was shown following the current attraction on Thursday or Friday. Opinion blanks were supplied and the last night audience sat in on the play. Several good exploitation lines were gained and the comments were used for newspaper work and lobby display. A cut shows how the Rialto Theatre, Des Moines, handled the latter.

It's just another form of the special showing, but it was timely and therefore unusually good, and the jury turned press agents to prove their verdict.

Hooked The Air Mail to Local Desire

Just before the test flight from New Orleans to Chicago, W. G. League, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, had The Air Mail. Hooking this to the local agitation about air mails, he sold it big through tying it to local aspirations.

The original intention was to drop the mail route from Chicago down the Mississippi, with stops at St. Louis and Memphis. This, of course, was the logical air route, following the river. But towns to the east were agitating for a service that would touch a number of important points—and cut Memphis out.

Naturally Memphis was at fever heat, and it was easy to sell the postmaster on the idea of bannering the post office wagons for The Air Mail. This gave him 20 perambulators with an "official" suggestion.

He also hired a local flying company to throw out 3,000 enveloped heralds, the covers carrying the legend "The Air Mail is here. Read the enclosed." The idea of the envelopes was to get them interested before they could see that it was only a show herald.

So far as the South is concerned the release of this title was particularly timely.

A Title Contest

Adapting a Sunday feature stunt, the Auditorium, Newark, N. J., recently arranged with a newspaper to run five scene cuts from Janice Meredith with $30 in prizes for the best titles to the series, the prizes being $15, $10 and $5.

This is a stunt that can be worked on almost any picture, but to comply with the Postal laws the pictures should be displayed in the lobby and elsewhere and the contest should he open to non-readers.

Caught the Sailors

During the recent manoeuvers of the combined fleets, some 20,000 sailors were daily given shore leave while the fleet was at San Diego. C. C. Struble figured that Lady of the Night should appeal to the men from the ships, even though she was not what they probably figured her to be. He splashed the title and "the world her hunting ground—men her prey" wherever he could get the paper up and not only played to a big regular business, but he gave an all-night showing the opening night, knowing that the town was full.

To keep the other theatres from borrowing the idea, Mr. Struble kept it under cover until 10 P. M.

Radioed Act

Cooperating with a local station, Pat McGee, of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, staged a radio act to help out Coming Through.

He had a pianist who played at both night shows, the selections being picked up by the microphone and broadcast. After the first number the audience picked the selection to be played, many of the requests coming in over the phone. At the end of the fifteen minutes the station signed off until the next show. Most of the air audience came in later to see the actual performance.

Has Old Kettles Spell Hot Water

O. J. Motry, of the Lyric Theatre, Tiffin, Ohio, breezes in with a very clever adaptation of the old tin can matinee.

Instead of cans, Mr. Motry advertised for discarded kettles, giving one ticket for each kettle. In this manner he accumulated about one hundred kettles, which he decorated with Lloyd heads and disposed in the lobby to spell the first word in the title of Hot Water.

Several traveling men stopped to tell Mr. Motry that it was one of the cleverest fronts they had seen in their travels, and they were not after passes, either. The photograph shows the kettles, also the projectionist, organist, cashier and Mr. Motry, himself reading from left to right. Those signs state the position of the quartet, but the lettering is too small to come up clearly in a cut.

Mr. Motry writes that while he got a crowd the rental was too large to give him a profit. At that the run probably will show an eventual profit, for a good picture and big business is a tonic for the shows to come. Sometimes it pays to stand a loss or an even break for the subsequent results.

Mr. Motry's idea comes rather late for Hot Water, but keep the idea in mind in case you rebook it later on.

OTTO J. MOTRY'S CLEVER LOBBY FOR HOT WATER

He gave a ticket apiece for about a hundred discarded kettles and used them to spell out the first word in the lobby of the Lyric Theatre, Tiffin, Ohio. He got a flashy front at very small expense, and naturally got a run on the picture.

Hooked His Page to Good Ad Contest

One of the best stunts for getting a hook-up page is the ad-writing contest, and John B. Carroll used the idea lately for the Victory Theatre, Tampa. Five merchants came in on the page and each was given five passes to be awarded the best-written advertisements.

This, of course, required that the advertising be studied closely and, as the contest appealed more to adults than to children, it made an impression where it would do the most good.

Mr. Carroll got a very effective banner by cutting the goose from the 24-sheet and lettering the title across the wings. As it was Easter week, he also added a prologue, with a special stage setting for a soloist who threw flowers to the spectators as she sang an appropriate song. The flowers were contributed by a local florist in return for a program mention.

It all helped to get the unusual title over to the business the play deserved.

A CUTOUT FROM THE 24-SHEET MADE A WONDERFUL BANNER

John B. Carroll, of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla., lettered the title across the cutout and added a plaster goose pendant from the lobby chandelier. He also got a hook-up with prizes for the best written advertisements.

Arthur Swanke's latest frame shows an adaptation of the cutout idea. The portrait of Norma Talmadge in The Only Woman is extended with a three-sheet cutout of the clinch. It works out very effectively.

SWANKE'S HAND WORK

This seems to be his first serious excursion into portraiture and he writes that some of the customers called him a prevaricator when he declared that it was all his own.

They talked so much about it that he had a turnaway each night.

WOODEN SOLDIERS WERE NOT A SLAM AT WEST POINTERS

They were merely designed to get extra attention for Classmates at the Capitol Theatre, Victoria, B. C. The house was up against the stiffest opposition of the season, but held its own against a "big" feature picture at the other theatre.

Sold Coogan on a Boy Scout Special

The Boy Scout Council of Anniston, Ala., was anxious for a showing to the scouts of a special picture, Be Prepared, fathered by the Boy Scout movement. Roy Smart assured the Council he would be glad to run it the first time he had a suitable feature, and he decided upon Jackie Coogan in The Rag Man as a picture that would help and be helped.

Instead of a special showing, he ran the two pictures for the full engagement, and as the boys had been instructed to try and induce their parents to view the picture, the business was shot well over the average at no special cost.

Better than this, the Scout picture enabled Smart to get in on the front page; which is something of an accomplishment in Anniston, where the papers are friendly, but not free with their news fronts. The Scout picture was news and with the influential men of the Council back of it, the story easily crashed to the front pages—and on a Sunday, at that.

Air Mail Boxes for Lobby Stunt

Although Jacksonville is considerably off the air mail route, it sells the special air mail stamps and will forward such matter to New York for air shipment to the west.

Using a home-office suggestion, Charles S. Morrison, of the Imperial Theatre, put two package boxes, painted red, white and blue in the lobby of the Imperial for the reception of air mail, and the Postmaster put the boxes on the regular collection schedule during the run of The Air Mail at the Imperial.

Not only that, but he permitted Morrison to post ten cards in the Post Office itself with such lines as "Give your words wings—use the Air Mail" and "Expedite—by the air mail." Each card carried a single tie-up line "Imperial."

As a new seaplane was about to be christened by a commercial flying concern, Morrison arranged to have them drop passes on parachutes on the official first flight. It happened that the pilot was one of those who had worked in the picture, and this gave an extra kick to the press stuff.

Any postmaster will collaborate with you on advertising for The Air Mail; even the fourth class offices know that the Department wants all the advertising possible from the feeder towns, and every town is a feeder under the arrangements.

You can at least get information as to where a letter mailed in your town will be sent for aerial handling, how long it will take to reach that point, the hour of dispatch and the time saved in sending to New York or San Francisco.

Extra Publicity

Because the co-operators with Harry S. Dahn, of the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, were big advertisers, the newspapers gave unusual allowance of free space to The Dressmaker from Paris, when this was used for a fashion show.

Montreal is about 75 per cent Catholic in its population, but the fashion show, worked in the Lenten period, drew a heavy business none the less.

Starting a Serial

Putting over The Great Circus Mystery, a serial, Frank H. Burns, used a couple of clowns four days in advance. They were supplied with toy drums and whistles and other noise makers, and plenty of envelopes containing peanuts lettered "Circus food. Have some and then go to the American Theatre to see The Great Circus Mystery."

As most of the patronage on serials comes from the outlying districts, the clowns were instructed to work these sections rather than the business centres. Most of the business crowd go to the Beacham, but the America catches the second run business with smaller prices and Burns sent the men where they would do the most good. The opening day they were pulled into the lobby.

Another Classified

A variant of the telephone stunt was hooked to the classified ad. idea by W. F. Brock, of the Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tenn. He inserted a classified advertisement calling for two women of neat appearance who "must have idle tongues and not afraid to express an opinion." A telephone and the usual box number were given.

Most respondents used the telephone and a surprisingly large number of responses was received. All who applied were courteously told that the positions had been filled, and the information was added that they were to be used for a special stunt on Idle Tongues at the Strand, getting the advertisement over without making the sting apparent.

Display Frame Is Big Money Saver

THE PLAY UP FRAME

Two or three of these frames, particularly if the tops and sides are interchangable, can be made into a variety of devices through repainting and the use of different back draperies, and will give almost a 24-sheet effect to a 3-sheet cutout.

In the Hippodrome these are placed at the building line, in front of the box office and presumably the figure is flood lighted from the top of the arch.

These displays are getting to be more popular every month. Arthur Swanke has a large layout of backs and scores of other managers have sent in one or more good designs. Get busy with your compo board and swing into the procession.

A STRIKING WINDOW FROM A SMALL TOWN HOUSE

This was planted by the Home Theatre, Oblong, Ill., on Abraham Lincoln, and it goes well ahead of the average city display on the same title. The small figures were cut from the stills and lithos and the log hut was made from branches.

Accident Helped

Sometimes the silver lining shows up more strongly than the cloud.

H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., made two stage signs for Forty Winks each with a painted eye with an electric bulb pupil. These were on a flasher circuit.

Something went wrong with the flasher and it only flashed when it darned well pleased with the result that the intermittent winking was decidedly more effective than the regular blink of the timed flash. Naturally Mr. Farley did not have the mechanism fixed until after he took the signs off.

Pasted a Big Stand While Crowd Watched

Although not his biggest stunt, Guy Kennimer's most interesting exploit on The Thundering Herd was to post a 24-sheet stand in the ball park during a training season game between big league teams.

Personal friendship with the man who handled the local end got him permission to post a 24-sheet during one of the games in Jacksonville, and the pasting was done by his crew from the Arcade Theatre just before the game was called, and some 5,000, which is a large crowd for Jax, watched the operation with interest.

He also used a trolley perambulator; which is only the second time one has been used in the town, and the traction company permitted him to banner their overhead wires, a courtesy only once before extended and then for the State Fair.

Car cards and a cross word puzzle hook-up with the newspapers completed a campaign that brought extra money to the till.

Charles Frazer, of the Grand Theatre, borrowed a pair of rails, some ties, a straight and a derailing switch for a curb display on The Signal Tower and batted the picture over to a very nice business. Anyone can borrow that much squipment.

Real Porters

One of the stunts in an elaborate campaign on Excuse Me at the Sun Theatre, Omaha, was the cooperation of the Pullman Company, which detailed two porters to stand inside the entrance of the Theatre and brush off the patrons as they entered through a built up Pullman, which masked the entrance door.

Four special railroad nights were arranged and these proved so popular that two other roads asked for nights.

Frank J. Miller had both Sackcloth and Scarlet for that title in the lobby of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga. Burlap and scarlet cloth covered a compo board cut heart shaped, with a cutout from the three sheets for a centerpiece. It cost less than usual and still gave more than the usual effect.

Syracuse Spaces Used to Advantage

Although the spaces taken by the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, runs around a two fives, except on special occasions, Cliff Lewis has the trick of getting display through contrast and he makes these spaces tell. Here is an 85 by two; less than five inches, in which he puts over Her Night of Romance and has plenty of room in which to make the smaller lengths look like features, too. He gets it all in, but he wastes no space on inch letters. The star gets a 24 and that is the largest letter in the space, but since it is the largest, it makes her the star. Two lines of small type get the story over and that leaves an inch and a quarter for the rest. The entire space is about what the Circle, Indianapolis, uses for the small stuff alone, and the display value is about the same. For the anniversary advertisement; seeing that it was the tenth, he went over into the next column and down the page for about three sixes or 85 lines. Note the "from 1915 to 1925" and the interlaced digits from one to ten. This is a good design for any anniversary stunt that goes beyond the five year period. You need at least five figures to make a good design. Cliff runs a bit strong on all cap lines, but he knows that a 24 point letter is as much larger than a 12 as a 49 over a 24, and with a white space buffer he makes the 24 look like the 48 would in twice the space. It's a simple little trick, but it seems to take years for some pressmen to get it.

SMALL BUT EFFECTIVE

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

THE ANNIVERSARY AD.

Too Much Detail Bad for a Cut

This space of the Garden Theatre, Baltimore, would have been better had the cut carried less detail. This might have been all right had this been eight inches wide, but the illustration is only a trifle over four inches in width, and there is such a mass of detail that it looks dirty, though as a matter of fact it is very well printed. Sketches for use in small ads should depend for their strength on simple lines and masses and not upon intricate design. If this cut is used with poor press work it will go into a puddle of ink. We shudder when we think what would happen to such a cut in Pittsburgh. The space is well proportioned, but the selling line is rather weak. The cut has to do most of the selling, and probably will, though it is badly overdrawn.

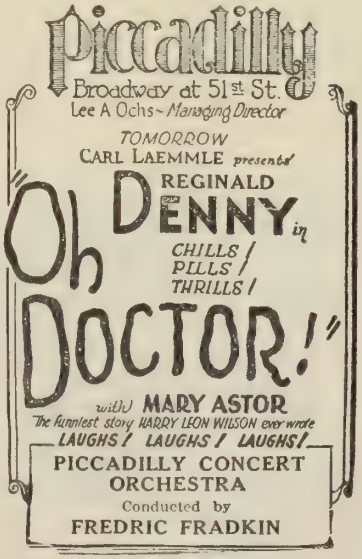
Cross Page Space for Captain Blood

Harry F. Storin took a cross page space for Captain Blood at the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, reproducing two of the New York criticisms and bearing down hard on the fact that Sabatini had won the prize for the best 1924 story. He hooks it to Scaramouche and The Sea Hawk, telling that is is "more romantic than The Sea Hawk, more thrilling than Scaramouche." We don't see how he overlooked the fact that Kerrigan was the lead in The Covered Wagon. That's about all he left out. One good selling point is the announcement of a series of special matinees for the children after school hours on the three week days of the run. He uses an orderly layout in which he is able to put over a number of selling points without interference, and quite apart from the moral argument of size he has turned out an exceptionally good space.

Small Display is Nicely Handled

This advertisement of the Piccadilly Theatre, New York, is the same size as the original. We don't like so much hand lettering, but part of it is necessary in order to get the desired effect. In this space the essential facts are that Reginald Denny and Mary Astor are to be seen in Oh Doctor. In this instance the title has as great a sales value



A Universal Release

as the stars. A lot of the patrons went to see Oh Doctor who met Denny for the first time, for Oh Doctor was sold to them through the serial publication of the story. But between the title and the stars the selling is done. Your first glance at the space gives you Denny and the title, and only a moment later you get Miss Astor's name. Those three items get the black type, and the rest is held back so that they can show up, and show up in a space most managers would consider too small—unless they had to go into some fifteen or twenty papers with high line rates. No matter what the size of the display, whether it is a stingy little three inch single or an entire page, it's a good advertisement if you get the sales factors in a single glance, and if you can do this in three inches it is more to your credit than using a full page. There was a time when a three inch space in the amusement section of a New York paper was a splash. Then Harry Reichenback went to work for Paramount. Probably the only thing that keeps the New York publishers from handing Harry a commission on all the extra advertising he gets for them is the fear that if he got all that money he would retire to live on his income and the advertising would go back to normal. So long as he does it, the other houses feel that they must follow suit; which is very nice for the newspapers, but a bit expensive for the managers.

Plays Local Angles in Hazy Halftones

Looking at it as a work of art, this space from the Liberty theatre, Seattle, is a waste of about two thirds of the space, which is nearly a six seventeens. However we do not believe that the management anticipated any Cut No. 331 better results than this. There is just about enough detail to show that these are cuts and not a reverse background. But probably the Liberty did not care much about the cut reproductions, for the cuts were run merely to permit the captions to be used, and these come up nicely in their little circles like a lot of pill box labels. Frivolous Sal was made on Mount Ranier, and when the fogs do not come up from San Francisco, (or at least the residents call them San Francisco fogs), you can see Ranier from any part of Seattle. In other words this is one per cent. cut and ninety-nine per cent. local appeal, and the local appeal will sell in just that proportion. This is double the Liberty's usual display, but the additional business made the extra cost well worth while, even though you may not be able to see the cuts. You'll note that the announcement does not say that this is the first picture ever made on Ranier, but the first "big" picture, which is something else again. It is good selling, but poor selling would be more of a novelty in the Jensen and von Herberg Seattle houses.

Crude Hand Work Wastes This Space

Silhouette Sketches Enliven a Display

trate the text and at the same time they are placed so as to throw the copy into greater relief through holding it from the spaces on either side. That panel is particularly well set, but the top line to the left of the signature would have been much better had it been set "Oh!" instead of "OH!" It's a small thing, perhaps, but the two letters have so much the same value that at first glance this is passed over, and since the space is paid for, it is just as well to get all out of the space that you can. Compositors never seem to learn that there is value in contrast; that upper and lower can more easily be read than all upper, because there is a break in the level of the letters. All they can see is that a capital is larger than a lower case letter and therefore should give better display. It should, but it doesn't. You can walk over a graveled path more easily than you can over hard ice because the gravel gives you a toe-hold. Lower case gives a visual toe-hold. There is something to hold onto. For that matter you can read "constitutional" more easily that you can "minimum" because some of the letters rise above the rest. But put them both in all caps and they look pretty much alike. You are not writing advertising merely to be looked at. The idea is to make it look so inviting that people read it, and they won't read if the eye has to go skating over a mass of letters of equal height. If you can impress this fact upon your compositor, you can get much better displays.

A Choice of Three in His Prize Offer

New York has several tabloid newspapers which are fighting for circulation, and they will eat up ideas like a small town second run paper. Knowing this and knowing that the class of readers were of the type most likely to be interested in A Thief in Paradise, Victor Shapiro, of the Samuel Goldwyn office tied the Graphic to a 50-word paragraph contest on "What I would want if I were a Thief in Paradise."

The newspaper got back of the idea with all its energy and gave a boost to the business the week it played the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, with a slop-over for the Brooklyn house.

The big kick of the idea was the prize offer. The winner had three choices, a hundred dollar bill, a screen test, looking toward an engagement in a picture or an evening with the stars in the production.

You can't offer a similar layout of prizes, but if you can give a choice you'll put an extra kick into any essays contest and at the same time give the newspapers more to write about.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Tannersville, N. Y., Theatre Observes 15th Anniversary

Julius J. Byck, owner of the Rudolph Theatre, Tannersville, N. Y., may be somewhat handicapped because he is deaf and dumb, but as for being "dumb" in a business sense he is far from it. Mr. Byck was in town last week, booking pictures for the months to come and incidentally announcing that his theatre will observe its fifteenth anniversary from May 2 to June 6, during which time one ticket will be given free with every paid admission. The theatre was opened on May 2 fifteen years ago. Mr. Byck has owned the house ten years, during which it has become one of the leading picture theatres in the Catskill region. In connection with the anniversary month, Mr. Byck has put out an unusual program of about twenty pages, containing a complete list of all pictures to be shown at the theatre during the anniversary month. The cost of the program was met by a large number of advertisements secured by Mr. Byck and which included other theatres in the Catskill region.

The second Sunday under daylight saving did not present the slump in business that characterized the first Sunday. Split weeks are prevailing, however, at both the Troy and Lincoln theatres in Troy and will continue throughout the summer. Cool weather throughout the week brought additional business to all theatres. The Mark Strand in Albany played to exceptional business during the week with "Declasse."

Ben Young of Whitney and Young of Ilion, building a new picture theatre in that city, is going on the policy that if a person doesn't feel inclined to enjoy himself at one type of entertainment something else should be afforded him. With that thought, the new theatre contains a dance hall, billiard and pool rooms and bowling alleys, as well as three or four stores. The building will be opened in the early fall. Mr. Young is an old time showman who started a number of years ago and who found sledding so hard at first that it was a question at the end of each week whether or not he would continue for another six days.

When Oscar Perrin, handling the Leland and Clinton Square theatres in Albany and the Empire in Glens Falls, wants to know anything he just naturally inquires. The orchestra at the Empire has been supplanted by an organ presided over by Leland F. Benger of New York City. Mr. Perrin was on hand a week ago when the organ was dedicated, and standing by the door of the theatre, inquired of everyone whether they preferred the organ or the orchestra. Eight out of ten favored the organ. Incidentally, Mr. Perrin observed his birthday during the past week but absolutely refused to divulge just how many years.

There is at least one honest person in Troy, although possibly there may be 75,000, the present population of the city. At any rate, Walter Roberts, manager of the Troy Theatre, received a letter last week which ran as follows: "I found a lady's ring in the ladies' room. I meant to speak about it when I left the theatre but forgot to." The letter continued by saying that the person could have the ring by proving ownership.

Exhibitors doing business with Albany exchanges will be interested in a couple of changes during the past week. Charles Stombaugh, who came here from Minneapolis several months ago to manage the Pathe exchange, has been transferred to New York and succeeded by Leon Medem, a salesman, who has been connected with the local office for several months. Sigbert Wittman, who came here from Philadelphia to handle the Universal exchange, has returned to the Quaker City and is succeeded by H. C. Bissell, a salesman with the local office.

Seena Owen in "Faint Perfume," a B. P. Schulberg production.

Among the visitors along Film Row during the past week were F. C. Chase of Pine Plains, who is doing quite a bit of booking; Fred Shelley of Amsterdam and Mrs. L. L. Connors of the Victory in Cambridge. John Mattice, who runs the Novelty in Middleburg, was along the Row. A. W. Goodman of the Orpheum in Utica was in town, booking.

When it comes to being a real Colleen Moore fan, few have anything on Patrick Quinlan, who runs the Ideal in Chateaugay. When Mr. Quinlan named his granddaughter "Colleen," he wrote Miss Moore of the fact and now he is showing his many friends a letter which he has received, together with an autographed photograph of the well known star.

Lew Fischer, who has the New Theatre in Hoosick Falls along with four other houses, found his theatre taking second place the other week in town talk, for a skeleton had been unearthed a few hundred feet from the theatre and caused all sorts of excitement in the village. The police are working on the case and Mr. Fischer will be rather glad when things settle down once more to normal.

Mrs. Carpenter, who runs a picture theatre in Lake George, is planning to open for the summer on May 16. Her son-in-law, who is traveling the vaudeville circuit, is expected to arrive in the resort town the last of June and will help her for the rest of the season.

When Roberts and Jarvis of the Troy Theatre beat Stern and Gamble, also of the same house, by a matter of 66 pins in three games for a five dollar side bet on the Troy alleys a few nights ago, Ben Stern was unaware that he was being framed. It happened that they wanted to give Mr. Stern something to worry over, and so a deal was fixed by which his partner was to lay off from his usual form and Ben would naturally hand over the five dollars when the three games were over. It worked to perfection, but the only trouble was that Roberts was as much worried as Stern, for his partner, Jarvis, instead of rolling his usual good game, took a slump and it was all the two could do to trim Stern and Gamble. Mr. Stern forked over the five-spot, but a few days later it was returned to him and since then he has been wondering what it was all about.

Meyer Schine of Gloversville, head of the Schine circuit of fifty-odd theatres and president of the Albany Zone Committee, is the only exhibitor from this section of the state attending the Milwaukee convention.

The Rialto in Frankfort, which was taken over by Thomas Dooley some little time ago, has closed.

W. W. Mase of Prattsville must make hay while the sun shines with the Hippodrome in Gilboa. The village will be inundated in connection with the construction of a huge reservoir. It is only a question of time when the Hippodrome will be wiped out of existence. Mr. Mase, however, has another house in Prattsville.

From Office Boy to Official Describes McFaul's Career

From office boy to vice president is the romantic career of Vincent R. McFaul, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, who after a quarter century of faithful service has just been elected vice-president of the Shea Amusement Company, succeeding the late Henry Carr. Mr. McFaul started twenty-five years ago as office boy for Mr. Shea in his old Garden (vaudeville) Theatre. Later he became treasurer of the house. Then when Mr. Shea took over the big Park Theatre in Court street and named it Shea's Court Street Theatre, Mr. McFaul was appointed treasurer there. He remained at this post many years.

His next step upward was his appointment to the management of the Criterion Theatre which Mr. Shea and Paramount operated for a few years before it was razed to make way for a business structure soon to be built. When Harold B. Franklin was called from the management of Shea's Hippodrome to assume the directorship of the Famous Players-Lasky theatre department, Mr. McFaul was named managing director of the big Buffalo picture palace and he has made a wonderful success of the institution.

As a reward for his long and faithful service the company has now named him a vice president and it is understood that when Mr. Shea's mammoth new Buffalo Theatre opens in 1926, Mr. McFaul will be seen in the manager's office. A square-shooter, quiet in manner, unostentatious and, above all, a hard worker, Mr. McFaul is one of the most popular exhibitors in the state. He is treasurer of Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc.

The Schine Theatrical Company of Gloversville, N. Y., continues to extend its chain of houses in New York State. The Regent Theatre in Corning has now been purchased by the Schine interests, which also control the Princess and State in the same city. The house was owned by John Maloney and the purchase price is said to have been around $40,000. The Regent formerly was leased by G. H. Tobias, owner of the Princess. The Regent has been dark for the last two years.

As ordered by Justice Hinkley, a permit has been issued to Simon Wertheimer to build a picture theatre at 1386 Hertel avenue at a cost of $100,000. Mr. Wertheimer plans to begin work on the structure at once.

William A. Calihan, general manager of the Regorson Corporation, is the new president of the Rochester Theatrical Managers' Association. Other new officers are: Floyd J. Menelley, vice president; Howard Shannon, secretary and Herbert C. Kelley, treasurer.

The office force of the Eastman Kodak Company, numbering about 1,200, now can boast a theatre of its own. In the new five story building recently added to the State street group in Rochester an entire floor has been set aside for use of the workers. The theatre is 80 feet wide, 150 feet long and 20 feet high and has a seating capacity of 1200.

The Palace Theatre in Olean has been reopened by the Bordonaro brothers. This house was damaged by fire several months ago. It has been remodeled and redecorated. Pictures and vaudeville is the new policy. The Palace is a link in the Affiliated Theatres Corporation chain.

A film to aid the Rochester Charity Chest campaign is being shown in twenty-seven picture theatres in Kodak Town this week. The showing is made possible through the co-operation of the Rochester exhibitors. Jules Greenstone, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has arranged the schedule.

Mike Dillon, projectionist at Shea's Court Street Theatre for twenty years or so, dropped dead the other night on his way home from the theatre. Mr. Dillon was a charter member of Buffalo Operators' Union, No. 233.

Eugene A. Pfeil, manager of the Circle Theatre, has taken to emulating the Prince of Wales. Gene goes over to the Delaware Park meadows all dressed up by Hoot Gibson and rides a mean broncho around the field. To date Gene has put over some great stunts, most of them consisting of sliding off the horse to the greensward far below. Gene is considering seriously of sticking to his flivver which is a trifle less strenuous.

Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, is jamming 'em these days with his picture-vaudeville policy. The house is crowded every night, with much of the business coming from across the border. The Canadians appreciate the liberal policy at the Bellevue.

Connecticut

Siebert's Opera House in East Hampton nearly was destroyed by fire on May 5. Damage to the large building amounted to $1,000.

R. H. Brandt of Boston, now operating the Cameo Theatre in Bridgeport, is without union employes. Inasmuch as he does not conduct the house on a continuous show policy, he discharged a relief projectionist and relief organist. Then the unions called out their men.

Albany, N. Y.

"It's like going to a matinee," remarked Lew Fischer as he described the effects of daylight saving to his houses in Fort Edward, Hoosick Falls and Chatham, where receipts have fallen off 25 per cent since a couple of weeks ago. The house in Ticonderoga is panning out exceptionally well these days, according to Mr. Fischer, who also adds that he has one of the most wonderful violinists in the country playing at that house.

Still smiling and as happy as they make them, John Augello of the Family Theatre in Utica was along Film Row the past week. Mr. Augello seemed to have plenty of money, for he booked up some twenty-odd pictures and remarked that business was good.

L. H. Smith of Valley Falls opened a theatre in Johnsonville last Friday. The Rex in Middleburg is now running two nights a week.

Norma Suckno, manager of the Albany Theatre in Albany, isn't afraid to work. The other day she was found digging out the office and with hands so black that when she greeted an employe in one of the local film exchanges, who later on had occasion to wipe his face, the imprint of her toil was transferred to his countenance.

Ben Apple of the King in Troy gets no further these days than reading the bowling scores in the papers of the Collar City. He hasn't been able to bowl a single game since his knee went bad last fall.

The many friends of Tony Veiller, manager of the Lincoln in Troy, will be gratified at the news that Mrs. Veiller, who underwent an operation at the Samaritan Hospital in Troy a week or so ago, is on the road to recovery. But maybe Tony wasn't worried for two or three days. If anyone had asked him what picture was playing at the Lincoln he probably wouldn't have been able to tell.

Joe Saperstein of the Griswold in Troy is following the policy of Jake Golden of Harmanus Bleecker Hall in Albany and staging a Charleston dance contest the fore part of each week.

Canada

The Moulin Rouge, one of the truly historical picture theatres of Canada, which has been operated on St. Catherine and Amherst streets, Montreal, for many years, is slated for demolition to make way for an office skyscraper. The Moulin Rouge has lately been under the direction of J. L. Petanaude of Montreal, who is also the proprietor of the Francais and Alexander theatres of Montreal.

The Strand Theatre, Brandon, Manitoba, is now under the management of Charles L. Straw, for a number of years manager of the Starland Theatre at Winnipeg.

During the week of May 4, Manager Tommy Logan of the Capitol Theatre, London, Ontario, had a special lobby attraction for publicity purposes in an exhibit consisting of the oldest Ford car in Canada. This was a Model A two-cylinder Ford, made in 1902. It was driven to the theatre for the exhibition and Manager Logan got plenty of newspaper attention. The current attraction was "Miss Bluebeard."

Maine

Abraham Goodside very properly observed Music Week at his Strand Theatre in Portland. At the evening shows he presented as an added attraction an orchestra composed of seventy-five Portland musicians. They were directed by Arthur F. Kendall, leader of the regular Strand orchestra.

Massachusetts Exhibitor News

The two selectmen of Milford have granted a permit for Sunday motion picture shows. No hearing was held on the matter and as a result some of the ministers have taken exception to the action of the officials. The clergymen say that an opportunity should have been afforded for protest or hearing on the Sunday amusement question.

John W. Hawkins, who was general manager of the Allen circuit of theatres in New Bedford, now is manager of Gordon's Theatre in Brockton. Mr. Hawkins took his position following the sale of the Allen theatres several weeks ago.

The Hotels Statler Company has acquired the Selwyn Theatre in Boston at a cost said to be more than $600,000. Statler has considered the erection of a hotel on the plot of land, part of which is occupied by the Selwyn. The house was built in 1911 by John Cort.

Fire caused a loss of more than $40,000 in the Wakefield Theatre block in Wakefield. The entire structure virtually was gutted.

A large number of amusement parks in Massachusetts and other of the New England states will inaugurate picture shows this season. At many of them the films will be presented at dance halls and pavilions, with the policy to be that of alternating between reels and dancing.

Fred Frechette, manager of the Playhouse Theatre in Chicopee Center, has found it just as profitable to co-operate with the Girl Scouts as it is with the boys' organization. He conducted a Girl Scouts' Night and it went over big.

The contract for the erection of the new Needham Theatre in Needham has been awarded and construction now is in progress. The estimated cost is $130,000.

B. F. Keith's Theatre in Lowell will close on May 30.

Thomas F. Fitzgerald, popular Springfield exhibitor, is to dispose of the Phillips Theatre to Harry Cohen, former manager of the Strand. Mr. Cohen had planned to build a picture theatre in the Forest Park section, where the Phillips is located, but has abandoned this project since deciding to take over Mr. Fitzgerald's theatre. The latter has conducted the house for three years, having acquired it from Harry P. Baldwin. Since the death of his wife a few months ago, Mr. Fitzgerald has expressed a desire to dispose of the Phillips Theatre. He is a son of former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald of Boston.

Michigan

The Lakewood Theatre, one of the oldest in the Jefferson avenue section of Detroit, has been made a member of the Henry S. Koppin string. Mr. Koppin's string of neighborhood houses now numbers close to twenty-five.

W. S. Butterfield, president of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprises, with offices in Detroit, is back from a two months' trip abroad. Mr. Butterfield's bride accompanied him.

The offices of the James N. Robertson Theatrical Enterprises, operating the Cinderella, De Luxe and Roosevelt theatres, have been moved from the Cinderella to the Roosevelt. The new Roosevelt is scheduled to open in August.

Harry White, proprietor of the Beechwood Theatre, has returned to home and business after spending the winter in Lake Worth, Fla.

Charles F. Gorman is planning the erection of an addition to Gorman's Theatre in Roslindale.

A balcony will be added to the Jamaica Theatre at Jamaica Plain. Other alterations also will be made on the house, which is operated by New England Theatres.

A charter of incorporation has been granted the Crescent Operating Company of Lynn, which will operate and manage theatres, picture houses, dance halls, etc. The capital is $10,000, consisting of 100 shares at $100 each. The president is Harry I. Tupman; treasurer, Marion P. Dodge.

Jeremiah Campopiano will build a theatre on Common street in Lawrence at an estimated cost of $75,000. The building will be of brick and of two stories.

Pittsburgh

The M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania since May 1 have been located in the new headquarters in Room 5 on the parlor floor of the Hotel Henry, Pittsburgh. The new quarters are centrally located and afford three times as much room as was the case in the old location. The office rooms are handsomely furnished. Secretary Fred J. Herrington is in charge and he wants all of the local exhibitors to drop in and inspect the new quarters. Exhibitors from other parts of the country are invited to make the organization's rooms their headquarters while in this city. The telephone number is now Atlantic 1217, and exhibitors are requested to jot this number down for future reference.

Q. R. Capuzzi, owner of the Princess Theatre, Republic was among the Film Row visitors recently. Capuzzi says business is very quiet and he's going to start advertising harder than ever to get the crowds back.

R. J. La Voise, recently appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, Huntington, W. Va., made his first trip to Pittsburgh's Film Row in the interests of his new capacity a week ago. La Voise was at one time manager of the Cameraphone in East Liberty.

Cincinnati

The Overlook Theatre Company, Cincinnati, recently incorporated for $50,000, will build a 500-seat house on Rulison avenue, a suburban location. Zanesville, Ohio, is also to have a new theatre, Caldwell H. Brown of that city having purchased a site at a reported cost of $150,000. Brown says he will erect one of the most elaborate theatres in that section of the state. Among recent changes is noted the sale of the Pleasant Hour Theatre, Woodsfield, Ohio, which has been purchased by Fred Clemens from the former owner, Fred Norris. The Park Theatre, Millersburg, Ohio, has passed out of existence, having been sold recently by L. V. Stillwell. The purchasers will convert the building into a storage warehouse. At Lima, Ohio, the Majestic has been purchased by Al Ritzler, who will manage the house. W. F. Troth, Pleasant City, Ohio, who formerly owned the Liberty Theatre there, has repurchased the house from L. Troyan.

Charlie Chaplin in his first United Artists release, "The Gold Rush."

Allen T. Simmons, owner of the Allen and Dome theatres, Akron, Ohio, has installed a complete radio broadcasting station in the Hotel Portage.

A 99-year lease on the site of the B. F. Keith Theatre, Akron, Ohio, being built on South High street, has been assigned to the the Akron Operating Company of New York, a holding company, by the holders of the lease, the Akron Enterprises Company. The yearly rental on the property will be $310,000. The house will seat 2,000.

Free street moving pictures will again be the vogue at Prairie Depot, Ohio. The business men of the town, regarded as pioneers of the open-air street film entertainment, will conduct the movies all summer, certain nights being designated for the showings.

Robert Booth of Nebraska City has installed a new ventilating system in his theatre.

Charles Sartories has opened a new theatre at Hartley, Ia.

E. J. Ashton plans to reopen the Royal at Gering, Neb., which has been closed for nearly a year.

Milwaukee

Considerable interest is being displayed in first-run row in Milwaukee over the disposition of the 1925 crop of Metro-Goldwyn product. O. J. Wooden of the Alhambra is understood to be highly desirous of obtaining the pictures in order to compete effectively with the Saxe houses which have First National and Famous Players sewed up.

Thomas Saxe, on the other hand, also is reported as being after the Metro-Goldwyn product and, if successful, would leave the Alhambra, his only real competitor, out in the cold as far as pictures of the "big three" are concerned. Such a move would compel Wooden to depend mainly on Warner Brothers.

In this connection it is recalled that Saxe sprang a coup by lining up the Paramount output after it had generally been believed that Wooden would swing those pictures to his house.

The Merrill building, in which is located the Merrill Theatre, which the Saxe chain acquired several months ago from the Ascher Brothers, has been sold to the Kresge interests, according to information coming from a reliable source. The eight-story structure is to be remodeled or replaced by a new building, it is reported, but apparently this will not take place for some time.

At the time that Saxe took over control of the theatre there were reports that a deal had been pending for the entire building, but at that time it was explained that a jeweler holding a long term lease had blocked such a transaction by refusing to vacate. The jeweler's opposition now has been overcome and as a result the deal has gone through, according to the reports.

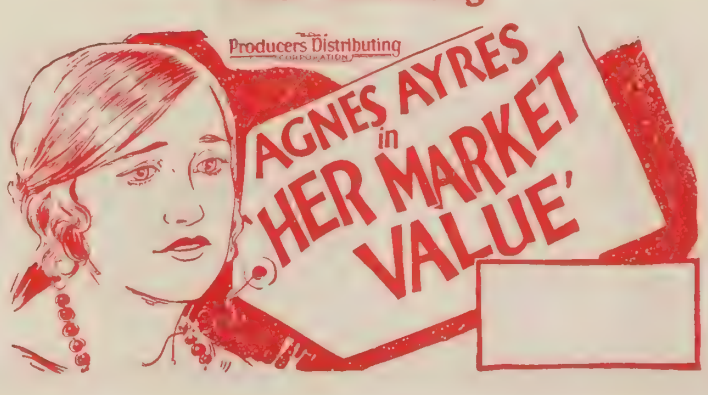
Louis Sounek, who has been managing Silliman's Juneau Theatre in Milwaukee, is slated for the management of the Riviera, largest of the four houses recently acquired by the Silliman chain from the Rice and Cohen interests. Eddie Lazoff, until recently assistant manager at Saxe's Merrill, is expected to succeed Sounek at the Juneau. Who will get the management of the State, second largest house in the Rice and Cohen chain, has not yet been decided. Leo Grossman, who operated the Fern for the Rice and Cohen interests, is expected to be retained there by the Silliman organization.

Arkansas

Austin Barker has been appointed manager of the Lyric Theatre at Harrison, Ark.

Mrs. William Hargis has purchased the Ozark Theatre at Ozark, Ark., from Herman Hunt.

Charles T. Abels has purchased the Rialto Theatre Building at Little Rock, Ark., for about $80,000.



Kansas

A most unusual theatre robbery occurred in Kansas City last week. Separated by an interval of only a few hours, two robberies were committed, one in which the Orpheum Theatre was robbed of $2,400 and the other in which members of the cast appearing at the Orpheum were robbed of money and valuables amounting to $3,330.

As Lawrence Taylor, assistant treasurer of the theatre, started to take the box office receipts to a downtown bank two bandits leaped upon him and a guard, shot and dangerously wounded the guard and escaped with the money. A few hours prior to that Al Herman, who was visiting at the home of his brother, Isaac Reicher, and several other members of the cast, enjoying a sociable poker party, were interupted by two bandits who entered the house and held up the entire crowd.

A deed recorded in Kansas City reveals the purchaser of the fee title of the Pantages Theatre lobby to be the Gary Realty Company of Kansas City. The theatre tower and parts of the theatre on the narrow strip comprising the lobby were estimated to represent a building cost of $200,000.

A drive to reinstate every member who is behind in dues will be begun by the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, according to C. E. Cook, business manager, who is contemplating another trip through the territory.

"We will give all exhibitors a fair chance to come in, in accordance with the resolution adopted at the recent convention, before they are dropped," Mr. Cook said. "But exhibitors are to be asked only once to come into the organization—and that means once."

Milton Feld, managing director of the Newman and Royal theatres, Kansas City, will go to Los Angeles with Frank L. Newman, owner of the theatres, to become manager of productions for Paramount, Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Paramount theatres, said in Kansas City last week.

When the task of exploiting something is left to Gus Eyssell, treasurer of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, he usually does a good job of it. Last week the Kansas City American Association baseball club opened its season on the home lot. Mr. Eyssell lost no time in sending out his cameraman to obtain a film of the game and issue invitations to both the Kansas City and Toledo teams to be his guests that night. It was worth fair space in all newspapers, drawing many baseball fans.

The deal whereby Universal takes over the Hostettler chain of theatres in the Kansas City territory has been definitely closed, according to W. E. Truog, Universal district manager. It has not been definitely determined when the transfer will be made, it was said.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market last week were: C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kans.; F. G. Weary, Ferris Theatre, Richmond, Mo.; Charles Sears, Sears Circuit, Nevada, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit, Jefferson, Springfield, Mo.; L. M. Miller, Miller Theatres, Wichita, Kans.; C. C. Christian, Beyer Theatre, Excelsior Springs, Mo.

Oklahoma

Fred Pickerel is installing a new Blizzard cooling system with 145,000 cubic feet of air per minute in his Murray Theatre at Ponca City, Okla.

A Typhoon cooling system is being installed in the Queen Theatre at Madill, Okla.

New Typhoon fans are being installed in the Wilson Theatre at Wilson, Okla.

Palmer Bybee has been appointed manager of the Gem Theatre at Frederick, Okla.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Associated Exhibitors

PRICE OF A PARTY. (5,315 feet). Star cast. Jazz from start to finish. The "covering capacity" of some of the costumes was very limited and really shocked the better class. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

WOMAN WHO SINNED. (6,500 feet). Star, Mae Busch. Just fair program picture, drags somewhat but should get by. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

F. B. O.

AMERICAN MANNERS. (5,200 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. While this is a good action picture, Dick isn't quite himself yet. He did more work when with State Rights; however, it was good entertainment and drew the crowd. The print was slashed terribly and this is a bad thing in the continuity of an action picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

DAMAGED HEARTS. Star cast. Very good program drama story of the Florida everglades and would call it very interesting and highly entertaining. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

DAMAGED HEARTS. Star cast. Very good out door picture sold right and should please and bring the small house some business. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Small town and farmers class town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

GALLOPING VENGEANCE. Star, Bob Custer. A fair picture. Good flood scene. Can't say he is as good as Fred Thomson. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Farm class town of 250. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (160 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

LIFE'S GREATEST GAME. (7,010 feet). Star, John Walker. Went over big. Fine exploitation ideas. Get it and push it. It's bound to please. Fine print and attractive advertising. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Coal miners town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo & Kopuster, Eagle Theatre (300 seats), Livingston, Illinois.

RANGE TERROR. (4,738 feet). Star, Bob Custer. These are fair western program pictures and I have found the whole series of Thompsons, Custers, and Flynns that F. B. O. are releasing to be very good western program pictures. These are not in a class with Mix, Gibson and Carey, however. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

WHITE SIN. Star, Madge Bellamy. Another F. B. O. picture that made good for me. Everyone that spoke to me about it complimented it highly. F. B. O. makes good for me consistently. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

These dependable tips come from exhibitors who tell the truth about pictures to help you book your program intelligently. "It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man," is their motto.

Use the tips; follow the advice of exhibitors who agree with your experience on pictures you both have run.

Send tips to help others. This is your department, run for you and maintained by your good-will.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. Star, George Billings. Impressive, once seen never forgotten, also historically correct, tied up with the schools and did business. A real box office attraction if exploited correctly. Billings performance wonderful and convincing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

ASHES OF VENGEANCE. (10 reels). Star, Norma Talmadge. Norma hasn't sent through a dud yet. This one is a costume picture of the old English type that is usually booed at here, but Norma made them like it. It's not new but it's good. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30, 25-50 for specials, Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

BELL BOY 13. (3,940 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A fair comedy drama. Not as good as we expected. Somehow this star's pictures do not appeal here as they should. Even at that, the picture is not bad either. Would say, "Don't break your neck to book it." Tone, just fair. Town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

BORN RICH. (9,759 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. Picture for the younger set, depicting the jazz age. Extremely modern and descriptive of the pace that kills. Will please most people and there is not a dull moment in the picture. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Undoubtedly the best picture of this star since "Tol'able David." It is a picture you can go the limit on in advertising. Failed to do business here but no fault of this picture. It is there one hundred per cent. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Industrial town, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. To the Lyceum and Chatauqua crowd "good" but the picture fan knows it's not there. I am losing all respect for the so-called high class stuff. No tone. Sunday, yes. Small town class town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Here's a real picture! Positively the best Dick has made in a long while. Should please anywhere and anybody. Go after this one, strong, boys. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-30. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star cast. Here's a very novel story of married life that seemed to please our patrons. The acting was very clever and so was the story. It's a fair drawing card in a small town if you advertise it right. The heralds are good. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre (150 seats), Hancock, Wisconsin.

EAST IS WEST. (7,737 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. This is an oriental tale of a Chinese girl with life in China and later scenes in Chinatown, San Francisco. The plot is built on the escape of a Chinese maiden from a horrible marriage through the aid of a friendly American youth who marries her when it is proven that she is a white girl. You can always count on Constance Talmadge for capable acting but she is much better in plays like "The Goldfish" and "Learning to Love." It is a picture that will please if you like melodrama and bunkum. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

FLIRTING WITH LOVE. (6,926 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. A very pleasing picture.

Good society drama that went over well. Rental too high for my town. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

HOTTENTOT. (5,053 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Old, but did a good business and had many favorable comments. MacLean's comedy stuff is great. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

HOTTENTOT. (5,053 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Personally, I thought this was about as good as any comedy-drama I have ever run, but for some unknown reason it failed to draw more than an average crowd and did not cause much comment. Nevertheless, I'd say, "book it." With proper exploitation it should draw good and please the majority. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre (150 seats), Hancock, Wisconsin.

HUSBANDS AND LOVERS. (7,883 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. A very good and high class picture with fine direction. Everybody seemed to like it. Picture of the eternal triangle. Two men and a woman. Tone, only fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

KINDRED OF THE DUST. (8,500 feet). Star cast. We had our play dates mixed up on "The Hottentot" and as soon as we found out that it wasn't coming until two weeks later we wired First National and asked them to send us another feature in order to avoid a dark house. They sent us another picture, "Kindred of the Dust," a Peter B. Kyne story, and it was a dandy. We are glad we played it. We certainly have to hand it to First National for service and courtesy. Their prints are fine and they treat you right. One only need to visit the exchange at Milwaukee, to understand why it is possible for them to give this service. Tone, fair. Sunday, probably not. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

LEARNING TO LOVE. (6,000 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Best Constance Talmadge have had in some time. The kind that she used to draw them in with. A few more like it and she will be drawing as she used to. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams Jr., Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

LOVE MASTER. (6,779 feet). Star, Strongheart. An old picture but a good one. Wonderful scenery. Dog does fine work. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Straight From the Shoulder started out in small space but with big ideas—to be the most sincere, most dependable tip department possible.

Straight From the Shoulder grew and thrived on its basic idea, because it attracted to itself the highest class of exhibitors—honest men, unselfish men, and some ladies we have been proud to acclaim as the highest type of womanhood in the exhibiting field.

Straight From the Shoulder stands today a monument to no dead and buried ideas, but as a living testimony to the generosity and to the sincerity of the folks who helped start it, who have helped keep it going, who have sustained its ideals.

Straight From the Shoulder will keep on being what the boys on the next page say it is—and they've helped to make it so, too.

VAN.

LOVE'S WILDERNESS. (7,057 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. A good picture at least one reel too long and the scene showing birth of babies unnecessary and disgusting. Tone, hundreds like it. Sunday, maybe. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Small town class town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

MARRIAGE CHEAT. (7 reels). Star cast. Good picture of its kind but am fed up and disgusted with the kind. Eternal triangle and birth of babies on screen are the bunk. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Small town class town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,026 feet). Star, Dorothy MacKaill. Wowie. This is some picture. We played it for the Thanksgiving season and it pleased the majority of those who saw it. The acting of MacKaill was splendid. This picture although old now, is worth a play date in any theatre. We found it quite suitable for Thanksgiving. Grab it, boys. Tone, okay. Town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

MONEY, MONEY, MONEY. (5,986 feet). Star, Katherine McDonald. First Katherine MacDonald picture we ever showed here and probably the last. Still, the picture's not so worse, but Katherine will have to do more than "look beautiful" if she ever intends to stun the crowd. Tone, fair. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A., Hancock, Wisconsin.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (7,700 feet). Star cast. Good. Pleased all who saw it. Good Sunday or any other day. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

RIVER'S END. (5,750 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. This was a reprint and certainly shows the advancement of the pictures during five years as this was a great picture in its day but would be just an ordinary program picture of today, but it pleased most of them and was bought very cheap. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

SCARS OF JEALOUSY. Star cast. A good entertaining picture with a forest fire climax that is a hair-raiser. If you can get them in to see this they won't be disappointed. First time we have seen Frank Keenan for quite a while. He's the same old Frank, and is a dandy good actor. Tone, good. Town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Here is a 'big' picture. It is long but not from being padded. One gets the impression that every inch of film is needed to tell the story that Sabatini is responsible for. No more need be said. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30, 25-50. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WHAT A WIFE LEARNED. (5,700 feet). Star, Marguerite De La Motte. A fairly good picture but not a drawing card. Several said that John Bowers was too ugly and mean, which spoiled the picture for them. It will get by no doubt but it certainly is no special as they would have you believe in the press sheet. Tone, good. Town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN. (6,910 feet). Star cast. A good picture. Did a good business. Some did not like the way the story ended. That was the only kick. Sunday, yes. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

Fox

BRASS BOWL. (5,861 feet). Star, Edmund Lowe. This is the best of the Lowe series to date. Has that mystery element that sustains interest from beginning to end. By far better than some of the Fox specials. Fair appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

CURLYTOP. (5,328 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star cast. This is absolutely the best special Fox has sent me of the 1924-25 output. People are still talking about it. When you get it put out double advertising 'cause you have something unusual. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star cast. The kind the fans eat up. Melodramatic. Action good, cast, good, photography good. Give us more like it. "Entertainment Pictures." Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Maybe suitable for special. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Small town class town of 2,517. Admission 10-

"Our Gang" Inspires Tributes

"The first thing I look for when I receive the "WORLD" is the STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER FILM REPORT page. Enough said." U. A. Ponsant, Bijou Theatre, Waterville, Maine.

"Dear Van and 'Gang'—Received too many stamped envelopes so I am returning a bunch of them. Your exhibitor's reports section is the most beneficial of any of the departments, from a showman's standpoint, and in my estimation is far better and more complete than similar departments found in any of the other leading trade magazines.

"Let the good work go on. Yours truly."—J. D. Warnack, Mgr. Luna Theatre, Battle Creek, Iowa.

25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

DANTE'S INFERNO. (5,680 feet). Star cast. The poorest thing at the box office since Hector was a pup. Why do producers have to resort to such stuff for pictures. Tone, no. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

EYES OF THE FOREST. (5 reels). Star, Tom Mix. This is the kind of picture that brings a full house and keeps them interested all the way through. Not a blood thirsty cut throat show but a well made western that holds the interest. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety percent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30, special 25-50. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

HEARTS OF OAK. (5,326 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. Some liked this and some did not a little too sad and people do not want this weepy stuff any more. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

IF WINTER COMES. (10 reels). Star, Percy Marmont. Another old one but everyone I talked with was highly pleased. However, it didn't pull so well at the box office, but no fault of the picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Family and transient class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

LAST MAN ON EARTH. Star, Earl Fox. Here is something new. A novelty that packed them in and kept them roaring. Advertising on this is good. If your audience wants a change give them this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Coal miners town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo & Kopuster, Eagle Theatre (300 seats), Livingston, Illinois.

MAN WHO PLAYED SQUARE. (6,700 feet). Star, Buck Jones. An A-1 western. Good action, good directing, and very little hokum. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. All classes city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

MAN WHO PLAYED SQUARE. (6,700 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Here's one from Fox that is a special when it comes to thrillers. Wanda Hawley and the entire cast are extra good. Buck never was better Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

NORTH OF HUDSON BAY. (6 reels). Star, Tom Mix. About an average Mix. Situations in the story seemed rather forced. Some wonderful winter mountain scenery. Some canoes in the rapids. Business that is as good as I ever saw. This is the picture in which Tom seeks refuge from wolves in a pit, and about half a dozen pile in after him. He fights the bunch bare handed. Wow! However, it's the stuff that we all love to see Tom do. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Fair appeal. Village and rural class town of 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

SHADOWS OF THE EAST. (5,874 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Another one forced on me. Rental charged twice too much. Lost money on it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special no, just above a program picture. Poor audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Buck Jones the cowboy is what they want not Charles Algernon Jones, the Dude. Fox has done right to put this boy back into westerns and this picture is as good as any of them and will please everyone. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Metro-Goldwyn

ARAB. (6,710 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. Not a bad show, but after having seen Norma Talmadge in "The Song of Love" this looked like thirty cents. Made in a spectacular way and using many thousands of feet of celluloid, it might have been fine in five reels. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30, 25-50 for specials. Henry W. Nauman, Mose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

BREAD. (6,726 feet). Star cast. Played three days to fair business. Picture good entertainment but failed to draw. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

DADDY'S GONE A HUNTING. (5,831 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. A pathos drama somewhat heavy for our house but it went over okay as a program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeals to all classes. Better class town of 4,000. Admission 10-30. Jos. Angros Jr., Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 feet). Star, Alice Terry. Did a good business on this one. Boys, this is great. Go after it strong. It will stand up for anything you can say about it. Two good pulling stars in this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeals to all classes. Better class town of 4,000. Admission 10-30. Jos. Angros Jr., Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A good special. This one drew pretty good. This is worth getting behind. Lon Chaney is wonderful in this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Better class town of 4,000. Admission 10-30. Jos. Angros Jr., Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Opened up to a good Saturday but fell down badly Monday and Tuesday. Acting was good but the title did not draw. I got slapped. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 15-35. Ed Malhoit, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

LADY OF THE NIGHT. (5,441 feet). Star, Norma Shearer. Nothing to this one. Not worth running through the machines. No plot, no audience appeal. Weakest picture we have gotten from Metro-Goldwyn. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Better class town of 4,000. Admission 10-30. Jos. Angros Jr., Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE ROBINSON CRUSOE. (6,216 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Very good picture for the kids, it will suit most anyone. Drew fine for me. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

MONSTER. (6,435 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This is not a special. Watch your foot. Just a program picture. Some good serial stuff in this one. Okay if you buy it as a program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty per cent. Better class town of 4,000. Admission 10-30. Jos. Angros Jr., Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

RAGMAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. I did a wonderful children business the first day (Saturday) and it kept up fairly well although I do not think it as good as the run of Coogan's. Tone, fair. Sunday, no Special, questionable. Appeals to children. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 15-35. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

SEVEN CHANCES. Star, Buster Keaton. A little slow getting started but the last two reels are a scream. Better than average for this star. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

SILENT ACCUSER. (6 reels). Star cast. Very good production. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs.

J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SINNERS IN SILK. (5,750 feet). Star cast. Good society drama that will please any audience that like them, all characters played their part well. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams Jr., Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

WOMEN WHO GIVE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. This title is a fizzle. People think it is another one of them sexy sex trash pictures and stay away. This one is a mighty fine show and the title of the book "Cape Cod Folks" would bring the crowd. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30, 25-50. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Paramount

ALASKAN. (6,758 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This picture will draw the first night fine owning to the popularity of the star and the fact that it's a Curwood story. Also the advertising is good. Receipts dropped second night seventy per cent, which tells the tale. Tone, fair. Sunday, doubtful. Audience appeal, sixty-eight per cent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, regular, 15-30, special. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

ALASKAN. (6,758 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Played two days to slim business. Meighan is not drawing as well as he used to. Only a program picture. Nothing more. We had a good print. Tone good. Sunday, no. Not a special. Good audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admissoin 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

A MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Good entertaining little picture that generally pleased an average Saturday night house. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

A MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Did not see it myself but had good reports on it. Dix is becoming popular here. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Farmers, town of 412. Admission 10-25. J. C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

A MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Good picture, well liked by everyone. Tone okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

A MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A very good picture. Pleased our patrons. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,970 feet). Star cast. Not so good. Just a fair program picture. Sunday, no. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This is one of Meighan's best pictures and did a very satisfactory business for two days. If you can buy it right it will make you some friends and money. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Too old for special. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (496 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Good entertainment. The story is too long. Six reels would be right. A picture for old and young. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

BLUFF. (6 reels). Star, Agnes Ayres. A good clean picture. Excellent entertainment. Many tense moments. Audience enjoyed it. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

BLUFF. (6 reels). Star cast. Only a fair program picture that bluffed its way through. Pleased the majority but no pulling power. Print fine. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Coal miners town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo & Kopuster, Eagle Theatre (300 seats), Livingston, Illinois.

Theatre Going—Reports Coming

"Dear Friend Van and 'Gang'—Opened up my new 'Community Theatre' one week ago today and am still alive.

"Sorry your airplane busted, so that you could not attend the opening but your good wishes helped, and were received at the same time that I received hundreds of letters, telegrams, phone-calls and bouquets.

"I did not realize that I had so many friends, as it seemed to me that I had been scrapping everybody connected with the building of the theatre in order to get them out of it and give me a chance to get into it.

"But the opening was a GREAT success, even if it did rain all day, and we now have a theatre to be proud of.

"Please give my thanks and regards to the boys of your staff for their good wishes; including of course, Mr. Archer.

"This week I will be able to swing into the 'Straight From the Shoulder' columns again, as my biggest task is over and things are running smoothly. With my best regards, sincerely yours."—John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

BREAKING POINT. (5,786 feet). Star cast. Played for two days. Small house first night, second night complete flop. One day was enough. Lost money. It is worth seeing and just above a program schedule. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Nothing extra. Fair audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

CALL OF THE CANYON. (6,982 feet) Star, Lois Wilson. One of the best Zane Grey stories and the picture is a crackerjack. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Small town class town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

CALL OF THE CANYON. (6,982 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Zane Grey's name drew a good crowd and they were pleased with the picture. Occasionally we can buy a box-office bet so it will make a little money. Tone, okay. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. A program show that is good. It did not mean a thing at the box office for drawing power. We did not make expenses with this show. Tone fair. Not a special. Good audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. Good picture but didn't draw at all. Well acted. Tone poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Farmers, town of 412. Admission 10-25. J. C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium, Benoit, Mississippi.

CITY THAT NEVER SLEEPS. (6,087 feet). Star cast. A fair picture of New York life after night. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

CODE OF THE SEA. (6,038 feet). Star, Rod LaRocque. Here is a sea picture that, if properly handled, should pack your theatre. It is full of thrills and it should appeal to old and young. The lighting effects on the wreck are wonderful. Tone good. Strong audience appeal. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

COMING THROUGH. (6,522 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A good picture. Pleased all who saw it. Should go over great in a mining center. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

COMING THROUGH. (6,522 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Meighan has been in some poor pictures lately and this is slightly better, but then we expect such service when we buy forty and only know one in the group, as to its value. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

BILLIE DOVE
Charming Paramount player in "The Air Mail" and other current releases.

CONTRABAND. (6,775 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. Lack of an interesting title spoils this. The transients look at it in question and go by. Regulars who got in liked it fairly well. Sort of a hectic melodrama of bootleggers. A lone girl holds a mob of men at bay; a lone boy attacks a gang in their own hangout and a few other foolish and improbable stunts are pulled. General class, city of 18,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

CONTRABAND. (6,775 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. A fine program picture with lots of action and mystery that pleased. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star cast. Good picture and no denying it gets the jack but give anyone of many others the same advertising and see what happens. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Small town class town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), De Queen, Arkansas.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star cast. The best of the kind (nuf sed). It is a shame that the exchange will get all the profit. The small exhibitor can play it as stimulation. Tone good. Special, yes. Miners, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

COWBOY AND THE LADY. Star, Mary Miles Minter. This is a mighty fine little picture that pleased nearly all who saw it. It is not a special by any means but even at that it will please small town audiences fifty per cent. better than most specials. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Hall, Hancock, Wisconsin.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A very good picture although not a special by any means. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 900. Admission 10-25-30. Charles L. Nott, Opera House (400 seats), Sutherland, Iowa.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star, Wallace Beery. Beery's work is extra good. But his part isn't big enough. Nothing much to the rest of the picture. It flopped here, although pictures of this nature ordinarily go big here. The title didn't seem to strike them right although I personally thought it good. Tone okay. Special, no. Not much audience appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star cast. Here's a fine story of the romantic gold rush days of California with a splendid cast. The plot deals with the clean up of the town by the vigilantes and scenes of saloons and streets and gambling dives and roaring camps and costumes of '49. The work of Pauline Starke, Claire Adams, Wallace Beery, Raymond Hatton and William Collier, Jr., is excellent. Everybody liked it. City and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

DRESSMAKER FROM PARIS. (7,080 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. A perfect entertainment. Has something that will please them all, especially the ladies. Did big business for me. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Great audience appeal. All classes, city of 95,000. Admission 40-50. Guy A. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 feet). Star, Pola Negri. A good Negri but not her best. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

EMPTY HANDS. (6,976 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Positively vile. I ran one show, put it in the can and drove one hundred miles to Omaha and brought back a can of decent film to use next night. Tone rotten. Not suitable for Sunday. Not a special. No audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Very good Sheldon Lewis work. Very fine. All James Cruze pictures suit us. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Farmers, town of 412. Admission 10-25. J. C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium, Benoit, Mississippi.

FAST SET. (6,965 feet). Star cast. Just another of the famous forty, as factory made as could be possible. Hereafter I will buy pictures that are not famous, golden, and specials attached to the pictures. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

FAST SET. (6,965 feet). Star cast. A photoplay directed by William DeMille and a continuity by Clara Beranger and a cast including Betty Compson, Adolph Menjou, Elliott Dexter, Zasu Pitts and Claire Adams is bound to have exceptional merit, but those who like their movies in the raw will be bored, for it's a highbrow production. There is some classy acting in this one and fine character portrayals. City and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

FAST SET. (6,965 feet). Star, Betty Compson. One of Betty's weaker pictures. Fair as a program but won't register big where Compson isn't a favorite. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Fair audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. An all star production that should go good anywhere; especially suitable for South. We consider it a fine production. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Farmers, town of 412. Admission 10-25. J. C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star cast. A southern western. A fast action story. Any audience will enjoy this picture. The acting is very good. Tone good. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. A good picture. One that should please any audience. Full of action. The story never drags. Many thrills at the finish. It is in six reels. Tone good. Good audience appeal. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. Better than other Negri pictures. Was satisfied as I made a little. Pola doesn't draw very well here. She is a good actress but they give her such rotten stuff. Tone bad. All classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre (210 seats), Monroe, Georgia.

GOLDEN BED. (8,584 feet). Star cast. A fairly good special but, like most of Para-

An Error

In the May 16th issue Straight From the Shoulder ran a report from Mr. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio, under title of "Broncho Express" in which Lloyd Hamilton is referred to as the star.

In checking up the report is found to be published as received, but I am sure Mr. Morris will send a corrected report, because the star in the comedy of above title which Educational released is Clyde Cook and I know Mr. Morris, in fairness to Lloyd and to Clyde and to Educational, will send in data as to whether the title was inadverently given instead of another to which his report may have referred.

Every time you find out something here about a picture that you were uncertain of, every time these dependable tips aid you in deciding whether you want to buy or reject, step on or soft-pedal a picture—you are getting something.

Every time you shoot in a report you are paying somebody back for giving you something.

mount's specials, the rental was too high, so I lost money on it. Some complained that the tone was bad and a few said it was a good picture with a very good moral, but the attendance was only ordinary although it was heavily advertised. Special, yes. Fair audience appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Jack Holt. We believe this picture pleased a larger percent of the people who came to see it than "The Covered Wagon," but only grossed about one-fourth as much at the box office. This was not as much the fault of the picture as it was that of the Paramount people at Sioux Falls, S. D., from whom we receive our service. We bought all of their 1924-25 product and they showed their appreciation of it by road showing this picture, which was rated to us over twice as high as any of the others with the exception of "The Thundering Herd" in all the small towns adjacent to us, in advance of our playing date, thereby leaving us only a very small territory to draw from. Gave it a Sunday and Monday showing in one town only six miles from us just three weeks in advance of our playing dates. If there is an exhibitor in the United States that has had any film company pull a smaller one on him than this we would like to hear from him. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. This is as good a production as "The Covered Wagon" but lacks the box office appeal. A very good picture. Acting of Torrence very good. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). Star, Richard Dix. If your fans like Dix and Daniels they must like the picture. It is better than some others which I paid to the company double the price. Tone good. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (7,912 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. Good picture. Full of action. Will please the majority. Tone pretty good. Sunday, think so. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,157 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. This is an exceptionally fine western and most exciting picture I have seen for some time. There isn't one foot of this that I would cut out and I can't say this of one picture in ten that I run. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

TOMORROW'S LOVE. (5,802 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A fair program picture. Nothing unusual in its plot. Tone okay. Sunday, okay. Fair audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

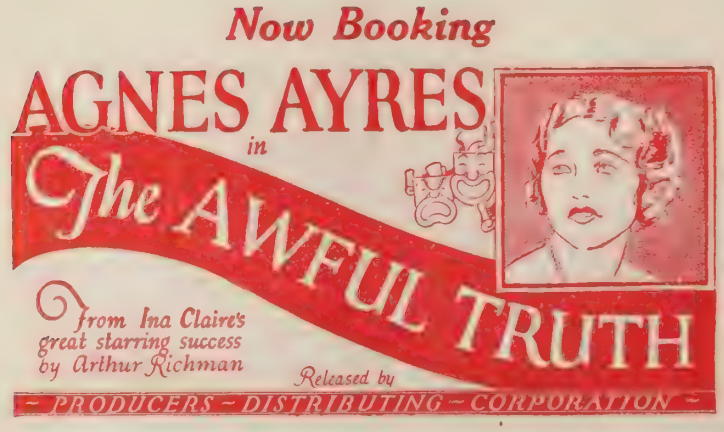
TONQUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Very good production. plenty of action. Good story. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TONGUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Just another one of those Tom Meighan program pictures. The exploitation material on this one is bunk. Keep these mediocre pictures up for another year, Tom Meighan, and you will be a has been. Mr. Meighan can no doubt act but he had better get some material or he will soon be out. Tone okay. Special, no. Audience appeal sixty per cent. Industrial class, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This is better than I expected. There is nothing offensive about it and the action is interesting all the way through. It is a good picture. Not a big one. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A beautiful production, although the color feature doesn't surpass that in "Toll of the Sea." Story is fair but not Zane's strongest by any means. Contains several unpleasant events; situations are in a number of cases forced, with the result that plausibility suffers. I was disappointed in the volume of business it did for me. Tone passable. Barely suitable for Sunday. Good audience appeal. Village and rural class, town of 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

WEST OF THE WATER TOWER. (7 reels). Star cast. One would expect a western from the title. It is a beautiful story of life in a small town. The story is too long. It should be six instead of eight reels. Tone good. Audience appeal good. Working class, city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.



Mary Pickford in a scene in "Little Annie Rooney," a United Artists' release

Pathe

BATTLING ORIOLES. (5,600 feet). Star cast. Good comedy for the men, and lots of action. The ladies, however, did not care for it. Box office only fair. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, fifty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

KING OF WILD HORSES. (5 reels). Star, Rex, the Black. This production is the best drawing card for a small town yet. It's the kind of a picture that makes you want to come again. Really, the horse can act better than some of those "dumb creatures" that mush through nine reels of misery. This picture is a tonic for sick B. O.'s and jaded patrons. Merchants and farmers town of 440. Admission 15-25. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre (150 seats), Hancock, Wisconsin.

Principal

HELEN'S BABIES. Star, Baby Peggy. Played this some time ago; an excellent picture, as well liked by the adults as by the children. Baby Peggy equal to Jackie Coogan in this town. Elmer D. Keyes, Randolph, Vermont.

LISTEN LESTER. (6,242 feet). Star cast. A good little program picture. Not wonderful but worth seeing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. Star cast. They didn't warm up to this very much and was just average at the box office. Good of its kind. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, possibly. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. (7,800 feet). Star, Pat O'Malley. A very fine picture, clean as a whistle; everything runs along nice and smooth. A western of the better kind. Run it. Your audience should like it. Ours did, and they are hard to please. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety-five per cent. Factory class, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats) Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE. (7,179 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. A good picture of the Civil War and will get over if your patrons like war stories. Work of cast great. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission

10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Good western from Bret Hart's story "Tennessee Partner." Up to a standard of star which is always good. Hunt Stromberg knows what audiences want. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star, Dorothy Devore. A splendid picture. Really more exciting than Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last." Tone okay. Will take with any audience. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,800. Admission 10-25-35. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

LOVE'S WHIRLPOOL. (6,028 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. Used same week as "Golden Bed." Cost half as much and pleased twice as many people. Every one liked it. Tone okay. Special, questionable. Good audience appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

ROARING RAILS. (5,753 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Fine picture. Good or better than many big specials. Will please one hundred per cent. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A good program picture. plenty of action and a few real thrills. First picture seen here with a real fight between women. These two females stage a real one. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-30. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

WHAT SHALL I DO? (6,000 feet). Star, Dorothy MacKaill. It failed to pull them in, but it pleased all who saw it. Used only average advertising. Print good. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Coal miners town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo & Kopuster, Eagle Theatre (300 seats), Livington, Illinois.

Schulberg

VIRGINIAN. (8,010 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. Another corking good picture. Faithful reproduction of the famous story of same name. It delighted my audience although it is old. I received a good print on it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

United Artists

THROUGH THE BACK DOOR. Star, Mary Pickford. We are showing all of these old ones again and they seem to get across good. Audience liked the picture, judging by applause. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty-five per cent. Working class, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30, 25-50. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Universal

BROADWAY OR BUST. (5,272 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This is a good one. It's a good buy for Universal. "Has the prices." Tone good. Sunday, yes. All classes, town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. A. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

EXCITEMENT. (4,912 feet). Star, Laura La Plante. "Excitement" is correct. It's a good one. Full of thrills, and prices are all right. Tone good. Sunday, yes. All classes, town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

FAST WORKER. (6,500 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Everyone liked it. Drew a large crowd. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal one hundred per cent. Mrs. Jules Perronet, Tujunga Valley Theatre, Tujunga, California.

FIGHTING AMERICAN. (5,251 feet). Star, Pat O'Malley. This one is exactly as the foreword advises it is, a masterpiece of nonsense. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal forty per cent. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

GAIETY GIRL. (7,419 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. This is one you would classify as a good picture. There is nothing definite the matter with it but it is not outstanding enough to mean much to a theatre for the second night's run. Tone good. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A baseball story that was well liked. The comedy in it is great. Played it with the baseball team and drew fairly well. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal ninety per cent. Coal miners, town of 1,365. Admission 10-20. Vanzo and Koputer, Eagle Theatre (300 seats), Livingston, Illinois.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star cast. Did fair business, considering the age of picture. A good drawing card, with the best of acting for all players. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal ninety-five per cent. College class, town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Jr., Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

LAW FORBIDS. (6,262 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. I covered up all Baby Peggy names on advertising and ran on Sunday. Pretty fair program picture. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

LET 'ER BUCK. Star, Hoot Gibson. A fair picture. Played to big business the first day but after that did not draw. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

To keep the high standard enjoyed by this dependable tip department we must have trustworthy tips. We are getting them now, but we want more exhibitors to join "Our Gang" and send in tips.

HOW ABOUT YOU?

PRICE OF PLEASURE. Star, Virginia Valli. This is one of the best pictures that Universal has put out and contains all the elements that make up a good audience picture as it has good comedy and a splendid story. You can go the limit and everyone will like this picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

SPORTING YOUTH. (6,712 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Book this one if you like one with plenty of action and everything. It went over very good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

THRILL CHASER. (5,196 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A good western program picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TORNADO. (6,375 feet). Star, House Peters. A melodrama of the big timber, with a big, strong, fighting timber boss whose character you can't help but like. It concludes with a tornado that blows everything to smithereens. It's a great picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal ninety per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

WESTERN WALLOP. Star, Jack Hoxie. For picture fans better than "Classmates." Oh, no, the 400 don't like it, but they have to go to card parties or entertain, so what's the difference. No tone. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Small town class, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

Vitagraph

BELOVED BRUTE. (6,710 feet). Star cast. A fine picture from Vitagraph. It has the thrills and yet contains a lot of heart interest. Special, yes. Average audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

GREATER THAN MARRIAGE. (7 reels).

Theatre .....No. Seats.....Town .....State .....

Star, Lou Tellegen. A theatre drama that makes a pleasing program picture. Nothing startling but a good story, well acted. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

TWO SHALL BE BORN. (6 reels). Star cast. Very good picture of the program variety. No boost, no kicks. Box-office medium. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

TWO SHALL BE BORN. Star, Kenneth Harlan. An interesting story of American love, romance, and Russian political intrigue. A program picture that will please the majority. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Warner Bros.

BRIDGE OF SIGHS. (6,684 feet). Star, Creighton Hale. Excellent story and cast fine. Will please but won't draw. Why don't Warner Brothers give their pictures titles; they have everything else but. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

GEORGE WASHINGTON JR. (6 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. Good comedy drama. went over nicely. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeals to all classes. Better class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-30. Jos. Angros, Jr., Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

LIGHTHOUSE BY THE SEA. (6,700 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). An excellent melodrama of sea coast surroundings, with rum runners, revenue officers and everything and everybody, including the dog, to make it peppy and full of action. Advertise and it will get the business. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Comedies

HER BALL AND CHAIN. (Fox). Star, Paul Parrot. Good. Fast comedy that pleased a majority. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SUNSHINE COMEDIES. (Fox). These comedies are as a rule poor and whenever Fox happens to make a good one he calls it an Imperial and doubles the price. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Short Subjects

AESOP FABLES. (Pathe). A nice filler for a long program. Only half a reel, and everyone seems to enjoy them. Town of 3,200. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

SPORTLIGHT. (Pathe-Grantland Rice). A very good novelty reel that has as many friends as any short subject I have ever tried. Town of 3,200. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

TELEPHONE GIRL SERIES. (F. B. O.). Star, Alberta Vaughn. Have used the first six and have seen No. 12. They are good but I don't intend to take on the next series. I get the best response out of comedies of the pure slapstick style like Vitagraphs, Larry Semons and Educational Mermaids. In a way these Phones resemble Harry Langdon's stuff. Village and rural class, town of 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

Independents

BIFF BANG BUDDY. (Artclass). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. It is my opinion that both Lester Scott and Buddy Roosevelt should be shot for making such a picture. No tone. Sunday, no. Audience appeal seventy per cent. All classes, city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

EARLY BIRD. (7,000 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. Cannot recall any feature length comedy as good, both in quality and box-office value, as this one. Stunts and gags are original all the way through. Will please in any locality. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. General class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

I AM THE MAN. (Chadwick). Star, Lionel Barrymore. Pretty Fair show, with usual tragic Barrymore finish. Tone fair Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

OUTWITTED. (State Right). Star, William Desmond. A fair program picture. You know the type. Lots of action and thr. s but not much plot. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

PRESENTATIONS - PROLOGUES - MUSIC

Edited by Colby Harriman

What Do You Think About It?

PERSISTENCE is a virtue provided it is not carried to excess. Some men are chronically afflicted; others give normal consideration to this trait. A well-known writer recently said that to get anything worthwhile in the show business you had to stick to it like a puppy to a root, and eventually you'd get your way. All of which may be directly applied to this Department, and particularly its editor.

Again we ask for some more ideas along various subjects. So far we have had excellent response from exhibitors throughout the country, and our gratitude for this co-operation is indeed sincere. Practically everything we have asked for we have received, but there are a few thoughts which have come to us through recent conversations with several exhibitors and production managers, relative to some of the vital questions directly affecting the motion picture program upon which we invite statements, letters or articles from any exhibitiors and producers anent the following:

First—What is your opinion of the present discussion relative to vaudeville acts in connection with your motion picture program? Some houses have always had the combination policy, but with the inception of "names" of vaudeville stars, a new angle has presented itself, and it is to be determined whether vaudeville acts will be successful with their original routine as presented on the circuit, or show to greater advantage in a special presentation setting.

Second—What is the best method to exploit special presentation features such as fashion shows, syncopation weeks, and others of equal caliber?

Third—Has the presentation or prologue ever been used as a feature equal in proportion to the drawing power of your picture? If so, the details of the production and exploitation would be interesting.

Fourth—In spite of all the propaganda in favor of good music, would a large orchestra, commonly known as "symphony," have the drawing power at your box office justifying the expense of maintaining it? Good music is obtainable with fewer pieces if capable musicians are engaged.

Fifth—What type of orchestral compositions have proven most popular in the past season? Have you found an increasing demand for the classical selections or do patrons prefer popular medleys and jazz combinations entirely?

Sixth—What are your plans for next season? Have you thought of arranging a schedule of your presentations? Are you planning any elaborate features?

The only way we can get anywhere and achieve results is to talk things over. It is impossible, for the time, to do so personally, so let this page be your mouthpiece.

Craig Speaks of Light and Scene

GORDON CRAIG, who is recognized generally as the father of modern stagecraft, and is a truly creative genius of the modern theatre, some time ago wrote a book on the subject of stage lighting, and scenery more from an artistic than a technical standpoint.

The title of this book is "Scene." The book contains many interesting plates and scenic designs and treatments by Mr. Craig, but in one chapter he gives a few general facts for the guidance of those seeking information on scenic and lighting principles which are most comprehensive and little gems of wisdom.

Printed from his book herewith:

1. You can see a face, a hand, a vase, a statue better when it is backed by a flat, plain, non-colored surface than when backed by something on which a colored pattern or some object is painted or carved.

2. The shadow of a thing (face, hand or statue) is visible to the eye without difficulty or distraction, and is visible at the same time as is the thing itself.

3. When face, hand or statue is removed a plain screen is a dull thing to look at—the eye tires.

4. The eye cannot look at two objects at the same time. When we listen to a speaker, be it in a room or in a hall or in a theatre, we look at one thing only—his face.

5. In a theatre our eyes follow the speaker; therefore when two are speaking it is usual, and it is best, for these two to be as near one another as possible.

6. It is essential they shall be in sympathy in their work. Any division in this and we shall at once feel the division and see neither of the actors—our thoughts will wander to the scenery.

7. The screen against which an actor is best seen is a white one—for it can be shaded to any tone of gray, blackened by shade; colored any color, and that without changing the color of the actor's face, hands or figure.

8. There is no need at all for an actors face to be cast into shadow and the expression lost until it loses distinction of expression—then, indeed, it seems best to blot it out.

9. There was never any need of scenery to take an overdue prominence until the day when the actor lost his power of expression, his power to act and until he began to resent the right uses of scene and light.

10. The use of light to the actor is that it will aid him and collaborate with him if he will show it consideration. For light can be used in many dramatic ways—it is for the actor to come to know at least fifty or eighty of these ways. At present he acknowledges about six.

11. The use of light to the actor is only to be studied by the actor if he will observe the way light plays its subtle part in real life. If he will observe he will soon come to realize that stage lighting can be his best friend in his work. As an aid to his observation the treatise by Leonardo da Vinci on Light can help an actor sufficiently advanced in his studies.

Mr. Craig analyzes in his own way the relation of light to scenes, contending that light and scene are like two dancers or two singers, who are in perfect accord.

It is by a study of the ideas and principles devised by representative leaders in stage production the world over, that our own work can be improved, and we ourselves advance in the scale of things.

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Complete working plans of the presentation suggested herewith, including blueprints, color charts, costume plates, music cue sheets, and other necessary information, are prepared for each subject. The folios are available for IMMEDIATE DELIVERY without charge to any producer or exhibitor engaged in actual production work, and desiring to avail himself of the Colby Harriman suggestions.

SPIRIT OF THE CARNIVAL
A "Moving Picture World" Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

THE presentation suggested this week is one which will permit of a variety of treatments, and serves as an excellent background for special dance numbers, and syncopated musical features.

There comes a time in the presentation schedule when a subject devoid of continuity of action, but one brimful of the lighter, happier and more bizarre elements, is needed. Consequently the setting surrounding such a program should be equally novel, suggestive of many things without following a single scenic scheme.

The treatment offered here is a combination of a suggestion from a German stagecraftsman and an American art director. It is a simple set consisting of a drop in one. the lower part of which is drawn revealing the balance of the stage setting.

On the drop in one, a figure, as indicated in the drawing, is painted. The flowing black mantle covers the entire opening to the floor. It is an effective study in black and white. The white space above the figure at the top of the drop can be lighted from the back.

Various characters dressed in carnival costumes enter through the opening which is at center through the folds of the mantle. A tubular drapery of mettaline cloth material hung in the form of an inverted telescope is used as returns. These are highlighted from each side with vari-colored lights, color wheels can be attached controlled by motor which will permit the changes to be made uniformly.

As the action progresses the lower part of the mantle is drawn revealing the second scene or balance of the setting, as shown in the above sketch. This should be a riot of color. A circular archway can be gilded with mirror inlays against a background drop of silver all-over-spangle-on-net upon which vari-colored lights play in mottled formations.

A bank of green foliage punctuated with vivid colored flowers is set up-stage right and left of the archway. Silver curtains may be used to mask and carry off. Up stage back of the arch circular steps leading on to a platform are placed and a tab drop with a shore line and trees silhouetted against an expanse of water is hung back. A moon box is used with a water rippler highlighted at center.

The platform is an excellent place for an orchestra, or same can be grouped down stage.

The lighting on the drop down in one can be very colorful having the upper right part of the mantle opaque so that the lighting treatment will not penetrate and can be localized to give a varying combination in the light space above the figure—the ruff, the face and mask.

As an introduction a spot with iris attachment can be thrown on the head of the figure, and gradually opened with the medium frame changed from a green to a canary, and into a white as the lights come up full. These can be reversed for a finale as the lower part of the mantle closes down for curtain.

PRODUCERS' FORUM

Mr. Harriman desires to hear from all producers and will appreciate their opinions, ideas and suggestions on all matters appertaining to general production work, publishing same in this section with credit to the author.

Overture Feature in Color

A very attractive overture feature entitled, "A Symphonette in Color" was arranged by the late Buel B. Risinger, Musical Director of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Georgia. This number was an original treatise based on the theory of color as interpreted by the various tonal groups of a modern orchestra.

Through a personal request the music used in the compilation of this score together with its routine, lighting treatments and screen announcements, was given with permission to be used by any orchestra desiring same, provided due credit was accorded Mr. Risinger.

The various announcements can be thrown on the screen with slides. In reprinting the arrangement the announcement copy precedes the musical set-up and lighting plot which follows each announcement and written in parentheses.

1.—The (name of orchestra) present "A Symphonette In Color," a Novelty Overture, based on theories of the correspondence of tones and colors, arranged by Buel B. Risinger.
(Opening bars of third movement from "Aida Ballet" for Trumpets, transposed one tone lower. Two bars and hold only.)

2.—Briefly outlined, the strings—(Violins, Violas, Celli and Basses) represent violet, indigo and blue. The Flute, Clarinetts, Oboe and Bassoon, represent green from the spring-hued leaf, to the deep green of the forest. French-horns are yellow, Trombone golden orange, and Trumpets red—sometimes vivid scarlet.
("Adagio Pathatique"—Godard. Begin at "B," segue at 1st beat of bar before "C." Orchestra Foots and Flood Dimmed Up To Deep Red.)

3.—"My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" from "Samson and Delilah," presents the soft violet hued pleading of the Violins in one of the world's greatest love melodies.
("Samson and Delilah"—Fisher Orchestration. Begin 2 Bars before "L." Segue at "N." Special script arrangement so that first Violins play melody in first 8 bars. Light Violet Spot.)

4.—The Violas continue the same melody but the color of the tone quality is deeper, almost indigo.
(Violas play melody in next 4 bars. Deep Violet Spot on violas.)

5.—The compelling tone of the Celli suggest an even darker blue in the love theme.
(Celli play melody in last four bars. Deep Blue Spot.)

6.—And the Basses suggest a tragic sadness in life's darkest tones.
(Basses play 4 bar Coda very softly with retard. Deep Blue Flood from above.)

7.—Here is a brilliant little passage for Flute. It makes you think of the Spring-hued leaves fresh from the bud.
("La Source"—Jungnickle No. 44. Number 4 of Suite III. Begin at "A." Segue at "B" Piano Cadenza—E—flat augmented triad. Light Green Spot on Flute.)

8.—And the Clarinetts suggest the beautiful green bubbling brook.
("La Source"—No. 1 of Suite III at beginning. Transposed a fifth lower. Clarinetts play to "A." Dark Green Spot.)

9.—The Bass-Clarinet has a depth of color as dark as a quiet green pool in the valley.
(Bass-Clarinet continues from "A," taking horn solo for 5 bars. Dark Green Spot. Musician to stand so audience can see instrument.)

10.—With the Oboe and Bassoon representing the darkest hues of the forest, with a suggestion of the birds and the brook.
(Cut to the 9th bar after "D" with 7 bars from letter "E" on, especially written for bassoon and bar before "E" arranged to make perfect modulation to 1st. bar of "Tannhauser Overture" Dark Green with Canary Mixed To Flood from above, Green Spots on Oboe and Bassoon.)

11.—The French Horns introduce a dazzling yellow with the "Pilgrims Chorus" from "Tannhauser."
("Tannhauser Overture." Cut from 16th Bar to "A." W. W. out on first 16 bars. Canary and Amber Spots.)

12.—The Trombone continues the same melody but with the color changed to golden orange.
(Continue "Tannhauser" at "A" play 16 bars only. Dark Amber Spot.

13.—The Trumpets are red, in fact almost vivid scarlet in this excerpt from Siegfried's Death (Wotan's Sword Motif) "Twilight of the Gods."
("Siegfried's Death." Begin at up-beat of 26th bar of 4/4 maestoso. Segue at change of key. Red Spot.)

14.—Of course, in true modernized form, an entire orchestra may be Blue.
("Brown, Black and Yellow Blues"—Sam Perry. Blue Flood.)

15.—While Drums are generally supposed to be abstract in color, they are a great help at times, often covering a multitude of musical sins. Did you ever hear Drums give a bugle call? Listen carefully.
(Eight bar jazz Drum solo, then Tympani (4) tuned to E—B flat—D—and F. Jazz bugle call—8 bars. Color Wheel on Spot Thrown on Drums. Spin Wheel.)

16.—So, for a finale, we present a colorful excerpt from "The Atonement of Pan" by Henry Hadly, one of America's foremost exponents of orchestral coloring.
("Atonement of Pan"—IV. Begin at 19th bar after "B." Cut from "C" to "F." Grand pause on 5th bar from the end Cymbal then Tympani solo. Hold last chord and entire Orchestra on their feet with the cut-off. Color Wheels, Vari-Colored Floods. All Solo Spots and Mirror Ball used for finale.)

Burlap for Draperies

Some very clever effects can be devised with burlap in applying it to the scenic scheme. There are various grades of burlap, from the very cheap variety that is used around cotton bales up to the finest grades that interior decorators use on dwelling walls. In most cases the cheapest grade is just as good to work with unless it is too slazy and too open.

A burlap curtain can be used for a tab curtain or in full set treatments. Burlap can also be arranged in pillow effects that will look like trees. It can also be used as floor and ground cloth. Plain burlap can be streaked with a darker shade of brown, which should be made by mixing a brown pigment with glue without any sizing or preparing the cloth. By painting shadows you will get a fold effect, although the burlap will hang straight.

Some attractive effects are achieved by painting high lights with gold paint, and very little paint being required to secure high-lighting results. Upon this surface or upon the plain burlap you can spray or spatter any dry color such as brick red, light blue, or the lighter burlaps can be dyed a very dark blue for night effects with spangles sewn on to represent stars.

Burlap can be painted and striped to give the effect of old tapestry.

Suggestions for Old Drapes

Practically every theatre has some old fabrics, plush, velvets, sateens, etc., which can be dry-cleaned and dyed with a tone similar to the original color and given a new treatment, thus rendering them more serviceable.

Very artistic effects have been made by sewing stuffed flowers of silk upon velvet curtains. There is really no limit to the extent the artist can go in embellishing a velvet curtain. Peacocks have been made upon them with real peacock feathers adjusted to the design. Designs can be made of spangled sequins or even large buttons. The combination of a velvet curtain with gold or silver rope with tassels is very effective, but it is not necessary to buy genuine gold cord. You can make a very satisfactory substitute by using ordinary hemp rope and painting it with a mixture of gilt or aluminum powder and hot liquid glue. The tassels can be made of smaller strand rope or hard cord treated the same way.

Effective interiors are made by having practical door and window frames, fireplace, pictures, etc., with all the rest of the space filled with combinations of draperies carrying out a wall paper scheme of center panels and a border in contrasting color. The material should be draped around the various frames used and not cut out as other uses and combinations can be made with the same units.

Big First Run Presentations

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Sporting Venus"
(Metro-Goldwyn)

A Scotch Fantasy

S. L. Rothafel has achieved two things with his presentation: first, he has produced an excellent stage feature which creates atmosphere for the succeeding picture, and second, afforded a novel introduction of the popular radio artists comprising "Roxy's Gang."

The scene represents a Scottish exterior, a garden spot with a distant castle in the background, which apparently is a blend of two of the most picturesque long shots in the picture. A cut drop is hung in two, with tree trunk on extreme right, the branches forming a foliage border extending across stage to left. The color treatment is in dark pigments which gives a silhouetted effect and in contrast to the lower tones on the back drop. A raked runway comes on from right to center, back of the cut drop. Set trees with sapling trunks and profusely green-leafed tops are set extreme left and right. Shrubbery set pieces are interspersed with flowering bushes. The back drop is most artistic, warm tones with amber predominating in the color scheme. A distant castle occupies the center of the drop with two stone pedestals surmounted with urns, painted on the left. A large tree in reddish brown is silhouetted in the foreground at extreme right of the drop. Rustic garden chairs are right and left down stage to dress. A purple tone is given the lower part of the back drop and also in front of the set pieces masking the runaway. White thrown in from the sides tones the scene by highlighting the various trees and bushes in their natural pigment tones. The back drop gives the effect of an old painting done on parchment, and lighted from the back. It is a very pretty setting in which characters appear in various Scotch costumes, both national and modern. The following program is presented after the artists being led by a kiltie are piped on to the stage from right: (a) "The Campbells are Coming"; (b) "The Maid of Dundee"; (c) "We're all Scotch"; (d) "Loch Lomond"; (e) "Mocking Bird"; (f) "Annie Laurie"; (g) Finale.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Talker"
(First National)

"At Versailles"

For producing the best 100 per cent. presentation on Broadway this week credit is given to Joseph Plunkett. The production was well devised and subsequently mounted, and it has the necessary elements which a real presentation demands. Two scenes comprise the setting; first, an exterior "Outside the Palace," being a scrim drop hung in one upon which were painted three large French windows running full height set in a dull green gray wall. Shrubbery set pieces down stage extreme right and left. Low green bushes set in front of the stage; a small green topped birch tree at right; a Pan garden statue extreme left. Light blue with a green mixture thrown on the stage from side to highlight the foliage pieces. At the rise eight members of the Mark Strand Male Ensemble dressed in military costumes of the French Revolution period, red coats, light grey breeches, etc., stood in alignment and sang "Soldiers' Chorus"—three white spots overhead were used to flood and following their exit Pauline Miller and Everett Clark came on and sang, "You and I at Versailles." Upon finishing the song they exit and the lights dimmed down as the lights back of the scrim gradually came up revealing the "Ballroom." This ballroom was visible through a large oval opening laid out on the scrim with a scalloped border of lace design, the balance of the scrim being opaque. The ballroom was of simple design, three large French windows set between pilasters were up stage with chandelier brackets on each column. A large crystal chandelier was hung center.

Deep blue was used back of the windows up stage. White spots were masked to flood the chandelier which gave a scintillating spot contrasting with the ambers used to flood the balance of the set. The soldiers who previously appeared stood right and left of the windows while eight dancers in costumes of the French Court danced the "Minuet." Mme. Klemova entered in an attractive white ballet costume and did a number entitled "Variations." Pauline Miller and Everett Clark came to center to a spot highlighted from the bridge and sang, "Love and the Rose." As the dancers exit from the ballroom, right and left, the lights dimmed with the exception of the spot on the two singers, the lights in front of the scrim gradually came up until the ballroom was in blackness, the two singers, highlighted with the bridge spot, being visible through the center window, presented a charming picture for the finale which brought the other members of the cast into groups in the garden in front. The music for the various numbers was written by Jacques Gruenberg, associate conductor of the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Shock Punch"
(Paramount)

"Dance Eccentric"

The quintette of Jazz Dance Specialists has been moved from the Rialto Theatre. They are presented here in an attractive setting designed by John Wenger. Black plush drop hung in back. Two fabric columns are hung up right and left center which bear a fantastic design in Russian motifs. Green toned columnar lamps highlight the interior of the columns. A blue and pink triangular set piece suggesting a flowering tree is placed extreme right and left. Strands of silver tinsel are hung from a battan at intervals on the back drop. Three square shaped tubular lamps in design similar to that on the columns are suspended above, the longest one in the center and the shortest ones on each side. The presentation introduces Dorothy Farris and four dances of the Rivoli Ensemble in glittering dancing costumes of limited proportions.

"Song of the Riveters"

A very good prologue for the featured picture. Scene depicts an upper section of framework of a modern skyscraper. Girders in silhouette against a deep blue sky drop which is toned to a green at the base. The soloist clad in an ironworker's outfit is left center before a rivet forge where a blower is on a standard which is painted to resemble a pile of bricks. Above this is a hood from which ribbons toned red to resemble flames of the forge are blown by a fan. The members of the Quartette clad in workingmen's clothes stand on the framework. They are highlighted with amber from right and left. The lighting is very well done catching the faces at intervals with a good distribution of shadows; an amber from right tones the soloist on the stage floor. Pieces of metal were placed at various parts of the structure permitting the men to hammer and create the usual steel worker's din.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Feature Picture: (Second Week)
"Friendly Enemies"
(Producers Distributing Corp.)

"Divertissements"

Four numbers are offered in this spot:

(a) Mlle. La Torricella, (second week), appears in delightful exposition of artistic jazz dancing. Black plush hung back. Large flowered topped set trees are left with flowering bushes grouped around them. A chair with a canary and orange grass mat is in front of trees. The trees are toned with rose and blue with green mixed. A white spot is used on the dancer dressed in a black and checkered costume, close in and open to

(b) A Musical Phantasy, John Halpern, pianist, is revealed at a mahogany grand piano with a batik drape across it set at right center. A small tapestry is hung on the drop directly over the piano and a three-section screen draped in material with design similar to the tapestry, is at up stage end of the piano, back of the pianist. An amber spot is shot from the bridge with an amber spot from the booth to flood. The spot occupied by the piano is the only one highlighted, the balance of the set being the black plush, a leg of which has been let down at the left of stage to mask the preceding scene. The pianist plays "Paraphase" Liszt, following with "Kitten on the Keys." In the last movement Mlle. La Torricella dressed in a costume resembling a black cat comes from the darkness and dances to the conclusion of the number. Close in and open to

(c) Beatrice, Irene and Beatrice, three young ladies in evening gowns appearing before the light fabric curtains which are toned a rose with a blue tint at the base. The three singers work in a pink flood. Following the song—

(d) An unprogrammed accordionist and whistler is introduced who appears before the same curtains used in preceding numbers which are given a different color treatment, an orange amber center, blue sides, the artist working in a white spot.

EASTMAN THEATRE

Featured Picture: Buster Keaton in "Seven Chances"

The program is marked with two special musical features. The first is a "Concert Jazz Ensemble" introducing an orchestra composed of piano, three saxophones, violin, two trumpets, trombone, tuba, banjo and drums presented the following program, (a) "June Brought the Roses" (Openshaw), (b) Fantasy on an Original Theme by Benjamin A. Machan with the composer at the piano, (c) "Susie" (DeSylva). The second is a group of Indian Songs sung by Florence Bradley, contralto, in Indian costume. (a) "Pale Moon" (Logan), (b) "By the Waters of the Minnetonka" (Lieurance).

CAPITOL THEATRE

Featured Picture: "The Charmer" (Paramount)

Four presentation features are offered by Francis A. Mangan. 1—"Sugar" (a) "Tea for Two" sung by a soprano and tenor, (b) "The Sugar Street," a dance novelty by a team, (c) "My Sugar" by nine dancing girls. 2—"Indian Love Call" introducing a contralto singing "In the Land of the Sky Blue Water" and a sopranto singing "Indian Love Call." 3—Ronny Johanson, international Swedish Artist in a series of classic dance interpretations. 4—Cliff Nazarro and Company in a comedy sketch.

Four divertissements are programed. (a) Sentimental Melodies introducing "Old Pal" sung by a tenor and "Somewhere, Someone is Waiting" sung by a soprano. (b) Huston Ray, pianist, in a few concert numbers. (c) Ramsey and Keating in a comedy bit. (d) The Miami Humming Birds, Florida's Most Famous Orchestra with Ferdinando and Fair.

SAENGER THEATRE
Pensacola, Florida

Featured Picture: "Madame Sans Gene" (Paramount)

The Garden of Fontainebleau

A very elaborate prologue easily produced in smaller theatres. A stage within a stage was used. The Garden effect was obtained by a small stage within the picture frame. The back drop with fountains and terraces lent the desired atmosphere. The picture frame was equipped the same as the large stage opening; with wide border strips of red and amber lighting and foots of amber. The colors of the back drop were heightened and brought out by the use of green strips placed so that the green light would encircle the fountain pool. Upon each side of these were placed amber and red light strips to bring out the coloring of the walks and court. A sky border was hung and lighted so as to give the effect of the afternoon sun. This consisted of ten lights—two amber and red in center and four blues at each side. At each side of the little stage was placed a box or bunch lights; one in amber at left and one in blue at right turned up to accentuate the sky tints.

The setting consisted of a low hedge covered with vines and flowers at back of small stage. A short gap disclosed the fountain at back, at the left of which were entwined with vines and roses. Two rose bush set pieces were used; one at right center and one to mask off left edge of small stage. At the right, were placed rosebushes and shrubs. In the center of small stage was placed a small bench covered with green draping. The bottom of the picture arch was covered with dark green paper and vines to represent a terrace.

The large stage was set with wood wings and borders. Two large bush trees were set at each side and hung with flowers to represent trees in full bloom. Over each tree was placed a large spotlight in green, amber and red. This heightens the afternoon sun effect and made the trees stand out. A circular garden bench was placed at each tree. The foot and border consisted of a blend of red, amber and green with amber predominating.

Eleven people were used; two singers, a ballet dancer and eight ladies of the court. The singers were discovered on a small stage or terrace, the lady seated on the covered bench. The man standing at her side. They sang "The Love Song" theme song of the operetta of same title. The duet finished, the curtain was drawn upon the little stage. The back lighting out, and the front stage lighting accentuated by the use of the amber flood from the booth, and red and ember bunch lights in two, at right and left.

Eight girls entered, four from each side, all dressed in the Directoire gown of the period, grouped right and left. Some seated and some standing. The curtains of the little stage parted, disclosing a rose bush set piece in center which slowly parted, a dancer discovered in pose. She stepped from bush and dances to large stage, where she did a ballet routine and exits left. The gavotte resumes for about eight figures, finishing in picture pose as curtain closes in.

Spots from the sides were placed so as to light two singers upon the small stage.

The production was the joint work of Mr. Bailey F. Alart one of the Saenger presentation experts, and Mr. John A. Jones.

PERSONALITIES

IRVIN TALBOT, orchestra director for Hugo Riesenfeld at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, is in Los Angeles, where he will be guest conductor at the Metropolitan Theatre during the next eight weeks.

JOSEPH PLUNKETT'S prologue for the "Lost World," which was presented at the Astor Theatre, New York, will be produced in Providence, R. I., in connection with the showing of the said picture in that city.

A very pretentious summer program of stage and musical presentations is being prepared by JOSIAH ZURO, production director, for Dr. Riesenfeld to be in keeping with the excellent feature picture announced for showing at the Rivoli Theatre during June, July and August.

EDWARD L. HYMAN, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand, presented one of the best musical programs yet reported in observance of National Music Week. Six numbers were offered which were of high calibre and given a lighting treatment which enhanced the various compositions.

Mrs. Gene Stratton Porter's Latest and Greatest Success

"THE KEEPER OF THE BEES"

It is with a feeling of justifiable pride that we announce our Gold Bond Special, "THE KEEPER OF THE BEES," one of Mrs. Gene Stratton Porter's finest successes. As the most widely read author in all America and with her millions of followers, plus the National Campaign of advertising F. B. O. is now carrying in McCall's magazine, with its 2,000,000 circulation per month while the story is running serially, and the big campaign of National advertising being done by Doubleday, Page & Co. on the book edition of the story, this Gold Bond picture is marked for extraordinary results. Watch for release date. Produced by J. Leo Meehan.

2 EMORY JOHNSON
Super Special Productions

This announcement of two Gold Bond Specials from Emory Johnson will be greeted by salvos of applause from thousands of exhibitors. The first Special will be "THE LAST EDITION," a thrilling melodramatic newspaper story, starring the great RALPH LEWIS. The second Special will be a tremendous production titled—"HAPPINESS." Both are exceptional productions of big-time, box-office appeal. F. B. O.'s usual high-powered exploitation will back both these specials.

"PARISIAN NIGHTS"

A Gothic Picture directed by AL SANTELL, starring ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN, LOU TELLEGEN, RENEE ADOREE and exceptional cast. A story of the wickedest city in the world—Paris—surcharged with all the fire and romance, action and drama that can be packed into a featured production. It has class, rare production touches, tremendous appeal both in title and story, and gives exhibitors another Gold Bond Special that will register with a resounding smash at the box office.

"IF MARRIAGE FAILS"—?

In this, his latest production, Mr. Sullivan gives to F. B. O.'s exhibitors a picture with a great box-office title, plus a great story. With that lovely, young star—JACQUELINE LOGAN—supported by Clive Brook and JEAN HERSHOLT and other artists, "IF MARRIAGE FAILS" cannot miss, particularly if handled in the manner outlined in our showmans' Press Book. Superbly directed by JOHN INCE

Laura Jean Libby's Sensational Success

"WHEN HIS LOVE GREW COLD"

Millions of fans will flock to see Laura Jean Libby's romantic story transferred to the screen. And as for title, you can just write your own ticket as to the possibilities of "WHEN HIS LOVE GREW COLD." Just made to order for a mop-up for thousands of theatres. Millions have read her books. Millions will want to see this picture. Take advantage of all this Special offers you in profits and prestige.

"THE MID-NIGHT FLYER"

Exhibitors from every section of the country have urged us to produce another big-time railroad story. Our answer is "THE MIDNIGHT FLYER," a thrilling romance of the rails that will be backed by sensational exploitation, high-powered advertising and F. B. O.'s sure-fire showmanship. Register this one as one of F. B. O.'s biggest box-office winners among our twelve Gold Bond Specials.

"THE FUTURITY WINNER"

Register another sure-fire box-office winner in F. B. O.'s Gold Bond Special—"THE FUTURITY WINNER." Here is a veritable whale of a race-track drama surcharged with heart interest, suspense, high-powered drama, and saturated with thrills. All the lure and color of the turf incorporated into this picture, guaranteeing it as a sure-fire at the box office as human skill and brains can make of those elements the public always responds to in crowds, mobs and jams. From an original story by John C. Brownell.

"FLAMING WATERS"

One of the biggest screen successes from the box-office angle last season was an oil-field story. "FLAMING WATERS" will equal or match the record of that picture. It will be spectacular in the extreme, dramatic beyond description, and absolutely sure-fire at the box office. It's an ASSOCIATED ARTS production, presented by O. E. Goebel. From E. Lloyd Sheldon's famous story of the lure of the stream of gold. It's another of F. B. O.'s Gold Bond Twelve.

"THE ISLE OF RETRIBUTION"

Stories of the frozen North are as certain in their box-office results—perhaps more so—than any other class of production. Your own memory will recall the sensational outstanding successes of this type of release. Edison Marshall's thrilling book "THE ISLE OF RETRIBUTION" is that type of story, and embraces every sure-fire element of box-office appeal. A gripping tale of the frozen North filmed in the locale of the narrative brings to exhibitors another big-time Gold Bond Special of brilliant possibilities.

"The Talker"

First National Offers Fine Cast in Excellent Human Interest Story of Modern Life

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "The Talker," based on a story by Marion Fairfax, First National is offering an excellent domestic story of suburban and city life that should please the great majority of theatregoers.

The central figure in this story is a wife, admirably played by Anna Q. Nilsson, who, becoming bored with home life, begins to advocate more freedom for women and to speak rather contemptuously of a wife's duty and obligations to husband and home. Of course she realizes the error of her ways, but not until it not only comes near wrecking her own romance and providing a much greater tragedy for her husband's sister, an impressionable young girl who tried to put the wife's "talk" into actual practice.

It is not the newness of the main idea, for there have been other stories along this theme, but the very human and plausible manner in which it has been developed that gives this story its dramatic force. Everything happens in accordance with real life. All of the players give excellent performances and seem to live their roles. Alfred E. Green has so admirably directed the picture that it is practically without a situation which not only could plausibly happen but would logically develop from the preceding action.

With its theme of everyday life and real people, this gives to the production unusual human interest value, so that you enter right into the problems of the characters and sympathize with them. Another strong point in this production is the fact that none of the characters have been sugar-coated or their actions glossed over to build up sympathy. All do things with which you can possibly find fault, but you realize that their actions are true to life; that is, that they act like real people that you know.

Every situation holds the interest and this writer considers "The Talker" as one of the most human pictures he has seen in a long time. Its only fault is really a negative one; that is that in developing the different characters and rounding out all of the threads there is really too much dramatic meat, and judicious cutting would speed up the action. As it stands, however, it is a thoroughly entertaining picture.

It would be almost unfair to single out some of the players for special mention as all do excellent work and enter thoroughly into their roles. The major role falls to Anna Q. Nilsson and of course Lewis Stone gives a fine performance. We must, however, mention the work of Shirley Mason as the younger sister, especially her performance after she has tasted the dregs of life. Very different from her usual type, but she scores immensely and develops unusual sympathy and heart interest. Tully Marshall supplies effective comedy relief as a down-trodden husband.

Directed by Alfred Green.
Length, 7,861 feet.

Story

In a small suburban town lives Harry Lennox with his wife and sister, and next door lives Henry Fells, with whom boards Barbara Farley and Lonny Whinston, employed in the same office. Mrs. Lennox, tiring of home life, is inclined to look askance at established ideas of a woman's duty to her husband and home and even writes a newspaper article advocating freedom for the woman and saying each should have three husbands. She accepts the attentions of an auto salesman, Hollister, and flirts with him. All this has its effect on Lennox's sister, Ruth, who finally runs away with Hollister, discovers he is a thief and disappears. Her disappearance causes an estrangement between Lennox and his wife and finally he is to be sent by his firm to India. Mrs. Lennox determines to beg his forgiveness as she long ago realized she was in error. Barbara, Lennox's stenographer, makes her believe, however, that Lennox loves her and Mrs. Lennox asks her husband to arrange for a divorce. Finally Ruth returns, ill, saying she has earned her own living in a factory, too proud to come back home earlier. Lennox comes home and there is mutual forgiveness between himself and wife. Lonnie, who has always loved Ruth, takes her in his arms when he hears her story.

"The Shock Punch"

Richard Dix Carries Machine-Made Story for Paramount Largely Through His Pleasing Personality

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Although it was taken from a serial in a popular magazine, it looks as though the scenarist contributed more to "The Shock Punch" than the original author, for this latest Paramount offering starring Richard Dix is pulled out of proportion to work in a lot of comedy that overshadows the thin thread of plot. If they like Dix, and most theatre patrons do, they will probably enjoy this presentation, but the story is the weakest he has had since he became a star. The gag man rises far superior to the author and makes the story seem machine-made and unconvincing. There are, however, a lot of laughs and a lot of thrills and these will carry the picture over in many houses.

Rough and tumble work around a skyscraper skeleton introduces thrills and comedy in the near-falls of the hero, but there is not much of anything else and this has been already used many, many times. Seemingly no effort has been made to follow probabilities in working out the gags.

"The Shock Punch" is purely a sight picture, but it should get over with a not too exacting audience. Dix carries it with his personality, though Frances Howard is pretty and Walter Long does some real acting as the ironworker villain.

Gunboat Smith, not unknown to the prize ring, plays a role of this kind and should interest pugilistic fans, and Paul Panzer makes the most of a very small part.

Story

Dan Savage wants his son, Randall, to be a he-man, so he fits him for a business career by having him trained as a boxer. When Randall knocks out Gunboat Smith, he is delighted, and still more so when they take him to the Ironworkers' Ball to try out his newly discovered "shock punch." Randall knocks out Mullarkey, who is on a building job on which James Clark has staked his entire fortune. Learning that Dorothy, Clark's daughter, goes to the building each day, Randall gets a job as helper, discovers a plot to delay construction past the contract time, and ruin Clark; the chief conspirator being Mullarkey, who was Randall's victim at the ball. He is saved by Giuseppi, whom he has befriended, and he gets the ironwork done before the time limit.

"The Necessary Evil"

First National Production Featuring Ben Lyon and Viola Dana Is Based on Hereditary Influence

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Hereditary influences, for good and evil, furnishes the backbone of the theme on which the First National production, "The Necessary Evil," featuring Ben Lyon and Viola Dana, is based. The story is an adaptation of the novel, "Uriah's Son," by Stephen V. Benet.

To show the effect of this influence, the picture starts out with the preceding generation and shows the hero's father as a happy-go-lucky adventurous philanderer who in a colorful tropical scene meets his death in a brawl over another woman. The widow persuades her disappointed suitor, a successful, steadfast man, to marry her on her deathbed and take care of her young son.

At college age, the reckless influence of the father is still paramount and results in the marriage of the hero to an adventuress whose pal steals money for which the hero is blamed by his stepfather. The idea of hereditary influence is kept to the fore by means of double exposure, and although this has been somewhat overdone, the action is consistently developed at a good fast pace, with sufficient dramatic conflict to hold the interest well up to about the end of the fifth reel where the stepfather discovers the innocence of the boy.

Were the story brought to an end here it would strengthen its entertainment value, but to carry out the idea of complete regeneration, the hero is sent to the tropics and a melodramatic episode introduced in which he comes back with the idea of killing his stepfather and is saved by the thought of the pain it will bring to his little sweetheart, who is sacrificing herself in marriage to this man. The story is further weakened here by the fact that there seems to be no strong reason for this unsympathetic marriage, which also places the director up against the proposition of getting rid of the stepfather. This he conveniently but unconvincingly does by means of the heart-failure route.

Ben Lyon capably portrays the boy although the role is unsympathetic and may not appeal to his fans. Viola Dana is excellent and appealing as the girl and all of the other roles are well handled, Thomas Holding giving a forceful portrayal of the stepfather.

Despite the weakness of the later reels, this picture will probably prove an attraction of average entertainment value due to the strength of the early part and the good work of the cast.

Based on novel, "Uriah's Son," by Vincent Benet.
Directed by George Archainbaud.
Length, 8,307 feet.

Story

Dick Jerome, irresponsible and care-free, wins Frances away from David Devanant, a steady, prosperous business man. Dick's manner of living is breaking his wife's heart, so Devanant gives him a job in the tropics in hope he will make good, but he is killed in an affair over a woman. Their little son, Frank, appears to have his father's traits, so Frances begs Devanant to marry her so he can take care of little Frank. Years later, Frank, in college, is further like his father. To get his friends out of a scrape he marries one of the girls, Hattie, who proves to be an adventuress and wants a money settlement. Devanant refuses it. Bonds are stolen that night and Devanant, accusing Frank, sends him to the tropics, saying he must earn the money to pay off the debt. Frank works hard. A friend inflames him against Devanant by telling him he sent his father there to get rid of him and makes him believe he is doing the same now, as both love Devanant's ward, Shirley. Frank returns in time to stop the wedding between Devanant and Shirley, with the intention of killing Devanant, but he controls himself. Devanant shows him a letter confessing he knew all along that Frank was innocent but wanted him to prove his manhood. Devanant suddenly dies from heart disease, leaving Frank free to marry Shirley.

"The Meddler"

William Desmond Has an Unusual Role in This Universal Release

Reviewed by Tom Waller

Although it boasts much wild horseback riding, shooting, hold-ups, intrigue and the rescues which are the common clay of westerns, "The Meddler" is unconvincing from the standpoint of virility. The big men of the wide open spaces are big physically but seemingly cowards at heart in this picture. They give in at the least suggestion of a gun draw from William Desmond, who is starred.

Desmond's broad physique is too much in appearance to be in accord with the early part of his role when he endeavors to depict the characteristics of a whiny millionaire—timid, anemic and confined to a milk diet. Quite suddenly, however, he changes when his fiancee breaks their engagement because his humdrum existence has made him a one-groove man void of anything suggestive of a thrill.

Beautiful shots of expansive plains and mountainous backgrounds furnish the locale for the remainder and greater length of the feature. The sub-titles then describe Desmond as the Meddler, a daring bandit who stops at nothing but who, nevertheless, is unusually kind. They then go on to tell that his banditry is merely for the exultation of adventure and the desire to obtain trophies to prove to the girl back home that he is a red-blooded individual.

The Meddler is attended by his valet, a driveling creature, even after both assume the garb of lace, spangles, sombreros and silk handkerchiefs. Both are always blase and extremely suave while in this attire. These oily mannerisms seem to mystify the native plainsmen to such an extent that they may impress some fans as waiting to be knocked down, shot at or dragged around by the eastern bravado.

The story has been so handled as to allow several interpretations. One may be with some fans that "The Meddler" is a burlesque on the regular run of westerns. The viewpoint of others in the average audience may be that it is an attempt at conglomerating comedy with fantasy.

Length, 4,890 feet.

Story

Dot Parkhurst, society girl, breaks her engagement with Richard Gilmore because he fails to provide her with a thrill and has had a colorless business career. In search of adventure to prove that he is red-blooded, Gilmore with his secretary goes west where in a short time he becomes noted as a bold bandit who does no harm except to appropriate a valueless trophy from each haul. Dot marries an ex-army officer but Gilmore has found his real mate in a simple girl of the plains whom he first held up in a stage coach and later saved from the hands of real bad men.

"The Sporting Venus"

Metro-Goldwyn Offers Pleasing Romantic Story Filmed in England, France, Scotland and U. S.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With Blanche Sweet, Ronald Colman and Lew Cody in featured roles, Metro-Goldwyn is offering a Marshall Neilan production, "The Sporting Venus," based on a story by Gerald Beaumont.

It is a story of the romantic type, based on the love of a wealthy Scotch noblewoman and a commoner, a medical student, and following the old adage that true love never runs smooth, there is introduced a suave fortune-hunting prince who brings about dissension though true love triumphs in the end.

Mr. Neilan has turned out a picture that is a delight to the eye. Filmed in England, Scotland, France and the United States, the backgrounds are new and many of them strikingly beautiful, particularly some of the scenes in the Scottish highlands and at the French seashore resort, Biarritz.

The story, too, while not highly original and introducing some conventional romantic situations, is pleasing and moves along at a good pace. Blanche Sweet scores in a new type of role for her, that of a dashing pleasure-mad woman who seeks to drown her sorrow at being disappointed in love by indulging in a mad search after pleasure. She wears some striking gowns that will catch the feminine eye.

All of the players do good work and Ronald Colman is especially well cast as the hero even though the story makes him too easily give up the girl without attempting to learn the truth from her. He succeeds, however, in holding your sympathy. Lew Cody does good work in a familiar type of role for him, and Edward Martindel is good as the heroine's father.

Even though there is an abruptness in the manner in which the prince is dismissed as a suitor, by means of a single subtitle, and little suspense to the action and some of the situations smack more of romance than reality, there is a certain dash to the development and colorful atmosphere to the production which should make it pleasing entertainment for the majority. This is aided by good comedy relief.

Story

The wealthy Scotchman Sir Alfred Grayle wishes a son but a daughter is born and the mother dies. The girl, Gwendolyn, grows up under the care of servants in the big castle, while her father neglects her and enjoys himself following sports. Gwen inherits the sporting instincts of the family. She falls in love with a commoner, Donald, a medical student. On her eighteenth birthday her father returns and soon after that Prince Carlos, who has to marry to protect his creditors and knows Gwen's wealth, begins to court her. The war calls Donald away and on his return Carlos tells him he is engaged to Gwen, so he does not go near her. Gwen, not understanding the reason for Donald's coolness, gives herself up to riotous living and finally agrees to marry Carlos, but her lawyer learns the truth about him and she throws him over. The fast pace finally breaks down her health and she returns to Scotland to the cottage in which Donald formerly lived. In the meantime Donald has become wealthy and bought the castle. Gwen becomes delirious and calls for Donald. Her old nurse goes for him but Gwen has wandered out in the storm and jumped into the water. Donald rescues her and all ends happily.

"The Crackerjack"

Johnny Hines in a Hilariously Clever Burr Production That Should Register Everywhere

Reviewed by Tom Waller

"The Crackerjack," from the box office standpoint, is unquestionably one of the best pictures Johnny Hines has ever turned out. The cosmopolitan audience of nearly 1,000 which witnessed its premiere last week at the Plaza Hotel, New York, was literally exhausted from laughter. They found real mirth in nearly every inch of its 6,700 feet. This speaks volumes for what "The Crackerjack" will do with any type of audience, because the Plaza gathering included many who had never heard of Producer C. C. Burr and even some who were little acquainted with the work of the star.

Hines does Lloyds, Valentinos and Fairbanks in "The Crackerjack." His performance should prove a real diversion to the faithful fan because it is made up of a lot of clever things that many will acclaim to be original. This only goes to show the painstaking effort that Hines has made through the entire footage to get away from that which is hackneyed and familiar. In this he is aided to an important extent by Title Writer John Krafft. Pepped up to the minute, Krafft's titles not only explained but actually talked wit that went over every time with a bang.

One of the funniest stunts this reviewer has ever witnessed on the screen was the part where revolutionists south of the Texan line follow Hines' heels for a film mile or so, firing all the time. The joker in this pack is the fact that the Crackerjack, as Johnny is called, has substituted cheese for the leaden pellets. These "bullets" are also used when Hines is lined up before a firing squad. Picking their smudges off his cheeks and devouring them as a relish furnishes a ludicrous situation.

In the chase by the peons Hines also brings a vaulting pole into play. He uses this to leap over walls and onto porches, when he diverts it into a weapon for defense, bowling over rank after rank of the impulsive besiegers.

The exploitation stunts he uses to put over his southern uncle's pickle factory can all be used in arousing fan curiosity. A huge pickle on a wagonette drawn by a jackass, distributing sample pickles throughout the community, pickle balloons and pickle arrows stuck in clothes and hats, are a few of the many ideas brought into play. In fact we would suggest a private screening before the regular show, so as to get an inkling of the superabundance of exploitation material you have to crack with "The Crackerjack."

Col. Perkins.....J. Barney Sherry
Lopez, a Revolutionist.....Bradley Barker
General Bannon.....Henry West

Directed by Charles Hines.
Story by Dick Friel.
Titles by John Krafft.
Length, 6,700 feet.

Story

Crackerjack Perkins works his way through college by flapping hotcakes in a novel way in his spare time. Col. Perkins' pickle factory needs some pep, so Perkins sends for his nephew. The Crackerjack, in the course of putting over 100 per cent exploitation, overhears a plot to stuff some of his pickles with bullets and smuggle them in to the revolutionists across the border. He substitutes cheese for the leaden pellets. The Crackerjack, masquerading as a general, enters the revolutionists' camp. Many thrilling incidents happen in which he rescues the daughter of the federal general. After that both federals and revolutionists proclaim Perkins' pickles as their favorite food.

"The Kiss Barrier"

Edmund Lowe's Latest for Fox Is Romance Resulting from Indiscreet Kiss During War Time

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Appropriately titled, "The Kiss Barrier," Edmund Lowe's latest starring vehicle for Fox, is based on a story by Frederick and Fanny Hatton which deals with the result of an indiscreet kiss on the battlefields of France, marking the birth of love on the part of the hero and disgust on the heroine's side.

In the endeavors of the hero to overcome this situation there are good opportunities for dramatic conflict. However, long before the climax the heroine is shown as changing her opinion and then, in the words of the hero to his valet, it is a case of "off again, on again, gone again," as on several occasions just as it seems that everything will turn out nicely something happens to turn the girl against him again. This device is used so often that with each recurrence its effect is lessened and makes the later situations seem forced and lacking in conviction.

The story seems to have been built up more with a view to providing for later developments than as to logical result of the action. This is noticeably true of the climax. A situation arises which offers opportunities to logically end the story. The differences between hero and heroine have been patched up and all seems set for the final close-up, but the girl puts the hero off by saying she has many things to tell him later. The only reason for this seems to be to allow for sequences in which the flapper tries to compromise herself with the hero. These scenes, while interesting, come too late to really advance the action.

The development at times is lacking in consistency. For instance, it would hardly seem that, feeling toward the hero as she does, the heroine would have accompanied the flapper on her visit to the hero's apartment, even though she did remain outside in the car, or that she would have proved so vacillating.

The picture opens with good war scenes in which the star's aeroplane is shown as downing a German machine, and soon afterward is shot down by the enemy. The production details are adequate and there are some good fog effects in a scene on a skating pond.

Edmund Lowe and Claire Adams satisfactorily handle the leading roles and Marion Harlan makes an alluring flapper. The production as a whole is fairly entertaining but lacks the snap of the majority of the recent Lowe vehicles.

Story

During the war Richard March, an aviator, downs a German plane but another one gets his machine. Marion Weston, ambulance driver, sees the machine fall and driving to the rescue finds March is unhurt. Going back to the lines, March kisses Marion and she is incensed, although he apologizes. After the war he resumes his profession of acting. Col. Hale, a war friend, invites March to a skating party where he again meets Marion, who snubs him. Later, Connie Hale comes to March's apartment and he suceeds in making Marion soften her attitude toward him. Misunderstanding regarding a situation with Suzette, his leading lady, causes her to again turn against him. This attitude continues, and finally he gives a play based on his own experiences in France which convinces Marion she has misjudged him. Connie, jealous, goes to March and seeks to compromise herself. She makes a scene and her father denounces March, who keeps silent to save Connie, who afterwards confesses the truth. In the meantime, Marion realizes that she loves March and even thinking he has been disgraced tells him she wants to go away with him and be his wife.

"Speed Wild"

F. B. O. Presents Lefty Flynn in Lightly Treated Melodrama That Should Please the Fans

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

H. H. Van Loan's "Speed Wild," an F. B. O. picture, has two distinct assets, a generally coherent, thrilling story and the personality of Lefty Flynn, the star. The plot is good and the characters well chosen. The speedy youth becomes a motorcycle cop, rescues a girl from death and captures an elusive band of smugglers.

Good scenes at the beginning firmly establish the youth's character as adventure-loving and courageous, but a too thorough attempt at characterization at two places, in one of which he is shown playing with some children. While this will appeal to some, especially the women, it slows up the action, and a similar fault occurs later in the picture.

Lefty Flynn has a sufficiently strong screen personality not to need material of this kind to build up the interest in him. As far as acting is concerned, he is practically the whole picture. Dorothy Dwan is pretty and appealing as the helpless heroine, but she has very little to do, and the villains are cast in the conventional mould. Ralph McCullough is excellent as the weakling brother in one big scene. Raymond Turner has a good colored comedy role.

"Speed Wild" is melodrama lightly treated and ought to please the fans, but the elimination of a couple of hundred feet would result in a picture that would be a whirlwind for action and interest. This would not only make it a dramatic entity but provide an exhibitor with an excellent feature of slightly less than the usual length around which is built a more diversified program than the customary feature permits.

"Red Love"

Davis Division Picture Gripping Story of Indian Problems of Today

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Red Love," a Davis Distributing Division picture, will delight audiences interested in a true-to-life story of the American Indian today. Filmed on the South Dakota prairies, skilfully directed, well acted, beautifully photographed. It conveys the clean, refreshing atmosphere of the outdoors. To Edgar Lewis should go especial mention for the direction. He has put in celluloid form a gripping, coherent story, and somehow he has imbued it with the real spirit of the open spaces. There is hardly one touch of artificiality.

The announcement that "Red Love" deals with Indian "problems, hopes, too often thwarted, and loves" may be taken for an advertising catchline—but it really does. The medium is a thoroughly enjoyable story, written by L. Case Russell, which deals with an Indian become outcast and in love with a half-breed girl. Both are characters of good breeding, they are clearly and forcibly acted by John Lowell and Evangeline Russell, and a dexterous use of make-up allows them to look like Indians. F. Serrano Keating, William Calhoun and the other players do uniformly good work under Mr. Lewis's direction. He has sought for naturalness in the acting and the result is realism.

He has to steal from the whites for a living, Starlight, daughter of the white sheriff and his Sioux wife, falls in love with him and he with her. She returns from college with James Logan, really Little Antelope, Thunder Cloud's brother. The parents approve their engagement and Logan joins the Indian Police. Thunder Cloud is shot returning stolen horses. Starlight cares for him. Thunder Cloud later abducts her. Logan follows and arrests him. A scar on Logan's neck identifies him as his brother. The man Thunder Cloud is supposed to have killed turns up alive. Thunder Cloud marries Starlight.

"The Fighting Sheriff"

Bill Cody's Fourth for Independent Pictures Is Western of Average Entertainment Value

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As his fourth starring vehicle for Independent Pictures Corporation, Bill Cody is being offered in "The Fighting Sheriff" with a story that succeeds in getting somewhat away from the usual run of Westerns.

There is plenty of action of the familiar type and no dearth of hard riding and fighting, but for most of the action, the star gets the little end of the game, from the heroic angle. He fails to capture the bandit gang, is knocked out and loses his memory, is accused of theft of platinum entrusted to his care and deprived of his place as sheriff. He comes into his own, however, with glowing colors by getting proof that the very man who took his place as sheriff is the bandit leader, and of course has an opportunity to rescue the heroine from this man's clutches.

The action is not always consistent and considerable use has been made of the true and tried melodramatic device of papers which furnish the bone of contention and prove the guilt of the villain. This time they are in the form of a letter addressed to the governor of the state, and the attempt to secure these documents involve the robbing of the U. S. mails, although the criminal feature of this act is not followed up, which in itself would be sufficient to jail the villain and his accomplices.

There is no dearth of action and Bill Cody is kept busy most of the time, with opportunities for stunts and chances to show his prowess as fighter and rider. Altogether it is an average western with sufficient snap, despite its inconsistencies, to get by with patrons who like productions of this type.

Cast

Madge Blair.....Hazel Holt

Length, 5,000 feet.

Story

A gang known as the Wolves attempt to rob a pack train loaded with platinum but are routed by Larry O'Donnell, the fighting sheriff, who stores the metal in his office for safekeeping. The gang through a ruse overpower Larry and get the platinum and in the chase Larry is knocked out and takes several months to recover. In the meantime Jeff Bains, the real leader of the gang, has declared Larry guilty and had himself made sheriff. Larry finally regains his memory and finally gets proof of Jeff's guilt and mail it to the governor. Jeff's men rob the mail but fail to get the letter as Madge, the postmistress, has held it and telegraphed the governor. Jeff lures Madge to his home and Larry rescues her. The governor takes action and reappoints Larry as sheriff, ordering Jeff and his men arrested. A deputy handcuffs Madge and Larry together.

"Sleeping Sickness"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

The familiar trio of the single-reel Bullseye Comedies, Neely Edwards, Bert Roach and Alice Howell, appear in their accustomed roles as husband, butler and wife in this issue, which is built on a more than ordinarily clever idea. Hubby stays out all night playing poker and goes to sleep at the breakfast table. Wifie reads about an epidemic of sleeping sickness and immediately believes he has it. Then begins a wild chase to the doctor. Hubby falls into a baby carriage, which rolls down hill and over a cliff. Finally the doctor tells her the truth. Hubby says he wants to be put to sleep. Wifie socks him and accomplishes the deed. An amusing film, one of the best of the series.—C. S. S.

"Rolling Stones"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Universal introduces a new and exceedingly fat comedian, Charles Puffy, in this single-reeler. One judges he would tip the scales very much more than Fatty Arbuckle. He shows good comedy possibilities in this film and his great weight should prove an asset if properly taken advantage of. In this reel he appears as a hobo who rescues a dog from a lake and meets a girl thereby. Posing as a swell, he visits the girl and his bluff is discovered, while the girl is also shown to be a maid masquerading in her mistress' clothes. The situations are familiar and conventional and do not give the new comedian much of an opportunity. The reel, however, should prove of average amusement value for the slapstick fans.—C. S. S.

"White Paper"

(Fox—Varieties—One Reel)

This reel deals with the production of newsprint paper and furnishes many interesting facts regarding this essential and popular commodity. Starting with the cutting down of the trees and their transportation to the mill, the course of the logs is followed, showing how they are cut into bits, "cooked" with sulphite until a pulp is produced which, put through a tremendous machine consisting of a large number of rollers and resembling a giant printing press, ends with the paper coming out in the familiar huge rolls as seen around newspaper offices. Then there are flashes of the newspaper industry.—C. S. S.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Tell It to a Policeman"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this Hal Roach comedy Glenn Tryon and James Finlayson as policemen compete for the hand of Blanche Mehaffey, with Olive Borden, Jack Gavin and numerous brother cops in the background. James is the self-advertising sort of cop who claims enough bravery stripes to supply a regiment of cops, while Glenn is a rookie cop in search of a chance to distinguish himself. The principal complication, of course, concerns the pursuit of desperadoes, and it is funny enough to please a majority of audiences. Preceding it are a good number of gags and wise cracks. One of these shows the two men sitting on a sofa with the girl and eating candy. Glenn surreptitiously substitutes bits of chewing tobacco for chocolates, but his rival turns the box around so that Glenn is the victim of his own joke. The types of characters in this picture are very well chosen and should be the objects of much hilarity, as well as the situations. The chase with which the subject ends is snappy and, while not departing much from other chases, ought to keep an audience amused. The comedy is of average entertainment value.—S. S.

"Papa's Darling"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this two-reel Sunshine Comedy Fox is offering a laugh-getter that should prove amusing to the majority of patrons. The action during the first reel centers in the person of a baby who has just reached the age when he can walk around and get into mischief, and he not only keeps father and mother but a clever little dog busy looking after him. There is considerable human interest and humor in the antics of the little fellow. In the second reel the action and tempo change materially. Most of the comedy grows out of the attempts of a negro porter to get away from a lion that invades the apartment house and chases him all over the place. A lot of the footage covers situations on a ledge high above the street with the negro doing stunts and continually in danger of falling. This part is fast moving slapstick and thrill stuff that holds the attention and proves hilarious entertainment for patrons who like comedies of this kind.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 21

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"The Last of the Hawaiians" shows survivors of the race of the Sandwich Islanders; then comes "Jacksonville, the Gateway City," one of the "Visiting Our Own America" series; then "The Highland Bride," first of an informative series of "Quaint Marriage Customs of All Nations." This last series promises to be particularly interesting. A Scotch wedding is shown complete from the ceremony to the casting of the bride's stocking, which is supposed to augur marriage for the girl who cathes it.—S. S.

"Wild Waves"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Part of this single-reel Cameo Comedy distributed through Educational is based on the familiar situation where two youths without money use various means to secure milk for breakfast and to elude the landlady, who is demanding rent money, but it is enlivened with new gags which add to the amusement. The latter portion, which gives the picture its title, is built around a trip of one of the boys to a seashore resort with his girl and her fat father, who falls in the water. There is a lot of rough and tumble action in which the hero gets thrown from one nerve-racking amusement device to another. It is up to the Cameo standard.—C. S. S.

"Sure Mike"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

In this Hal Roach presentation of the life of a department store salesgirl Martha Sleeper has the principal role; in fact, James Finlayson, Marjorie Whiteis and the others have little to do; and Martha rises to the opportunity and does some splendid comedy work. Her facial expressions are great and her contortions on roller skates as funny as any we have ever seen. Besides tickling the risibilities of every audience this subject will serve to more firmly establish Miss Sleeper as a very clever comedy actress.—S. S.

"Love Sick"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Arthur Lake, who has appeared in a number of Universal's "Sweet Sixteen" comedies, is featured along with Beth Darlington in this Century, which is built along similar lines but is in two reels. The action concerns the attempts of Arthur, aided by a stray dog he adopts, to get rid of other chaps who call on his sweetheart. The dog tears their clothes. Arthur invites one of the youths to smoke a cigar, which proves his finish, after which the lad is locked in a garage and the dog finally ruins his garments. To make Beth jealous Arthur flirts with a vamp, but it does not turn out as he expected. Finally he tries to get hurt by an auto and the ruse works. Beth comes to the hospital and puts her arms around his neck and everything is all right. The action is amusing and rather along a different line from the usual Century comedy, and it should especially please the growing generation as there is a lot of human interest stuff that will strike home to them.—C. S. S.

"Balto's Race to Nome"

(Educational—Special—Two Reels)

One of the most thrilling and courageous exploits of history, the race of Gunnar Kasson with his dog team, led by the wonderful Siberian dog, Balto, has been reproduced by Sol Lesser. Both Kasson and Balto appear in this film and as far as possible the exact conditions have been duplicated, the only difference being that trees are seen in a number of backgrounds, while there are none in the Nome country. An introduction which brings out interesting facts about Nome and the immense size of Alaska will be new to most people. Kasson is then shown receiving the message and starting out on the famous sixty-mile lap of the journey to carry precious anti-toxin to the stricken city. The interest is well sustained and the dramatic points brought out: the trip in a blinding blizzard, the loss of the previous cargo which Balto's instinct made possible to recover; how Kasson was thrown from the sled and caught up with it by a long slide over the ice, and finally the climax where, overcome by the cold, he was ready to give up the fight after being lost until he realized his dogs were still able to go on and this gave him renewed courage. Altogether it is an unusual, inspiring and thrilling film and coupled with the great amount of newspaper publicity should prove an excellent attraction.—C. S. S.

"Echoes from the Alps"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

In this Aesop's Film Fable Cartoonist Paul Terry, evidently anticipating summer weather, places his funny characters in the Alps and has them go through astounding experiences amid the peaks and precipices. Farmer Alfalfa and the animals have a tough time of it.—S. S.

First National in Revised List Announces Fifty-Seven Productions for Next Season

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES will release a total of fifty-seven pictures for the year beginning September 1, 1925, according to a revision of the production schedule made by R. A. Rowland, general manager of production. Fifty-two of these pictures will be in the group of releases known as the Winner group; the remaining five will be produced and marketed as specials.

The specials include "The Lost World," a First National-Watterson R. Rothacker production of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's novel.

"Winds of Chance," Frank Lloyd's production based upon Rex Beach's novel of Alaska, upon which he has been engaged for two or three months.

"The Viennese Medley," a June Mathis production from the novel of Vienna during and since the war, by Edith O'Shaughnessy.

"Men of Steel," starring Milton Sills, from R. G. Kirk's story, "United States Flavor." Earl Hudson will supervise the production.

"Quo Vadis," the new screen version of Henry ienkiewicz's great novel.

Thirty-eight of the group of 52 Winner releases are named in Mr. Rowland's revised list of productions scheduled. They are:

"The Half-Way Girl," from Lloyd Sheldon's story, with Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes featured, supervised by Earl Hudson. John Francis Dillon directs.

"The Come-Back," from M. D. C. Crawford's new novel, starring Milton Sills. Hudson will supervise. Lambert Hillyer will direct.

"Graustark," a new and modernized screen version of George Barr McCutcheon's novel, made by Jos. M. Schenck, starring Norma Talmadge. Directed by Dimitri Buchowetski.

"Shore Leave," from Hubert Osborne's stage play, made by Inspiration Pictures, directed by John S. Robertson, starring Richard Barthelmess.

"Classified," from Edna Ferber's short story, with Corinne Griffith in the stellar role.

"The Pace That Thrills," from a story by Byron Morgan. Ben Lyon and Mary Astor will be featured.

"The Dark Angel," from H. B. Trevelyan's play. Produced by Samuel Goldwyn and George Fitzmaurice, featuring Ronald Colman.

"Flora Finds a Gentleman," from a story by Elise Jean Jerard, in which Sawyer-Lubin will feature Barbara La Marr.

"The Unguarded Hour," from Margaretta Tuttle's new novel.

"The Sea Woman," by Willard Robinson. An Edwin Carewe production.

"The Splendid Road," a Frank Lloyd production from Vingie E. Roe's new novel.

"We Moderns," from Israel Zangwill's play, starring Colleen Moore.

"The Scarlet Saint," from a short story by Gerald Beaumont. Mary Astor will be the featured player.

"The Dangerous Mrs. Denham," by Violet Elsie Powell. This will be a M. C. Levee production.

"The Man She Bought," by Pearl Doles Bell. A Constance Talmadge picture produced by Joseph M. Schenck.

"Invisible Wounds," by Frederick Palmer. The first of four Robert Kane productions to be made for First National release.

"Forever After," from Owen Davis' play. A starring vehicle for Corinne Griffith.

"The Waning Sex," by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. A John M. Stahl production.

"Clarissa and the Post Road," a stellar vehicle for Colleen Moore from Grace Sartwell Mason's short story.

"A Husband for George-Anne," another Colleen Moore starring vehicle, from a story by Hazel Christie MacDonald.

"Don Juan's Three Nights," also for Colleen Moore, from Ludwig Biro's novel.

"Irene," another Colleen Moore picture, from James Montgomery's musical comedy.

"Paradise," a June Mathis production from the novel by Cosmo Hamilton.

"Nazareth," a June Mathis production, from the story by Clarence Budington Kelland.

"Bed and Board," from the story by Lenore Coffee. Mary Astor will have the featured role.

"The Savage," by Ernest Pascal. An Earl Hudson production.

"Out of the Ruins," a Frank Lloyd production from the story by Sir Philip Gibbs.

"The Rose of Monterey," another Frank Lloyd production from the story by Minna E. Smith and Eugenia Woodward.

"Heirs Apparent," an Edwin Carewe production from the novel by Sir Philip Gibbs.

"The Boss of Little Arcady," by Harry Leon Wilson. An all-star production.

"Joseph Greer and His Daughter," an all star production from the novel by Henry Kitchell Webster.

"The Far Cry," from Arthur Richman's play.

"The Just Steward," by Richard Dehan.

"Sailors' Wives," by Warner Fabian.

"Puppets," from Frances Lightner's play.

"The Tidal Wave," by Hutcheson Boyd.

"The Hat of Destiny," by Mrs. T. P. O'Connor.

"Isles of Romance," by Richard Connell.

Spectacles Planned

Novel Scenes to be Staged for "The Coming fo Amos," With Rod La Rocque

Two splashy spectacles designed to tickle the optic nerves of theatre-goers who see "The Coming of Amos," starring Rod La Rocque, have been planned by Cecil B. De Mille. Both of these big scenes will be laid in Cannes, France, and will display the wealth and sophistication of this famous watering-place of the idle rich.

The first spectacle will be a scene in the Cannes Casino, equalling Monte Carlo in the fame of its gambling tables. The second will be the annual "Festival of Fowers," which yearly lures the leisure class to Southern France. Each season a distinctive color scheme is adopted, which every person who attends must carry out in his costume. Striking black and white will be the motif used by Director Paul Sloane to portray this festival in "The Coming of Amos." Production of this picture, in which Jetta Goudal will play opposite the star, will start about the middle of May.

"Lost World" Opens in New Haven

The picture going public of New Haven had an exceptional treat for Mothers' Day in the opportunity to see First National's novelty special, "The Lost World," which opened at the Hyperion Theatre on May 10. That picture patrons in that city appreciated the chance to see this production was proved by the packed house at the opening and the tremendous business which it has since been drawing.

Louis Stone, Percy Marmount, Raymond Griffith, Alma Rubens and Eileen Percy in "Fine Clothes," a First National picture.

Loew Gives Details of "Quality 52," Metro Productions for Coming Season

By MARCUS LOEW
President Metro-Goldwyn.

FOLLOWING our announcement that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer would make fifty-two pictures for the season of 1925-26, "The Quality 52" as the trade refers to them, I want to give you some specific information as to just what these productions will be, who will make them and who will play in them.

The stars and featured players that we have under exclusive contract and who will appear in "The Quality 52" include Lillian Gish, Norma Shearer, John Gilbert, Buster Keaton, Marion Davies, Ramon Novarro, Lon Chaney, Mae Murray, Eleanor Boardman, Aileen Pringle, Pauline Starke, Claire Windsor, Conway Tearle, Gertrude Olmsted, William Haines, Conrad Nagel, Mae Busch, Carmel Myers, Lew Cody, Renee Adoree, ZaSu Pitts, Sally O'Neill and many others.

The directors who will make our next seasons product are Rex Ingram, Fred Niblo, Victor Seastrom, Tod Browning, Hobart Henley, King Vidor, Robert Z. Leonard, Rupert Hughes, Monta Bell, Alf Goulding, Edmund Goulding, Jack Conway, Josef von Sternberg, Benjamin Christianson, W. Christy Cabanne, William Wellman, Al Roboch, Marcel de Sano and Elinor Glyn.

Louis B. Mayer and his associates, Irving G. Thalberg and Harry Rapf, will have charge of all production and I know will not only live up to past performances but very materially increase their standing and prestige as the leading production executives of all time.

"Mare Nostrum," the Rex Ingram production from the novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, will be one of our 1925-26 productions. Alice Terry and Antonio Moreno play the leading roles. Although the picture has great panoramic sweep and tremendous battle scenes it is primarily a human document with the action centered on the conflict and love affairs of the principal characters.

"The Merry Widow" and what a title that is for the box office, will be another of our productions. Von Stroheim made it from Henry W. Savage's famous stage success and John Gilbert and Mae Murray play the leading parts. There are some remarkable Technicolor shots in this film that will make an audience gasp.

"Bardelys The Magnificent," by Rafael Sabatini, author of "Scaramouche" and "The Sea Hawk," will be on our schedule. King Vidor will direct and John Gilbert and Claire Windsor are the leading players. The entire production will be done in Technicolor. It is a powerful love story and is a big production in every meaning of the term.

"The Big Parade," by Laurence Stallings co-author of Broadway's greatest success "What Price Glory?," will be directed by King Vidor and have John Gilbert as the star with Renee Adoree and others to be selected in the principal roles. Gilbert, one of the biggest drawing cards on the screen today, has a great part in this picture.

"The Flesh and the Devil" is a Victor Seastrom-John Gilbert Special. It is by Herman Suderman. It will be directed by Seastrom, the man who made "He Who Gets Slapped" and I don't know what better recommendation there is than that.

MARCUS LOEW

There will also be one other John Gilbert production, title and details of which we will announce later.

"Romola," Henry King's production of George Eliot's immortal story with Lillian Gish in the stellar role and Dorothy Gish featured, is a most important unit on our schedule. It ran for sixteen weeks as a legitimate on Broadway and had equally successful runs in other large cities.

There will be two other Lillian Gish productions. The vehicles are now being considered and they will be on a par with all her previous successes, I can assure you. Miss Gish will be even bigger than ever and all of her productions will now be made at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City.

"The Tower of Lies," by Selma Lagerlof, will be a Victor Seastrom production with Norma Shearer, Lon Chaney, Claire McDowell, William Haines and Ian Keith in the cast. Mr. Mayer tells me that this will be one of the greatest pictures the studio has ever turned out.

"The Unholy Three" I have already seen and it is a most remarkable picture with Lon Chaney in a most unusual characterization, even for him. It is a deeply absorbing story of the underworld. Mae Busch and Matt Moore appear in the cast and the direction was handled by Tod Browning.

"The Span of Life," Sutton Vane's great melodrama, will be made into a motion picture and released by us next season. Lon Chaney is the star with Pauline Starke and William Haines in leading parts. Jack Conway is making this picture. Remember the human bridge in the stage play? Well in the picture you'll see one person linked to another across a hundred foot canyon.

There will be one other Lon Chaney production on our 1925-26 schedule, the title and details to be anounced later.

An untitled Norma Shearer picture directed by Hobart Henley and with Lew Cody, William Haines and Mary Carr in the cast, will also be released. It is a story by Samuel Shipman. It will be Miss Shearer's first big starring vehicle for the new season.

In addition to the Shipman story Norma Shearer will be starred in three other productions during 1925-26.

"The Auction Block," the famous Rex Beach story, will star Norma Shearer as an added attraction, and that certainly is a winning combination, providing one of the many outstanding features on our schedule.

"The Barrier," another of Rex Beach's wonderful stories will be still another box office attraction from Metro-Goldwyn. It will have a great cast and a great star.

"Paris," an original story by Carey Wilson, directed by Robert Z. Leonard with Pauline Starke and Lew Cody playing the leading roles. This will be the first picture for which Erte, famous designer, contributed his skill in the designing of women's costumes.

"Monte Carlo," will be a follow up on "Paris" but with Erte fashion creations in Technicolor and it will have a specially selected cast.

"Sun-Up,' from the stage success by Lula Vollmer is to be directed by Edmund Goulding and the cast will include Conrad Nagel, Pauline Starke and Lucille LaVerne.

Ramon Novarro will first be seen in a story of The United States Naval Academy and he will have the cooperation of the Government in making the picture. William Christy Cabanne will direct. In addition there will be two other Ramon Novarro pictures on our 1925-26 schedule.

"The Circle," from Somerset Maugham's play, will be directed by Frank Borzage with Eleanor Boardman and Malcolm McGregor in the leading parts. The play ran for two seasons on Broadway.

"Pretty Ladies" is a Monta Bell production in which ZaSu Pitts, Tom Moore and Lilyan Tashman will be seen. It is by Adela Rogers St. Johns and I am told it will present more beautiful women than any production heretofore made.

"Time, the Comedian," with Mae Busch, Lew Cody and Gertrude Olmsted, and directed by Robert Z. Leonard, is also on our schedule. It is by Kate Jordan.

"Sally, Irene and Mary," a Hobart Henley production, has Eleanor Boardman, Sally O'Neill, Renee Adoree and William Haines in the cast. It is Eddie Dowling's great Broadway stage success.

"The Exquisite Sinner," adapted from "Escape," by Alden Brooks, will be directed by Josef von Sternberg, and I am sure will prove the surprise of the year. Conrad Nagel and Renee Adoree will head the cast.

"Never the Twain Shall Meet," Peter B. Kyne's greatest story, is to be directed by Maurice Tourneur and has Anita Stewart and Bert Lytell heading an all-star cast. It is a Cosmopolitan production. The story is laid in California and the South Seas.

THREE HEADS OF METRO-GOLDWYN'S PRODUCTION FORCES

"Merry Wives of Gotham" is a Marion Davies picture produced by Cosmopolitan and directed by Monta Bell. It is an adaptation of the famous stage play and Miss Davies has a role similar to the one she played in "Little Old New York."

"Buddies" is another Marion Davies feature. This is also from a very popular stage play by George Hobart which ran for a year and a half on Broadway.

"The Temptress," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez is considered the prize screen vehicle of the year. It will be a Cosmopolitan Production by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios and will present a distinguished cast.

"The Torrent" by Ibanez will have Aileen Pringle in the leading role and this also will be a Cosmopolitan Production made at our studios. It will be big in every way

There will be one Fred Niblo production on our schedule. Details of this picture have not been completed as yet and will be announced later.

"Brown of Harvard," Rida Johnson Young's great popular play of college life will have Conrad Nagel and Eleanor Boardman in the leading roles.

"Dance Madness," by S. J. Kaufman, will feature Aileen Pringle and Lew Cody. It is the story of a romantic love affair.

"The Reason Why" is an Elinor Glyn production. Jack Conway will direct it and Aileen Pringle and Conway Tearle will be seen in the leading roles.

"Money Talks," a Rupert Hughes production will be directed by Alf Goulding with Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel featured.

"How Dare You" will be another Rupert Hughes Production on our next season schedule.

"An Exchange of Wives" by Cosmo Hamilton and adapted from the stage success will be directed by Hobart Henley with Eleanor Boardman, Lew Cody, William Haines and Renee Adoree.

"Lovey Mary," the classic by Alice Hegan Rice, will be directed by King Vidor with Sally O'Neill the featured player.

"The Mysterious Island" by Jules Verne will have undersea scenes by the famous Williamson process and many sequences will be in Technicolor.

"A Little Bit of Broadway," from the novel by Richard Connell, the story of a girl and the white lights, will be on our schedule.

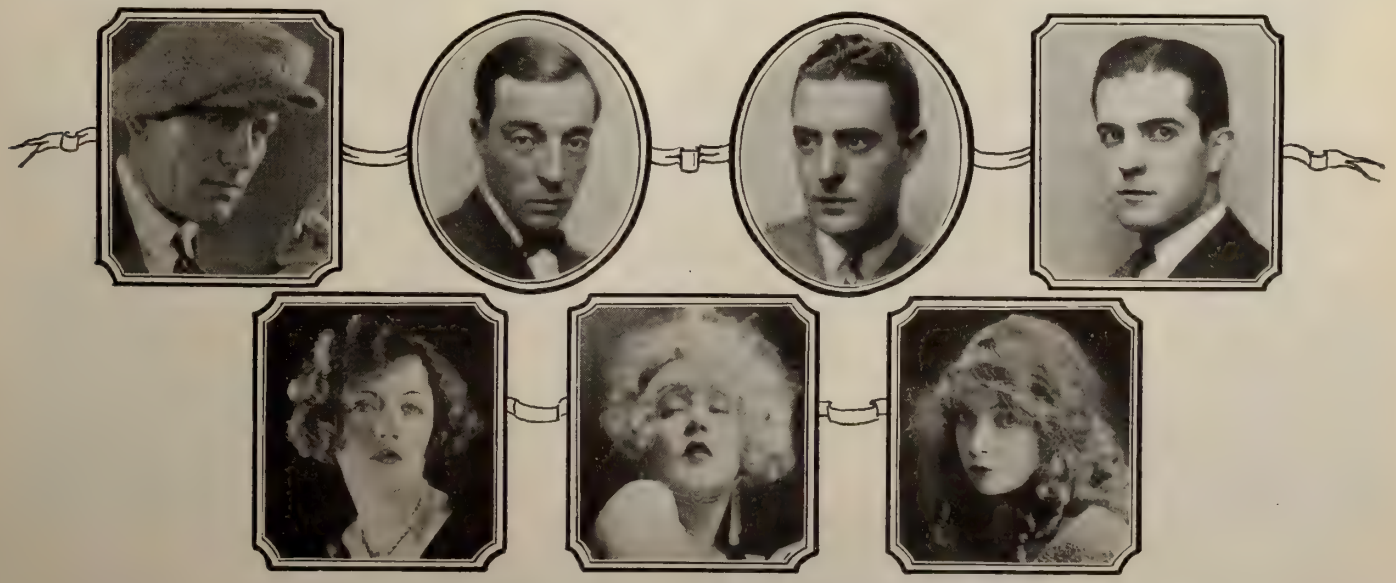
"Women and Wives," by Harvey Ferguson and one of the best sellers of current fiction, will have Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel featured.

There will be two Mae Murray productions on our 1925-26 list. They will be bigger, better and greater than any Miss Murray has done heretofore.

These will constitute our productions for the new season. It is quite the most pretentious schedule ever mapped out by us and I am confident that 1925-26 will see Metro-Goldwyn far outdistance the remarkable record we made last season.

Big Loew Booking

Following closely upon the Pathe announcement that "Black Cyclone," the Hal Roach feature, will have its world premiere at the Capitol Theatre, New York, comes word that this production starring Rex, the Wild Horse, has received 120 days' booking on the Loew Circuit to follow immediately after its engagement at the big Broadway cinema theatre.



BRIGHT STARS IN THE METRO-GOLDWYN FIRMAMENT

They are Lon Chaney, Buster Keaton, John Gilbert, Ramon Novarro, Marion Davies, Mae Murray and Lillian Gish.

Boston Gives Mayer Big Reception on Visit

PROBABLY no prominent citizen returning to his old home town was ever accorded a bigger or more enthusiastic reception than that tendered Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, on his return to Boston last week.

It was in the New England city that Mr. Mayer first entered the motion picture business where he was an exhibitor for a number of years and a partner of Nathan Gordon. As a matter of fact it was Mr. Gordon who first induced Mr. Mayer to give up the exhibiting end of the business and devote himself to production and it was a triumphant return to the filed of his first success that the production head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer made last week.

Welcome Home Dinner to Louis B. Mayer at Copley-Plaza, Boston.

Learning that Mr. Mayer intended to pay a visit to Boston during his stay in the East, his friends in New England immediately took steps to assure him of their deep regard and affection. After it was all over there could be little doubt in Mr. Mayer's mind of his standing and popularity among his old friends and many new ones.

On his arrival at the station Mr. Mayer, who was accompanied by Mrs. Mayer and his two daughters the Misses Edith and Irene, were met by a brass band and a crowd of his friends to say nothing of a special police escort and a fleet of automobiles. As he stepped from the train a gigantic floral horseshoe bearing the inscription, "Welcome Home, Louis B. Mayer," was presented to him, and with the band playing, "Hail to the Chief," the parade to the Copley-Plaza Hotel started with Mr. Mayer and his former partner Nathan Gordon, heading the procession.

It was nothing less than a triumphal parade. Every car in the procession, which was headed by an escort of motorcycle police, carried banners reading, "Welcome Home."

The following day an elaborate luncheon was tendered Mr. Mayer at the Copley-Plaza at which several hundred prominent exhibitors, exchange men, city officials and members of the press attended. Among the speakers were Nathan Gordon, head of the Gordon chain of theatres; M. D. Flattery of the Loew organization; John Casey, censor and representing Mayor Curley who was absent from the city on business; Thomas B. Sprye, manager of the local First National Exchange and for many years closely associated with Mr. Mayer; Al Rosebush, of Gordon's and an old friend of Mr. Mayer's; Jake Lowrie, well known New England exhibitor and M. N. Wolf, manager of the Metro-Goldwyn Boston exchange.

All of the speakers paid high tribute to Mr. Mayer, the pictures that he has produced and his unimpeachable standing in the industry.

On being introduced Mr. Mayer, in his speech, told of many of his earlier experi-

Feist Puts Over Big Booking Deals for Metro

FELIX FEIST, general sales manager for Metro-Goldwyn, is closing up contracts for next seasons product just about as fast as he can make calls on exhibitors. It is literally a fact that theatre owners can hardly wait until Mr. Feist's arrival to book the Metro-Goldwyn output. They know what is to be expected from Metro-Goldwyn and are particularly anxious to get aboard the band wagon.

With Joseph Friedman, of the Towner Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., Mr. Feist closed a remarkable contract last week. By it the entire Metro-Goldwyn product for 1925-26 will be played first run at the Tower. This is probably the first contract made for next season by any organization that calls for the entire output.

In addition to closing with Mr. Friedman a deal was closed by Mr. Feist with Barney Zeitz, who operates the State Theatre in New Bedford, Mass., whereby Metro-Goldwyn product will be played first run at that theatre for a number of years.

Both the Tower Theatre of St. Paul and that State of New Bedford are representative houses in their respective cities and the transaction represents a most substantial figure.

These, and other similar contracts that are now in the making, stand as proof conclusive of the high esteem in which Metro-Goldwyn product is held by the theatre owners and the confidence placed in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announcement for the coming season.

Metro-Goldwyn Trackless Train on Tour

THE Metro-Goldwyn Trackless Train, left New York last Thursday morning on the first lap of a journey that will take it to Los Angeles, with stop overs at all of the key cities enroute.

Marcus Loew, Nicholas M. Schenck, Major Edward Bowes and other officials of Metro-Goldwyn were on hand at the Capitol Theatre to see the famous train off, and the crowds that gathered to look this remarkable outfit over were even greater than on its first appearance in the streets of New York when Mayor Hylan and other city officials greeted it at City Hall and it completely tied up traffic in the Times Square District.

From New York Metro-Goldwyn's Trackless Train will go to Boston and cover all of the important cities of New England boosting Metro-Goldwyn's "Quality 52" pictures for the 1925-26 season. It is expected to reach Los Angeles around September.

Eddie Carrier, who goes with the train, and is well known in the exploitation field, will be in charge of the remarkable ballyhoo. Edward McIver is the sales representative with the outfit and Buddy Hooton is in advance. Hooton, by the way, is circusing the arrival of the Trackless Train in a specially constructed auto that carries, among other eye catching devices, a radio broadcasting outfit.

He paid very high tribute to Irving G. Thalberg and Harry Rapf, his studio executives, saying that no one could help but produce good pictures with such capable lieutenants.

In speaking of the artistic side of pictures, Mr. Mayer said, "On my last trip to Europe I made up my mind we were going to do something new in pictures. I do not think you can thrill an audience today with scenery but to me a beautiful woman in beautiful clothes is just about as attractive a thing as the Lord ever gave us. With that in mind I got Erte, famous French designer, who is now at our studios designing costumes for our players."

Mr. Mayer expressed himself as one hundred per cent satisfied with "Ben Hur."

Tom Mix Visits Milwaukee For Convention, On U. S. Tour

EXHIBITORS who are in the line of march of the touring Tom Mix party and who were farsighted enough to book some of the Western star's pictures are reporting astounding jumps in their box office receipts as the result of the publicity the personal appearances have engendered.

In Boston, Mix's first stop on his domestic tour, the newspapers gave him a great reception. Every paper in the Hub carried pictures of him presenting Mayor Curley with one of his two-gallon Stetsons.

Boston and Montreal

As a result, the Keith Boston Theatre, where the Mix starring vehicle, "Dick Turpin" was playing a first run engagement, went over the top in an astounding manner.

The same thing happened at Loew's Theatre in Montreal, where the star went from Boston. Loew's was playing "Riders of the Purple Sage."

Toronto exhibitors had been on the job and were all prepared for Mix's visit to their city. Every print of a Mix picture available at the Toronto exchange was out and reaping the advantages created by the splendid publicity his visit to the Ontario city received.

From Toronto the Mix party jumped to Milwaukee to attend the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners. Mix's appearance at the convention is a day that will be long remembered. Never before have exhibitors let loose such an avalanche of enthusiasm as they did when the Fox star made his appearance among them.

It was ample evidence of their gratitude to him and showed they truly appreciated the value of the actor on whom they have conferred the uneuphonious but descriptive title, "The Rent Man."

Talks to Exhibitors

Mix arrived in Milwaukee on Thursday and did not leave until Friday noon, the longest stop on the American itinerary. During that time he met every exhibitor and official attending the gigantic meeting. His coming was a tonic and left the men who buy the pictures in a happy frame of mind.

His talks to them revealed that he is one of the best business men in the industry as well as the most popular star.

He made a wonderful impression on the motion picture showmen. To find such a level head in an actor was something they did not expect. In Mix, however, they saw a man they would hate to have working as opposition across the street, and he let them in on some valuable showmanship "dope." Incidentally, "Dick Turpin," playing at the Rialto in Milwaukee, set some marks for the future to shoot at.

From the convention city Mix jumped to Chicago. Althugh his stay was only of very short duration, nine hours, he managed to break into the first page of almost every paper in the Windy City.

On to Detroit

Detroit was the next stop. In the auto city a Mix picture playing at the Fox Washington Theatre the week before Mix was scheduled to make his appearance in that city went on a rampage and left a box office record that is seldom duplicated. This was the result of the advance publicity the coming of the Western star brought out. An army of advance men followed one another into the city to plant excellent advance stories, pictures of his European trip and the announcement of his coming to Detroit.

This publicity campaign precedes Mix into every city, and already its effects are being felt in the Fox exchanges. Every exchange in the territories through which the Fox star will pass is reporting exceptional demands for his pictures. This demand is not confined to the cities Mix will actually visit but also includes the suburbs and outlying towns through which the papers heralding his visit circulate. It is hoped by the time Mix gets to Omaha that every theatre in the vicinity will have a Mix picture booked. It would be a fitting tribute to this actor who means so much and who will mean so much more to the exhibitors of the country.

Fox Expedition To Columbia Encounters Many Handicaps

ORDINARY scenic beauty has become a common-place of the screen. Nature must now put her best foot and ankle forward to excite more than a mild interest in the habitual theatre-goer. But some genuine thrills are provided by the sheer beauty of two Fox Varieties pictures filmed in what the National Geographic Magazine describes as a region of "unearthly loveliness" in the remote Canadian Rockies. These pictures are "Where the Waters Divide," now current, and "Toiling for Rest," soon to be added to the William Fox release schedule. Both are jewels of the photographic art.

Lewis R. Freeman, author of the National Geographic Magazine article, tells how he was invited last summer by Byron Harmon, Fox field photographer, to accompany him in a photographic invasion of the great Columbia Ice Field, a virgin field for the camera. Mr. Freeman, an explorer of note and himself an expert still photographer, gladly accepted the chance to share the perils and hardships of the expedition. He got plenty of both.

The project had its peculiar appeal to each man. The wild and wonderful region, known as the Columbia Ice Field, is the only region on earth whose waters drain into three oceans —the Pacific, the Arctic and the Atlantic—a situation to tempt any explorer. Harmon, who had spent a life-time in photographing the beauties of mountain, lake and cataract, had heard tales from an occasional trapper or Indian that led him to believe that the region was probably the finest scenically in America. He was saving it up for the crowning achievement of his 20 years of picture-making. He did well, for in this land of tall peaks and glacier-choked valleys, he found, says Mr. Freeman, "the most striking Alpine scenery of the Western Hemisphere."

Expedition Carefully Planned

The expedition started from Lake Louise on August 15 with a 16-horse pack-train and four guides, headed by the redoubtable Mr. "Soapy" Smith. Except in midsummer the region is impenetrable as the secrets of Mt. Everest. Even then, many passes and valleys were deep in snow before they emerged 10 weeks later. The horses, picked long in advance, had been kept off the trail all summer to lay up stamina for the punishing work ahead. This proved fortunate, for the snows came early and long weeks of semi-starvation and floundering through drifts taxed both horses and men to the limit of their powers.

There were swift, icy rivers to ford, treacherous bogs to traverse. A most dangerous part of the journey was across the Saskatchewan Glacier, a huge arm of the Ice Field, broken with yawning crevasses. Here the horses were roped together in bunches of four, like so many Alpine climbers, and the unprecedented feat was accomplished without fatal mishap. La Casse, the cook, disappeared into a snow-masked crevasse, but was so lucky as to catch a projecting ledge and continue on alive. Anyhow the cook didn't care so much what happened, for all his sugar and salt had been lost a few days before when a pack-horse was upset, rolled under and swept for some distance down stream while fording the Mistaya.

Excellent Photography

But the photographic results fully repaid for everything. One series of photographs alone, those of Mt. Columbia, were worth the whole cost and risk of the expedition. It took eight days to get them, during which time Harmon, his battery of cameras planted, waited patiently for a blizzard to blow itself out and the clouds to lift. At last, just as they had saddled to move on, came 40 minutes of sunshine, and perfect pictures were obtained of what Freeman pronounces "the most beautiful peak of the whole North American Rockies system."

There wasn't a man in the expedition whose life was not more than once in imminent peril. Horses were repeatedly bogged under or caught in slides. But the party returned safely to Banff without an animal lost or even permanently lamed after "the roughest continuous pack-train journey made in the Rockies in recent years. A notable achievement for our packers," allows Mr. Freeman.

"Lightnin'" Heads Fox Release List for Next Season, Set for August

"LIGHTIN" will head the release schedule of Fox for 1925-26, according to an official announcement made by that company. The John Goldon record-breaking stage success will be released for distribution August 23.

Recently completed under the direction of John Ford with an exceptional and carefully selected cast, headed by Jay Hunt in the title role, the screen version of "Lightin" should prove worthy of the honr of its No. 1 place on the schedule.

With Madge Bollamy and Wallace MacDonald in the leading juvenile roles of Millie and Jhn Marvin,, J. Farrell MacDonald as Judge Townsend, Ethel Clayton as Margaret Davis, Richard Travers as Raymond Thomas, James Marcus as the Sheriff, Otis Harlan as Zeb, friend of Lightin'; Peter Mazutis as Oscar, the Swede lumberjack; Edythe Chapman as Mother Jones and Brandon Hurst as Hammond, the cast in the film version is well worthy to compare with highly talented cast which appeared in the original stage production with Frank Bacon. "Lightin" was prepared for the screen by Frances Marion.

Second on the Fox program for the coming season is a Tom Mix starring vehicle, "The Everlasting Whisper," and adaptation from a story by Jackson Gregory of the same name. This picture was completed by Mix before he started on his European tour and was directed by I. G. Blystone. Alice Calhoun plays the leading feminine role opposite Mix, with Robert Cain as the 'heavy." Others in the cast are George Berrell, Walter James, Virginia Madison and Karl Dane. August 30 is the release date of "The Everlasting Whisper."

Another John Ford production, "Kentucky Pride," a Fox supreme attraction, is placed third on the schedule to be released Sept. 6. "Kentucky Pride" is a throbbing story of hrses and men with many of its sequences in the Blue Grass region. Henry Walthall has the leading part in the production and Gertrude Astor has the most important feminine role. There is no heroine, Miss Astor's part calling for villainy throughout. She is assisted by Malcolm Waite. The leading character role falls to J. Farrell MacDonald. Belle Stoddard, Winston Miller and Peaches Jackson make up the remainder of the cast.

"As No Man Has Loved," Rowland V. Lee's remarkable adaptation of Edward Everett Hale's immrtal classic, "The Man Without a Country," will be released to exhibitors on Sept. 13. This picture needs no further introduction to the trade. Its Broadway run established it as a sure-fire box office success.

Winchell Smith's "The Wheel," another of the Golden Unit, and the first picture to be directed for Fox by Victor Schertzinger, will be released Sept. 20. Harrison Ford and Claire Adams have the leading roles in this production. Others in the cast are Mahlon Hamilton, Georgie Harris, Clara Horton, Margaret Livingston, David Terrence, Erin La Bissionore, Russ Powell and Hazel Howell.

The remaining September releases are "The Desert Valley, a Buck Jones starring vehicle, and "Lazybones," an adaptation of Owen Davis' stage success. By an odd coincidence "Lazybones" has Buck in the title role.

The Fox October releases are headed by "The Iron Horse," the John Ford opci production which ran for a year at the Lyric Theatre in New York; broke all sorts of records at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Los Angeles and had a successful run at Woods Theatre in Chicago. Oct. 4 is "The Ihon Horse" release date.

"The First Year," another of the John Golden Unit, and Tom Mix in "The Lucky Hrseshoe," Oct. 11; "The Winding Stair," Oct. 18, and "When the Door Opened," Oct. 25, are the other October releases on the Fox schedule.

Seven pictures will be released by Fox during the month of November and amng those are some of the most ambitious on the schedule. "The Fool," which will be released on Nov. 15, is the most important of these. This adaptation of Channing Pollock's great stage success is another proven box office attraction. It is now entering its third month at the Central Theatre.

Other November releases are "The Fighting Heart," a John Ford production starring George O'Brien, Nov. 1; Buck Jones in "The Timber Wolf," Nov. 1; "Thank You," another of the John Golden Unit, Nov. 8; the first Peter B. Kyne story, Nov. 22; Tom Mix in "The Best Bad Man," Nov. 22, and "Havoc," a Rowland V. Lee production from the international stage success, Nov. 29.

For December Fox will release five excellent production. "The Dixie Merchant," with Dec. 6th as its release date, will be the initial release for the last month of 1925. It will be followed by "East Lynne," and Buck Jones in "Man Four Square," on Dec. 13; "Thunder Mountain," an adaptation of John Golden's stage success, "Howdy Folks," Dec. 20, and "The Ancient Mariner," which will be the special Christmas week release.

The first month of the new year will see seven Fox productions released. "Siberia," an adaptation of the celebrated old stage success of the same name, will be the first of the New Year's releases with Jan. 3rd as the date. This production will be followed on Jan. 10 by "The Silver Treasure," from Joseph Conrad's popular novel, "Nostromo," and Tom Mix in "The Love Fixer." Peter B. Kyne's second story will be released as a picture on Jan. 17, with H. G. Wells' "Marriage" following it on Jan 24. On Jan. 31 Fox will release "Dangers of a Great City" and Buck Jones in "The Desert's Price."
